I. Definition, Origin and Purpose.

A. Definition.—A bill of exceptions is a mode of placing the law of the case on the record, which is to be brought before the appellate court by a writ of error.[1]

B. Origin.—At common law, a writ of error lay for error in law, apparent on the record, but not for an error in law, not apparent on the record. If a party alleged any matter of law at the trial, and was overruled by the judge, he was without redress, the error not appearing on the record.[2] To remedy this

2. Right to bill not derived from common law.—Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 199, 8 L. Ed. 92, citing 2 Inst. 42.

Practice before the statute of Westminster.—"Party aggrieved might, before the enactment of the statute of Westminster, sue out writ of error to correct an error in law apparent on the record, or for an error of fact, where either party had died before judgment; but the writ would not lie for an error in law not apparent on the record, as for a refusal to instruct the jury as requested, or for an erroneous instruction given, or for an erroneous ruling in admitting or rejecting evidence. Consequently, where either party alleged anything ore tenus, which was overruled by the court, the party was without remedy; because, being an error in law, and not apparent in the record, the appellate tribunal could not take judicial knowledge of the proceeding. Statute under consideration was passed to obviate that difficulty, and to prevent the injustice flowing from it, and throughout the long period it has continued in force, it has ever been regarded as an eminently just and highly beneficial regulation." Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 599, 17 L. Ed. 638.

injustice the bill of exceptions was given to us by Westminster 2, 13 Edw. I.[3]

The only regulation made by congress as to bills of exceptions is that contained in § 953 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that they shall be sufficiently authenticated by the signature of the presiding judge, without any seal.[4]

C. Purpose or Office of Bill—1. IN GENERAL.—Bills of exceptions are required, in order that the matters to which they relate may be made a part of the record, and that it may appear that the questions involved were raised in the subordinate court.[5] But the bill should only present the rulings of the court upon some matter of law,[6] either in admitting or excluding evidence, or

To remedy this evil, the statute was passed, which gives the bill of exceptions. It is to correct an error in law. Blackstone, speaking of this subject, says: "And if either in his directions or decisions, he (the judge) mistakes the law, by ignorance, inadvertence or design, the counsel on either side may require him publicly to seal a bill of exceptions, stating the point wherein he is supposed to err." "This bill of exceptions is in the nature of an appeal." 2 Bl. Com. 372; Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 199, 8 L. Ed. 92.

Early practice under the statute of Westminster.—Evidence is to be given in open court, in the presence of the parties, their attorneys, the counsel, and all bystanders, and before the judge and jury; each party having liberty to except to its competency, which exceptions are publicly stated, and by the judge are openly and publicly allowed or disallowed, in the face of the country; which must curb any secret bias or partiality that might arise in his own breast. If, either in his directions or decisions, he misstates the law, by ignorance, inadvertence or design, the counsel on either side may require him, publicly, to seal a bill of exceptions, stating the point wherein he is supposed to err. 3 Blackstone 372; Buller 310. It has been frequently held by the federal supreme court, that in passing upon the questions presented in a bill of exceptions, it will not look beyond the bill itself. 6. Questions of law alone reviewable.—The Abbotsford, 98 U. S. 440, 25 L. Ed. 168; Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 19 L. Ed. 106, followed in Laber v. Cooper, 7 Wall. 565, 568, 19 L. Ed. 151; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 297, 11 L. Ed. 979; The Benefactor, 102 U. S. 214, 26 L. Ed. 157; Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 15 L. Ed. 265; The City of New York, 147 U. S. 72, 37 L. Ed. 84; Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall. 726, 735, 19 L. Ed. 769.

"In its preparation counsel seem to have forgotten that this court does not pass, in actions at law, upon the credibility or sufficiency of testimony; that these are matters which are left to the jury, and for any errors in its action the remedy must be sought in the court below by a motion for a new trial. A bill of exceptions should only present the rulings of the court upon some matter of law—as upon the admission or exclusion of evidence." Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 136, 19 L. Ed. 106, opinion of Mr. Justice Field.

"To bring all the testimony offered at the trial of a cause at common law, instead of facts, into this court, by a bill of exceptions, or otherwise, is a practice which, to say the least, is extremely inconvenient. Its tendency is to convert this court from a tribunal for the decision of points of law, into one for the investigation of facts, and for weighing evidence. To look into that testimony, for the purpose of inquiring whether the judge has omitted anything material in his charge, would be to yield to this practice, and to sanction it, in its most exceptionable form." Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 276, 6 L. Ed. 468.

Matters of fact or discretion.—The right of review is limited to questions of law appearing on the face of the record, and does not extend to matters of fact or of discretion; questions of law arising upon the trial of an issue of fact cannot be made part of the record by bill of exceptions, unless the trial is by jury, or by the court after due waiver in writing of a jury trial. Andes v. Slauson, 130 U. S. 435, 438, 32 L. Ed. 989.

It is an elementary principle in the a challenge on some matter of law, arising upon a fact not denied, in which either party is overruled by the court.[7] And this is the rule in admiralty,[8] and in actions at law generally.[9]

Scope of Bill.—The law is equally clear, that a bill of exceptions is not to draw the whole matter into examination again. It is only for a single point.[10] And common law that a bill of exceptions "is founded on a matter of law or a point of law arising out of a fact not denied." 1 Saund. Pl. and Evid. 640; The Abbotsford, 98 U. S. 440, 444, 25 L. Ed. 168.

Facts bearing upon questions of law.—But the bill of exceptions must be used to bring the facts into review before the appellate court, so far as they bear upon questions of law. Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 7 L. Ed. 732. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 1005.

7. Questions of law arising upon admission or exclusion of evidence, etc.—Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 199, 8 L. Ed. 92; Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 19 L. Ed. 106; Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 14, 15 L. Ed. 30; Wetmore v. Rymer, 169 U. S. 115, 42 L. Ed. 682.

The bill of exceptions lies only upon some point arising either upon the admission or refusal of evidence, or is a matter of law arising from a fact found, or not denied, and which has been overruled by the court. Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15 L. Ed. 30, citing Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 11 L. Ed. 979.

So far as error is founded upon the bill of exceptions incorporated into the record, it lies only to exceptions taken at the trial to the ruling of the law by the judge, and to the admission or rejection of evidence. 1 Bac. Abr., 779; Bull. N. P., 316. Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 297, 11 L. Ed. 979.

Beyond this we have no power to look into the bill, on a writ of error, as it is the creature of statute, and restricted to the points stated. Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 298, 11 L. Ed. 979, citing 13 Edw. I, ch. 31.

8. In admiralty court confined to questions of law.—In admiralty cases the federal supreme court is limited to a determination of questions of law and to the validity of such rulings excepted to at the time, as may be presented by a bill of exceptions prepared as in actions at law. The E. A. Packer, 140 U. S. 360, 35 L. Ed. 453, citing The Abbotsford, 98 U. S. 440, 25 L. Ed. 168; The Benefactor, 102 U. S. 214, 26 L. Ed. 157; The Clara, 102 U. S. 200, 26 L. Ed. 145; The Adriatic, 103 U. S. 730, 26 L. Ed. 605; The Connemara, 108 U. S. 352, 360, 27 L. Ed. 751; Watts v. Camors, 115 U. S. 353, 363, 29 L. Ed. 406; The Gazelle and Cargo, 128 U. In The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 26 L. Ed. 1100, Mr. Chief Justice Waite severely condemned the practice of framing a bill of exceptions so as, if possible, to secure a re-examination of the facts in that court.

Conflicting evidence as to seaworthiness of vessel.—Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Allen, 121 U. S. 67, 30 L. Ed. 858, citing The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 26 L. Ed. 1100.

Rule in admiralty as to incidental facts.—It is undoubtedly true that if the circuit court neglects or refuses, on request, to make a finding one way or the other on a question of fact material to the determination of the cause, when evidence has been adduced on the subject, an exception to such refusal taken in time and properly presented by a bill of exceptions may be considered here on appeal. So, too, if the court, against remonstrance, finds a material fact which is not supported by any evidence whatever, an exception is taken, a bill of exceptions may be used to bring up for review the ruling in that particular. In the one case the refusal to find would be equivalent to a ruling that the fact was immaterial; and in the other, that there was some evidence to prove what is found when in truth there was none. Both these are questions of law, and proper subjects for review in an appellate court. But this rule does not apply to mere incidental facts, which only amount to evidence bearing upon the ultimate facts of the case. Questions depending on the weight of evidence are, under the law as it now stands, to be conclusively settled below and the fact in respect to which such an exception may be taken must be one of the material and ultimate facts on which the correct determination of the cause depends. The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 387, 26 L. Ed. 1100, approved in Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Allen, 121 U. S. 67, 71, 30 L. Ed. 858.

9. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 1005.

10. Scope of the bill.—W. B. v. Latimer, 4 Dall., appx. i, xi, 1 L. Ed. 915; Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. Ed. 1150.

A bill of exceptions is not to draw the whole matter into examination again; it is only for a single point, and the truth of it can never be doubted, after the bill is sealed. Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 199, 8 L. Ed. 92.

Indeed, the single function of a bill of exceptions is to bring upon the record so much of the proceedings as will disclose the precise question which the party desires to have ruled upon, and, when prepared by counsel and presented to the

this is the rule in admiralty.[11] The bill, however, only constitutes a proper foundation for a writ of errror; it does not remove the cause into the appellate court without a writ of error.[12]

2. Office of Bill under Montana Code.—The office of a bill of exceptions is evidently the same under the Montana Code as at common law, and whatever brings upon the record, properly verified by the attestation of the judge, the matters of fact occurring at the trial, on which the point of law arises, which enters into the ruling and decision of the court excepted to, answers sufficiently the description of a proper bill of exceptions.[13]

II. What Law Governs.

In regard to bills of exceptions, courts of the United States are independent of any statute or practice prevailing in the courts of the state in which the trial is had.[14] Nor does the uniformity act apply to the preparation, perfecting, set-court, if it states the facts truly, the judge ought to sign it; and it is unnecessary for it to set forth affirmatively that there was no other error in the proceedings, or to state all the facts of the case in order to disclose that there was no other error. Lewis v. United States, 146 U. S. 370, 384, 36 L. Ed. 1011, dissenting opinion of Brewer, J.

11. Scope of the bill in admiralty.—A bill of exceptions must be "prepared as in actions at law," where it is used, "not to draw the whole matter into examination again," but only separate and distinct points, and those of law. Bac. Abr., Bill of Exceptions; 1 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 846. The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 389, 26 L. Ed. 1100.

A bill of exceptions in admiralty cases must be prepared as in actions at law, where it is used not to draw the whole matter into examination again, but only separate and distinct points at law. The E. A. Packer, 140 U. S. 360, 35 L. Ed. 453, approving The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 26 L. Ed. 1100.

12. Bill does not dispense with necessity for writ of error.—Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418, 419, 24 L. Ed. 437.

13. Office of bill under Montana Code.—Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews, 117 U. S. 282, 286, 29 L. Ed. 905.

14. Statutes and practice in state courts do not control federal courts.—Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 132 U. S. 191, 33 L. Ed. 309; Fishburn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 U. S. 60, 34 L. Ed. 585; Van Stone v. Stillwell, etc., Mfg. Co., 142 U. S. 128, 133, 35 L. Ed. 961; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. Ed. 898; Newcomb v. Wood, 97 U. S. 581, 24 L. Ed. 1085; Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508. See, also, the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 861.

The authority of the federal supreme court to review the judgments of the circuit court by bill of exceptions and writ of error is regulated exclusively by the acts of congress and the practice of the courts of the United States, without regard to the statutes of the state or the practice of its courts. Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508; Andes v. Slauson, 130 U. S. 435, 438, 32 L. Ed. 989.

Section 1176 of the Penal Code of California provides: "When written charges have been presented, given, or refused, or when charges have been taken down by the reporter, the questions presented in such charges need not be excepted to or embodied in a bill of exceptions, but the written charges or the report, with the endorsements showing the action of the court, form part of the record, and any error in the decision of the court thereon may be taken advantage of on appeal in like manner, as if presented in a bill of exceptions." They also, by the same code, form part of the judgment roll. Section 1207. These provisions of the Penal Code of California do not control the proceedings in the circuit court of the United States sitting in that state. What is necessary to be done in a circuit court, even in civil cases, in order that its action upon any particular question or matter may be reviewed or revised in this court, depends upon the acts of congress and the rules of practice which this court recognizes as essential in the administration of justice. Such is the result of our decisions. Rev. Stat., § 914; Act of June 1, 1872, c. 255, § 5, 17 Stat. 197; Nudd v. Burrows, 91 U. S. 426, 23 L. Ed. 286; Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. Ed. 898; Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 553, 32 L. Ed. 508; Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 208, 36 L. Ed. 943; Luxton v. North River Bridge Co., 147 U. S. 337, 338, 37 L. Ed. 194; Lincoln v. Power, 151 U. S. 436, 442, 38 L. Ed. 224. See, also, Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 303, 36 L. Ed. 429; St. Clair v. United States, 154 U. S. 134, 153, 38 L. Ed. 936.

Practice as to filing bill.—Practice in the federal supreme court is not regulated by the provisions of state practice, statutes, or rules of court as to filing the tling and signing of a bill of exceptions.[15] The rules applicable are derived from the common law and ancient English statutes, except so far as the acts of congress control.[16]

III. Necessity for Bill of Exceptions or Statement of Facts.

A. Where the Errors Are Not Apparent on the Record—1. IN GENERAL.—Whatever the error may be and in whatever stage of the cause it may have occurred it must appear in the record or proceedings, or be shown by a bill of exceptions, agreed statement of facts, demurrer, or special verdict;[17] bill. Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508.

The statute of Alabama, and the regulation it prescribes to the courts of the state, can have no influence on the practice of a court of the United States, unless adopted by a rule of the court. United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 254, 15 L. Ed. 900.

Removal of causes from Louisiana.—"The circuit courts may adopt the forms of pleading and practice of the state courts, but no state legislation can be applied to the practice of this court, and the mode in which causes shall be brought into it for review. The very numerous cases on this subject (from Field v. United States, 9 Pet. 182, 9 L. Ed. 94, to Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15 L. Ed. 30), show the difficulties we have had to encounter in reconciling our modes of review to the civil code of practice as used in the courts of Louisiana." Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 61, 15 L. Ed. 265.

15. Construction of uniformity act.—"The practice and rules of the state court do not apply to proceedings in the circuit court taken for the purpose of reviewing in this court a judgment of the circuit court, and that such rules and practice, embracing the preparation, perfecting, settling, and signing of a bill of exceptions, are not within the 'practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding' in the circuit court which are required, by § 914 of the Revised Statutes, to conform 'as near as may be' to the 'practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the state' within which the circuit court is held, 'any rule of court to the contrary notwithstanding.'" Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 553, 32 L. Ed. 508.

Mr. Justice Blatchford, after reviewing the cases at some length, uses the following language: "In harmony with the foregoing decisions, we are of opinion that § 914 does not extend to the means of enforcing or revising a decision once made by the circuit court. Section 914 does not extend to proceedings to enforce a judgment, because by § 916 special provisions are made as to a remedy by execution or otherwise, to reach the property of a judgment debtor, by borrowing from the laws of the state only those remedies then already existing, or which should thereafter be adopted by general rules of the circuit court. Lamaster v. Keeler, 123 U. S. 376, 31 L. Ed. 238. The object of § 914 was to assimilate the form and manner in which the parties should present their claims and defense, in the preparation for the trial of suits in the federal courts, to those prevailing in the courts of the state. As we have seen, it does not include state statutes requiring instructions to the jury to be reduced to writing, or those which permit such instructions and certain papers read in evidence, to be taken by the jury when they retire, or those which require the jury to be directed, if they return a general verdict, to find specially upon particular questions of fact involved in the issues; and, as it does not apply to a motion for a new trial, nor affect the power of the circuit court to grant or refuse a new trial at its discretion, so it does not cover any other means of enforcing or revising a decision once made by the circuit court." Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 554, 32 L. Ed. 508.

Generally, as to the uniformity act, see the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 861.

16. What rules do govern federal courts.—The manner or the time of taking proceedings as a foundation for the removal of a case by a writ of error from one federal court to another is a matter to be regulated exclusively by acts of congress, or, when they are silent, by methods derived from the common law, from ancient English statutes, or from the rules and practice of the courts of the United States. Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 555, 32 L. Ed. 508.

The only regulation made by congress as to bills of exceptions is that contained in § 953 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that they shall be sufficiently authenticated by the signature of the presiding judge, without any seal. Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 555, 32 L. Ed. 508.

17. Necessity for bill where errors not apparent of record.—1 Chitty on Pleading, 431; 1 Tidd's Practice, 586; United States v. Eliason, 16 Pet. 291, 10 L. Ed. 968; New Orleans Railroad v. Morgan, 10 Wall. 256, 261, 19 L. Ed. 892; Claasen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140, 147, 35 L.

therefore alleged errors, not presented by a bill of exceptions, nor apparent on the face of the record, are not the proper subjects of re-examination by writ of error in the federal supreme court.[18] And neither the assignment of errors, nor the plea of in nullo est erratum, can give that court jurisdiction of errors not appearing on the face of the record.[19] It may be said, in general, that anything which is not necessary to support the validity of the judgment is, presumptively at least, no part of the record, however material it may have been in the progress of the case.[20]

When the error alleged does not appear on the face of the record, or on a demurrer, a bill of exceptions to the ruling of the court on questions of law, either in admitting or rejecting testimony, or in their instructions to the jury, constitutes the only mode of bringing a case before the supreme court for review. Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 62, 15 L. Ed. 265; Sparrow v. Strong, 4 Wall. 584, 18 L. Ed. 410.

When a party is dissatisfied with the decision of his cause in an inferior court, and intends to seek a revision of the law applied to the case in a superior jurisdiction, he must take care to raise the question of law to be revised, and put the facts on the record for the information of the appellate tribunal; and, if he omits to do so in any of the methods known in the practice of courts of errors, he must be content to abide the consequences of his own neglect. Where the legal points have not been raised by a bill of exceptions in the lower court, it is not a case for revision in this court. Minor v. Tillotson, 2 How. 392, 11 L. Ed. 312.

The court cannot give any opinion upon points not properly before it, from those points not being in the bill of exceptions filed in the record to the court's ruling below. The proper function of a court, on a writ of error, is to pass its judgment upon the points excepted to in the opinion of the court below; and not to decide the law of the case, in anticipation of its trial in the court below. Bradstreet v. Potter, 16 Pet. 317, 318, 10 L. Ed. 978.

Where the verdict is general the court may enter judgment on the verdict, or may set it aside and grant a new trial, but the rulings of the court during the trial cannot be revised on writ of error save by a regular bill of exceptions. Judgment also may be rendered on the verdict in a special case, or a new trial may be granted because the verdict is general, and is for plaintiff or defendant. Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall. 423, 433, 18 L. Ed. 756.

Municipal taxation.—Assignments of error that a debt due a city is part of its public revenues, and not subject to seizure or levy; that the city was not made a party to the garnishee proceedings; that the supplemental petition does not show that the debt to the city is not public property; that there was no issue raised to be tried by a jury; that the character and origin of the indebtedness of the corporation to the city were not shown to be such as would support the judgment against the corporation; and that the interest included in the verdict was improperly allowed and erroneously computed, if not saved by a bill of exceptions, cannot be considered by this court on a writ of error. Canal, etc., St. R. Co. v. Hart, 114 U. S. 654, 29 L. Ed. 226.

Former conviction.—No question in regard to a defense set up of a former conviction can be raised, in the absence of a bill of exceptions raising specific questions. Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 427, 29 L. Ed. 681. See the title AUTREFOIS, ACQUIT AND CONVICT, vol. 2, p. 751.

b. Proceedings in Criminal Cases.—In the absence of a rule requiring them to be incorporated, the proceedings before a commissioner form no part of the record,[31] and the same rule applies to warrants, subpœnas, and capiases, except the one upon which the arrest was made.[32]

Objections assigned and argued to the rulings and instructions at the trial cannot be considered by this court, in the absence of a bill of exceptions. Claasen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140, 35 L. Ed. 966.

Report of arbitrators.—When the report is filed in court, the losing party may file objections in writing to the confirmation of the report, and may introduce evidence in support of the objections; and it is well-settled law that the ruling of the court in overruling such objections is the proper subject of a bill of exceptions. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Myers, 18 How. 246, 250, 15 L. Ed. 380; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 131, 23 L. Ed. 260.

22. Reasons for the decision.—United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 37 L. Ed. 335.

When the bill of exceptions does not purport to set forth all the evidence on either of the subjects to which the exception relates, and the judgment states that it was rendered for "reasons orally assigned," and these are not found in the record, there is nothing on which error can be assigned, and the judgment must be affirmed. Generes v. Campbell, 11 Wall. 193, 20 L. Ed. 110.

23. Report of judge.—Thus, in Inglee v. Coolidge, 2 Wheat. 363, 4 L. Ed. 261, it was held by this court that the report of the judge who tried the case at nisi prius, containing a statement of the facts, is not to be considered a part of the record. It is not like a special verdict or a statement of facts agreed of record, upon which the court is to pronounce its judgment. Approved in United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 700, 37 L. Ed. 335.

24. Stipulations of the parties must appear by the bill of exceptions. McLaughlin v. Swann, 18 How. 217, 15 L. Ed. 257. See the title STIPULATIONS.

25. Motions.—United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 37 L. Ed. 335.

26. Motions for dismissal of causes removed to federal courts.—The decision of a court upon a motion to dismiss a cause removed into a federal court from a state court, on the ground of diverse citizenship, and the questions presented and decided at the hearing of such a motion cannot be re-examined on a writ of error, unless they are brought into the record by bill of exceptions, or something which is equivalent. Affidavits form no part of the record, unless made so by a bill of exceptions, or something which is equivalent. England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502, 28 L. Ed. 811, distinguishing Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 26 L. Ed. 797, cited in United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 37 L. Ed. 335.

sort and description,[34] as, for example, affidavits filed in support of a motion for a new trial,[35] or affidavits of witnesses as to their mileage and attendance,[36] and also depositions, exhibits or certificates,[37] form no part of the record, unless made so by a bill of exceptions, or something which is equivalent,[38] though appearing in the transcript of a common-law court of errors.[39]

d. Instructions—(1) In General.—Nor are the instructions, given or requested, by the court to the jury, a part of the record, unless made so by a proper bill of exceptions.[40]

34. Miscellaneous affidavits.—Affidavits of claimants, affidavits in relation to the conduct of jurors, and all affidavits taken during the progress of the trial are not matters of record, unless made so by bill of exceptions or by consent, or by order of the court. United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 37 L. Ed. 335, citing Freeman on Judgments, § 79.

Affidavit for use on motion.—"In the first place, only errors apparent on the record can be considered, and an affidavit filed for use on a motion is not part of the record, any more than the deposition of a witness used on the trial, and only becomes a part of the record by being incorporated in a bill of exceptions. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co., 128 U. S. 383, 32 L. Ed. 439;" Evans v. Stettnisch, 149 U. S. 605, 607, 37 L. Ed. 866.

35. Affidavits filed in support of a motion for a new trial are no part of the record on error, unless made so by bill of exceptions. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co., 128 U. S. 383, 390, 32 L. Ed. 439.

36. Affidavits of witnesses.—"We have already held, in United States v. King, 147 U. S. 676, 37 L. Ed. 328, that, in the absence of a rule requiring them to be incorporated, the proceedings before a commissioner form no part of the record, and we think the same rule applies to affidavits. England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502, 28 L. Ed. 811." United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 700, 37 L. Ed. 335. See the title WITNESSES.

37. Depositions, exhibits and certificates.—"In passing upon the questions presented in a bill of exceptions this court will not look beyond the bill itself. The pleadings and the statements of the bill, the verdict and the judgment are the only matters that are properly before it. Depositions, exhibits, or certificates not contained in the bill, cannot be considered by the court. The court declares its intention to adhere to what is above presented as its practice; and declares further that the case of Flanders v. Tweed (9 Wall. 425, 19 L. Ed. 678), was exceptional." Reed v. Gardner, 17 Wall. 409, 21 L. Ed. 665.

In a jury case depositions and exhibits of every description constitute no part of the record on which the judgment of an appellate court can be exercised, unless made a part of it by a bill of exceptions, in some other manner recognized by law. Williams v. Norris, 12 Wheat. 117, 6 L. Ed. 571.

38. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 23 L. Ed. 260.

39. Merely appearing in transcript not sufficient.—Neither depositions nor affidavits, though appearing in the transcript of a common-law court of errors, can ever be regarded as a part of the record, unless the same are embodied in an agreed statement of facts, or are made so by a demurrer to the evidence, or are exhibited in a bill of exceptions. Matters of parol evidence in such a case can never be made a part of the record so as to become reexaminable in a court of errors, unless it be in one of four ways: (1) By an agreed statement of facts. (2) By a bill of exceptions. (3) By a special verdict. (4) By a demurrer to the evidence; which latter mode is seldom or never adopted in modern practice. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 130, 23 L. Ed. 260, cited and approved in Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 49 L. Ed 219.

"Exceptions may be taken by the opposite party to the introduction of depositions or affidavits; and the party introducing such evidence in a subordinate court may insist that the court shall give due effect to the evidence, and, in case of refusal to comply with such request, may except to the ruling of the court, if it be one prejudicial to his rights. Where neither party excepts to the ruling of the court, either in respect to its admissibility or legal effect, the fact that such a deposition or affidavit is exhibited in the transcript is not of the slightest importance in the appellate court, as nothing of the kind can ever constitute the proper foundation for an assignment of error." Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 433, 15 L. Ed. 978; Metropolitan R. Co v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 331, 49 L. Ed. 219.

40. Bill necessary to put instructions on record.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 433, 15 L. Ed. 978; Reed v. Gardner, 17 Wall. 409, 21 L. Ed. 665; Storm v. United States, 94 U. S. 76, 77, 24 L. Ed. 42.

Instructions to become part of the record must be incorporated in the bill of exceptions, and thus authenticated by

(2) Other Methods than Bill of Exceptions Considered—(a) In General.—Further than this, a bill of exceptions is the only mode by which the instructions given or requested can be made a part of the record;[41] it cannot be accomplished by the clerk merely marking a copy of the charge as filed in his office among the papers in the case,[42] nor by referring to exhibits annexed and the signature of the judge. Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 40 L. Ed. 269.

Errors in the charge of the court which do not appear in the bill of exceptions, will not be considered, but the judgment will be affirmed. Bannon v. United States, 156 U. S. 464, 39 L. Ed. 494.

Where there is no bill of exceptions in the record showing that the court below was asked to and refused to give instructions upon which the assignments of error depend, this court cannot pass upon the errors embraced in the assignments of error. Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 49 L. Ed. 219.

"Instructions requested or given rest in parol and do not, in the practice of this court, or in any other court where the common law prevails, become a part of the record, unless made so by a regular bill of exceptions, sealed by the judge who presided at the trial." Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 598, 17 L. Ed. 638; Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 675, 18 L. Ed. 704.

Although the transcript of the record contains what purports to be the charge of the court in full with a memorandum at the close, stating that defendant's counsel excepted to certain portions thereof, yet if it is not verified, or included in any proper bill of exceptions, this court is not at liberty to treat it as a part of the record for any purpose. Struthers v. Drexel, 122 U. S. 487, 30 L. Ed. 1216.

41. Bill of exceptions is exclusive mode of putting instructions on the record.—Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 383; Claasen v. United States, 142 U. S. 140, 35 L. Ed. 966; United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 37 L. Ed. 335.

Error to supreme court of the District of Columbia.—This court cannot pass upon an assignments of error to the action of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in refusing to give instructions, where there is no bill of exceptions in the record showing that the supreme court of the District of Columbia was asked to and refused to give the alleged instructions upon which the assignments of error depend, and where it does not appear from a bill of exceptions or in any other appropriate mode, upon what the supreme court of the District of Columbia acted in considering the exceptions. "True it is that the transcript contains what purport to be certain instructions asked and refused, marked filed by the clerk. True also is it that there is in the printed transcript a petition and other papers concerning the evidence given before the jury, to which we have referred in the statement of the case. And it is also true that there is in the printed transcript an agreement between counsel, reciting that the court allowed the prayer of the petition. But in the absence of a bill of exceptions, allowed and authenticated by the judge, these documents form no part of the record in this court, which we have alone the right to consider in determining the merits of the errors assigned. Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 23 L. Ed. 260; Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 593, 40 L. Ed. 269; Nelson v. Flint, 166 U. S. 276, 279, 41 L. Ed. 1002." Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 330, 49 L. Ed. 219.

42. Marking charges filed by clerk insufficient.—A claim of error in the instructions is not legally before this court where there appears in the transcript that which purports to be a copy of the charge, marked by the clerk as filed in his office among the papers in the case, because it is well settled that instructions do not in this way become part of the record. Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 40 L. Ed. 269.

"Finally, there is a claim of error in the instructions, but the difficulty with this is that they are not legally before us. True, there appears in the transcript that which purports to be a copy of the charge, marked by the clerk as filed in his office among the papers in the case; but it is well settled that instructions do not in this way become part of the record. They must be incorporated in a bill of exceptions, and thus authenticated by the signature of the judge. This objection is essentially different from that of the lack or the sufficiency of exceptions." Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 332, 49 L. Ed. 219, citing Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 593, 40 L. Ed. 269.

There are, for instance, in some states statutes directing that all instructions must be reduced to writing, marked by the judge "refused" or "given," and attested by his signature, and that when so attested and filed in the clerk's office they become a part of the record. But in the absence of that or some other statutory provision a bill of exceptions has been recognized as the only appropriate method of bringing onto the record the instructions given or refused. Supreme Court Rules No. 4, 108 U. S. 574; Phœnix Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 193, 30 marked "charge,"[43] nor can an entry of the ruling in the minutes be of any benefit to the party, unless he seasonably reduces the same to form and causes it to be sealed by the judge.[44] This is also the rule in Georgia.[45]

(b) Affidavits of Counsel.—A refusal of the court to instruct the jury, because the request was not given the court until after the court had instructed the jury, will not be considered, where there is nothing in the bill of exceptions showing how long after the court had finished its charge to the jury this instruction was asked; nor can this be accomplished by an affidavit filed with the clerk but not incorporated into any bill of exceptions.[46]

(3) Review of Criminal Cases from Utah.—But instructions requested and refused, and instructions given, are matters of record and subjects of appeal under the provisions of the Utah code of criminal procedure, without any bill of exceptions.[47]

e. Evidence—(1) In General.—The evidence given on the trial of an issue at common law is no part of the record, unless made a part of it by bill of exceptions, demurrer to evidence, or case agreed by the parties, and entered of record.[48] And this is necessary for a review of the rulings of the court below in

A bill of exceptions authenticated in these words, "The defendants claiming that they are entitled to a bill of exceptions to review the ruling upon their motion for a new trial and having presented the foregoing as such bill, the same is hereby allowed and settled as a correct statement of the proceedings had on the trial so far as it goes," is not in such condition as to present for review any portion of the instructions of the court. Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 40 L. Ed. 269.

43. Reference to exhibits.—"The bill of exceptions, instead of stating distinctly, as required by law and by the fourth rule of this court, those matters of law in the charge which are excepted to, and those only, does not contain any part of the charge, or any exception to it, and undertakes to supply the want by referring to exhibits annexed, containing all the evidence introduced at the trial, the whole charge to the jury, and notes of a desultory conversation which followed between the judge and the counsel on both sides, leaving it to this court to pick out from those notes, if possible, a sufficient statement of some ruling in matter of law." Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117, distinguished in Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 37 L. Ed. 1195.

Although the transcript of the record contains what purports to be the charge of the court in full with a memorandum at the close, stating that defendant's counsel excepted to certain portions thereof, yet if it is not verified, or included in any proper bill of exceptions, this court is not at liberty to treat it as a part of the record for any purpose. Struthers v. Drexel, 122 U. S. 487, 30 L. Ed. 1216.

44. Entry of ruling in minutes.—Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 675, 18 L. Ed. 704, citing Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 598, 17 L. Ed. 638, approved in Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

45. Rule in Georgia as to incorporating instructions.—A bill of exceptions, allowed and signed or sealed by the judge, is the only mode by which his charge to the jury can be rendered a part of the record. The provisions of the Code of Georgia are in harmony with this rule. Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 383.

46. Refusal of request because not presented in time.—Nelson v. Flint, 166 U. S. 276, 41 L. Ed. 1002.

47. Review of criminal cases from Utah.—Hopt v. People, 104 U. S. 631, 26 L. Ed. 873, citing Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418.

48. The evidence must be placed on the record by bill of exceptions.—De Le Croix v. Chamberlain, 12 Wheat. 599, 600, 6 L. Ed. 741; Prentice v. Stearns, 113 U. S. 435, 445, 28 L. Ed. 1059.

When a party is dissatisfied with the decision of his cause in an inferior court, and intends to seek a revision of the law applied to the case in a superior jurisdiction, he must take care to raise the questions of law to be revised, and put the facts on the record for the information of the appellate tribunal; and, if he omits to do so in any of the methods known in the practice of such courts, he must be content to abide the consequences of his neglect. Evidence, whether written or oral, and whether given to the court or to the jury, does not become a part of the record, unless made so by some regular proceeding at the time of the trial and before the rendition of the judgment. Whatever the error may be, and in whatever stage of the cause it may have occurred, it must appear in the record, else it cannot be revised in a court of error exercising jurisdiction according to the course of the common law. admitting or excluding evidence,[49] whether the evidence is written or oral,[50] and whether given to the court or to the jury,[51] or introduced on a preliminary motion, such as a motion to remand a cause removed from a state court.[52]

(2) Cross-Examination.—The party objecting must cause the cross-examination to be brought up on the bill of exceptions.[53]

(3) Manner of Incorporation.—Moreover, the evidence must be contained in the bill of exceptions or made part thereof; it is not sufficient that it be merely appended thereto,[54] or that it appears in the transcript of the proceedings of a

"This court has also held, in Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978, that the evidence and the exceptions thereto constitute no part of the record, unless incorporated in a bill of exceptions signed and sealed by the presiding judge. See, also, Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638." United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 605, 700, 37 L. Ed. 335.

49. Rulings of the court in admitting or excluding evidence are not a part of the record, unless made so by a proper bill of exceptions. Storm v. United States, 94 U. S. 76, 24 L. Ed. 42, citing Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 433, 15 L. Ed. 978; United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 37 L. Ed. 335.

Whatever error of the court is apparent in the record, whether it be in the foundation, proceedings, judgment, or execution of the suit, may be re-examined and corrected; but neither the rulings of the court in admitting or excluding evidence, nor the instructions given by the court to the jury, are a part of the record, unless made so by a proper bill of exceptions. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 433, 15 L. Ed. 978; Storm v. United States, 94 U. S. 76, 77, 24 L. Ed. 42.

Errors in the admission of testimony which do not appear in the bill of exceptions at all, will not be considered but the judgment will be affirmed. Bannon v. United States, 156 U. S. 464, 39 L. Ed. 494.

50. Affidavits, depositions, and matters of parol evidence, though appearing in the transcript of the proceedings of a common-law court, do not form a part of the record unless they are made so by an agreed statement of facts, a bill of exceptions, a special verdict, or demurrer to the evidence. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 23 L. Ed. 260.

51. Trials by court without a jury.—Undoubtedly, the general rule is that, upon a writ of error, only matters of law appearing on the face of the record can be considered, and that evidence, whether written or oral, and whether given to the court or to the jury, does not become a part of the record unless made so by some regular proceeding at the time of the trial and before the rendition of the judgment. Whatever the error may be, and in whatever stage of the cause it may have occurred, it must appear in the record, else it cannot be revised in a court of error exercising jurisdiction according to the course of the common law; and ordinarily a bill of exceptions lies only upon some point arising either upon the admission or rejection of evidence; or is a matter of law arising from a fact found, or not denied, and which has been overruled by the court. Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15 L. Ed. 30; Wetmore v. Rymer, 169 U. S. 115, 119, 42 L. Ed. 682. This same rule applies where issues of fact are submitted by the parties to court under § 700 of the Revised Statutes.

An objection to the admission or exclusion of evidence, or to such ruling or propositions of law as the party may ask, must appear by bill of exceptions. Norris v. Jackson, 9 Wall. 125, 19 L. Ed. 608.

52. Motion to remand.—If either party, in an action at law, is desirous of preserving the evidence, either at the trial or on preliminary motion, in order to raise a question of law upon it, he must ask to have it incorporated in a bill of exceptions. This is the only way in which it can be done, unless the parties choose to make an agreed statement of facts. Knapp v. Railroad Co., 20 Wall. 117, 121, 22 L. Ed. 328. See, in accord, Kearney v. Denn, 15 Wall. 51, 21 L. Ed. 41; England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502, 28 L. Ed. 811.

53. Cross-examination of witnesses.—Where a witness in a suit against an insurance company for the value of goods lost in the burning of a store, when examined in chief, testifies apparently to the correctness of an abstract made from papers burnt in the fire, and is cross-examined upon the subject of that correctness, the party cross-examining cannot, where he has not caused the cross-examination to be brought up on the bill of exception, object, on a question, on error as to the admissibility of the abstract, that the witness has not testified sufficiently to the correctness. He should have caused the cross-examination to appear on the bill if he wish to show this. "The testimony is not given, but, if the evidence of the witness had not been satisfactory, it should have been placed upon the record." Insurance Co. v. Weide, 9 Wall. 677, 681, 19 L. Ed. 810. See the title WITNESSES.

54. Merely appending evidence to bill not sufficient.—Evidence or statements of fact not contained in the bill of exceptions, nor made a part thereof, though ap-common-law court.[55]

(4) Exclusiveness of Remedy by Bill of Exceptions—(a) When the Facts Are Disputed.—Where the facts are disputed,[56] the rulings of the court below, in admitting or rejecting evidence, can be brought to the supreme court for revision only by a bill of exceptions.[57] Such rulings in such case are never properly included in a special verdict, any more than in an agreed statement of facts,[58] and this is the rule in Georgia.[59]

(b) When the Facts Are Undisputed.—On the other hand, where there is no dispute in regard to the facts, and consequently no necessity for any ruling of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence, the same purpose may be safely accomplished by a special verdict, or, according to the rule established in the federal supreme court, by an agreed statement of facts.[60] It should be observed, however, that the rulings previously made by the court, in admitting or rejecting evidence during the progress of the trial, are no more revisable on a special case, as it is called, when the verdict is taken subject to the opinion of the court on an agreed state of facts, than where the agreed statement is submitted directly to the court, without the intervention of the jury; and for the obvious reason that, in the one case as much as in the other, the foundation laid for the action of the revisory tribunal is based upon the consent of the parties to the suit, and consequently the action of the appellate court must be confined to the facts as they were agreed, and as they appear in the record of the case.[61] At one time an attempt was made to introduce a different practice into this court; but it was distinctly disclaimed, and has never been sanctioned in writs of error to any of the circuit courts in states where the proceedings are according to the course of the common law.[62]

(c) Other Methods Considered—aa. In General.—Other modes are known to the practice of the federal supreme court, by which the evidence produced against a party may in certain cases be put on the record either in whole or in part, according to the circumstances, so as to secure the right to have the questions of law arising upon it revised on a writ of error; but every proceeding of pended thereto, will not be regarded by the court. Bank v. Kennedy, 17 Wall. 19, 21 L. Ed. 551.

55. That evidence appears in transcript is not alone sufficient.—Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 23 L. Ed. 260.

56. Bill alone can be used where facts are disputed.—A bill of exceptions, undoubtedly is the safest method, as it is the most comprehensive one in its operation; and where the facts are disputed, and cannot be arranged except from evidence admitted under the ruling of the court as to its admissibility, often-times it becomes the only effectual mode by which all the rights of the complaining party can be preserved. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 433, 15 L. Ed. 978.

57. Bill exclusive remedy for reviewing rulings on the evidence.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978.

58. Rulings on evidence not reviewable on special verdict or agreed statement.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 432, 15 L. Ed. 978.

59. Rule in Georgia where facts are disputed.—A bill of exception is the only mode by which exceptions to the admission of evidence can be made a part of the record. This is the rule in Georgia. Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 383.

60. Where facts are undisputed other methods than bill may be used.—United States v. Eliason, 16 Pet. 291, 10 L. Ed. 968; Stimpson v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 10 How. 328, 329, 13 L. Ed. 441; Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 15 L. Ed. 265; Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 434, 15 L. Ed. 978.

Where the facts are without dispute, and agreed between the parties, a statement of the same may be drawn up and entered on the record, and submitted directly to the court, for its decision, without the intervention of a jury; or a general verdict may be taken, subject to the opinion of the court upon the facts so agreed; and in either case, the aggrieved party may bring error after final judgment, and have the questions of law, arising upon the facts thus spread upon the record, re-examined, as in the case of a special verdict. Faw v. Roberdeau, 3 Cranch 174, 2 L. Ed. 402; Brent v. Chapman, 5 Cranch 358, 3 L. Ed. 125; Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 434, 15 L. Ed. 978.

61. Rulings previously made by court.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978, citing Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15 L. Ed. 30.

62. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 434, 15 L. Ed. 978, citing Shankland v. Washington, 5 Pet. 390, 8 L. Ed. 166.

that kind is either so limited in its application or so tied up by conditions, that they are seldom of much practical importance.[63]

bb. Demurrer to the Evidence.—Formerly it was considered that a party might always demur to the evidence produced against him, as a matter of right; and while that was so, a demurrer to evidence was equally effectual with a bill of exceptions to the extent of its operation.[64] The bill of exceptions, however, was always the more comprehensive remedy, because it extended, as it still does, not only to the facts in the case, but also to the rulings of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence, and to the instructions given to the jury upon its legal effect. A demurrer to the evidence, while its operation in one respect is nearly the same as that of the bill of exceptions, in another is very different. It extends only to the evidence produced, as the term imports, and has no effect at all upon the rulings of the court by which it was received; and as a necessary consequence, where the error of the court consists in having admitted improper evidence, the effect of a demurrer to it would be to waive the objection to the ruling, instead of laying the foundation to correct the error.[65] Accordingly, this mode is seldom or never adopted in modern practice.[66]

cc. Oyer.—Another method by which certain evidence may be incorporated into the record at the nisi prius trial is by oyer, which occurs where the plaintiff in his declaration, or the defendant in his plea, finds it necessary to make a profert of a deed, probate, letters of administration, or other instrument, under seal, and the other party prays that it may be read to him, which in such a case cannot, as a general rule, be denied by the court; and the effect of the proceeding, in certain cases, is to make the instrument a part of the pleadings, and, consequently, to place it within the operation of a writ of error, which, in every case where the proceeding is according to the course of the common law, brings up the whole record; and in all these cases, as well as in the one first named, it is because the evidence, whatever it may be, is made a part of the record by the proceeding, that the questions of law arising upon it become a proper subject of revision on the writ of error.[67]

(d) Causes Removed from Louisiana.—The evidence in the cause was usually brought up from Louisiana by a statement of facts, which, however, could not be supplied by the mere agreement of counsel.[68]

63. Other methods of putting evidence on record.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 435, 15 L. Ed. 978.

68. Statement of facts in causes from Louisiana.—"Other cases have been decided by this court, asserting the same general principle, that nothing can be considered upon a writ of error except what appears upon the record; and one in particular, which, in that point of view, bears a very close analogy to the case under consideration. We allude to the cases of Minor v. Tillotson, 2 How. 392, which was a writ of error to the Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Louisiana, under the 22d section of the Judiciary Act. A mass of evidence in that case was received from both parties, consisting of concessions and grants under the Spanish Government, intermediate conveyances, documents showing the proceedings in regard to the title under the laws of the United States, and parol testimony; and the cause was submitted to the court under an agreement that those documents, proceedings, and parol testimony, constituted all the evidence on which the cause was tried, and that the agreement was 'made for a statement of the facts in the case.' This court then said, it seems to have been supposed that the agreement of the counsel that the evidence in the cause should be considered as a statement of facts, was a sufficient ground for a writ of error on which a revision of the legal questions might be made, and intimated, very strongly, that if it were so,

f. Opinions of the Court.—The opinions of the court given incidentally in the progress of the trial, are no part of the record, unless made a part of it by bill of exceptions.[69] And formerly this was the rule upon a writ of error to a state court.[70]

B. Where the Errors Are Apparent on the Record—1. In General.—On the other hand, since the sole object of a bill of exceptions is to make matter of record what would not otherwise appear as such,[71] if the errors are apparent on the record, no bill of exceptions is necessary.[72]

2. Illustrative Cases—a. Miscellaneous Examples.—For example, the pleadings and verdict,[73] the judgments and orders of the court,[74] and the rulit would be to require the court to try the cause on its merits, and emphatically declared, 'this is never done on a writ of error, which issues according to the course of common law.'" Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978.

70. Formerly upon a writ of error to a state court the opinion of the state court did not constitute a part of the record, unless made a part of it by bill of exceptions. Williams v. Norris, 12 Wheat. 117, 6 L. Ed. 571. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 766.

72. No bill necessary where errors are apparent on record.—Slacum v. Pomery, 6 Cranch 221, 3 L. Ed. 205; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 410, 5 L. Ed. 257; Garland v. Davis, 4 How. 131, 11 L. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 130, 23 L. Ed. 260; Gould v. Evansville, etc., R. Co., 91 U. S. 526, 527, 24 L. Ed. 416; Storm v. United States, 94 U. S. 76, 24 L. Errors of the circuit court resting in parol cannot be re-examined in this court by writ of error. Instead of that, the writ of error addresses itself to the record; and the rule is, that, whenever the error is apparent in the record, whether it be made to appear by bill of exceptions, an agreed statement of facts, or by demurrer, the error is open to re-examination and correction. Storm v. United States, 94 U. S. 76, 24 L. Ed. 42.

"It is a mistake, however, to suppose that in such cases the writ of error operates only on the bill of exceptions. Such is never the fact, unless the whole record is set forth in the bill of exceptions; as the operation of the writ of error addresses itself to the record as an entirety, and not to any separate portion of it as distinct from the residue; and when the cause is removed into the appellate court, any error apparent in any part of the record is within the revisory power of such tribunal. The rule is, that whenever the error is apparent on the record, it is open to revision, whether it be made to appear by bill of exceptions, or in any other manner." Bennett v. Butterworth, 11 How. 669, 13 L. Ed. 859; Slacum v. Pomery, 6 Cranch 221, 3 L. Ed. 205; Garland v. Davis, 4 How. 131, 11 L. Ed. 907; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 410, 5 L. 73. Pleadings and verdict need no bill of exceptions.—Reed v. Gardner, 17 Wall. 409, 21 L. Ed. 665.

This court can notice a material and incurable defect in the pleadings and verdict as they are represented in the record to have existed in the court below, although such defect is not noticed in the bill of exceptions, nor suggested by the counsel in argument here. Garland v. Davis, 4 How. 131, 11 L. Ed. 907.

74. Judgments and orders of court are part of record.—Reed v. Gardner, 17 Wall. 409, 21 L. Ed. 665.

A judgment of a court appealed from is never incorporated into a bill of exceptions. It is always a part of the record of the case, and, like the plea and the verdict, it needs no bill of exceptions, but is simply to be transcribed as a part of the record. Clinton v. Missouri Pac. Railway, 122 U. S. 469, 474, 30 L. Ed. 1214.

Judgment on special verdict.—Special verdicts having a conditional or alternative finding are the proper foundation of a judgment for either party, as the law of the case on the facts found may require, and consequently the judgment of the subordinate court on such a verdict, whether for plaintiff or defendant, may be re-examined in the appellate tribunal without any bill of exceptions. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 432, 15 L. Ed. 978; 3 Blackstone's Commentaries, 378; Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall. 423, 433, 18 L. Ed. 756.

Judgment of dismissal.—The ruling of a court upon the question of the dismissal of an appeal may be reviewed in the supreme court without any bill of excepings of the court below in sustaining[75] or overruling a demurrer[76] unless the parties have abandoned their demurrer by filing a replication after it is overruled,[77] may be examined in the appellate tribunal without any bill of exceptions.

b. The Summons and Process.—In like manner, where the original process was unauthorized by law, or where the defendant was not served with process, or where the proceedings under the process were irregular and void, such errors are apparent in the record, although they are not shown by a bill of exceptions, and do not appear in an agreed statement of facts or by a demurrer or in a special verdict.[78]

tions, if the facts on which the decision was made are to be found in what may be properly called the record of the case before the judgment when he decided it. Clinton v. Missouri Pac. Railway, 122 U. S. 469, 30 L. Ed. 1214.

Judgment setting aside a verdict.—No bill of exceptions is necessary to secure the rights of a party aggrieved by a judgment setting aside a verdict for the plaintiff and ordering a new trial, because such order appears on the record without any bill. Coughlin v. District of Columbia, 106 U. S. 7, 27 L. Ed. 74, citing Bennett v. Butterworth, 11 How. 669, 13 L. Ed. 859.

Order of court reviving suit.—No exception is necessary to the opinion of the court in ordering a suit to be revived and prosecuted against the heirs of the original defendant who had died pending the writ of error, and proceeding to render judgment against them, upon a summons and count against the original defendant, because all these facts sufficiently appear upon the face of the record. Mackers v. Thomas, 7 Wheat. 530, 5 L. Ed. 515.

75. Rulings of court in sustaining demurrer.—Aurora v. West, 7 Wall. 82, 19 L. Ed. 42. See, generally, the title DEMURRERS, ante, p. 293.

Where a demurrer to a declaration in the circuit court is improperly sustained, and judgment is rendered accordingly, the case may be re-examined here upon a writ of error without any formal bill of exceptions. Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. 654, 18 L. Ed. 79.

Demurrer to plea of performance in suit on replevin bond.—"And so it must have been understood by this court in Gorman v. Lenox, 15 Pet. 115, 10 L. Ed. 680, where it was held, in accordance with the principle here advanced, that the action of the circuit court of this district, in sustaining a demurrer to a plea of performance in a suit on a replevin bond, was the subject of revision on a writ of error; and the rule adopted in that case was undoubtedly correct, as the effect of the demurrer was to make the error apparent in the record; and when that is so, it becomes the subject of revision just as much as when it is made to appear by a bill of exceptions or a special verdict." Approved in Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 436, 15 L. Ed. 978.

76. Ruling of court in overruling demurrer.—And the same effect is produced and the same object is attained when the defendant demurs to the declaration, or when either party demurs to a material portion of the pleadings on which the cause depends, as where a bill of exceptions is taken. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 436, 15 L. Ed. 978; New Orleans Railroad v. Morgan, 10 Wall. 256, 260, 19 L. Ed. 892.

"Irrespective, therefore, of the bill of exceptions, the writ of error brings here for review the decisions of the court below, in overruling the demurrer of the defendants to the tenth replication of the plaintiffs, and in sustaining the demurrer of the plaintiffs to the rejoinder of the defendants as filed to the first, second, fifth, sixth, and eighth replications of the plaintiffs. The decisions of the court below may be re-examined in this court without any bill of exceptions, as the questions are apparent in the record, and arise upon demurrers to material pleadings on which the cause depends." Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 436, 15 L. Ed. 978; Gorman v. Lenox, 15 Pet. 115, 10 L. Ed. 680; Aurora v. West, 7 Wall. 82, 91, 19 L. Ed. 42.

Demurrer to plea to jurisdiction.—Where the only matters tried and decided in the circuit court were demurrers to pleas to the jurisdiction, no bill of exceptions is necessary. Petri v. Creelman Lumber Co., 199 U. S. 487, 50 L. Ed. 281.

Information for violation of revenue laws.—Questions arising on a demurrer to the count of an amended information in a revenue case, is open to consideration even in the absence of a bill of exceptions. Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 427, 29 L. Ed. 681. See the title REVENUE LAWS.

77. Where parties have abandoned their demurrer by filing a replication after it is overruled instead of relying upon its sufficiency, a bill of exceptions is necessary to present to us the rulings of the court. Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418, citing Aurora v. West, 7 Wall. 82, 19 L. Ed. 42.

78. Summons and process.—"Certain errors in judicial proceeding can only be examined in an appellate court when they are shown by a bill of exceptions—as

b. Trial of Feigned Issues—(1) In General.—Nor can a bill of exceptions be taken on the trial of a feigned issue directed by a court of equity,[81] or, if taken, can only be used on a motion for a new trial made to that court.[82] The reason where proper testimony is rejected or where improper testimony is admitted—but there may be error in the proceedings of a subordinate court apparent in the record for which the judgment will be reversed in an appellate tribunal, although they are not shown by a bill of exceptions and do not appear in an agreed statement of facts or by demurrer or in a special verdict—as where the original process was unauthorized by law, or where the defendant was not served with process, or where the proceedings under the process were irregular and void. Such were the rules of the common law, and they have been adopted and applied in this court in repeated cases." Slacum v. Pomery, 6 Cranch 221, 3 L. 80. Bill of exceptions not used in chancery practice.—Ex parte Story, 12 Pet. 339, 9 L. Ed. 1108; Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. 691, 11 L. Ed. 786; Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371, 372, 24 L. Ed. 271; Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247, 25 L. Ed. 826; Wilson v. Riddle, 123 U. S. 608, 31 L. Ed. 280.

A bill of exceptions is altogether unknown in chancery practice; nor is a court of chancery bound to inscribe in an order book, upon the application of one of the parties, an order which it may pass in a case before it. Ex parte Story, 12 Pet. 339, 9 L. Ed. 1108.

The case having been on the chancery side of the court and transferred thence to the law docket, a bill of exceptions does not bring into this court for revision any errors alleged to have been committed when it was on the chancery side. Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. 195, 16 L. Ed. 628.

81. Trial of feigned issues.—Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371, 372, 24 L. Ed. 271, citing Ex parte Story, 12 Pet. 339, 343, 9 L. Ed. 1108; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. (3d Am. Ed.) 1106; Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. 691, 11 L. Ed. 786; Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247, 25 L. Ed. 826. See, generally, the title ISSUES TO JURY.

In the federal courts a bill of exceptions as such has no part in proceedings to review the findings of fact on issues to the jury in an equity case; or, if taken, can only be used on a motion for a new trial. The verdict is to be presented for reconsideration and re-examination only on a motion for a new trial, based not on mere errors of the judge, but upon a review of the whole case as submitted to the jury. Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. 691, 692, 11 L. Ed. 786; Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371, 24 L. Ed. 271; Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247, 25 L. Ed. 826.

Appeals from District of Columbia.—Brockett v. Brockett (3 How. 691, 11 L. Ed. 786), was an appeal from a decree of the circuit court of the District of Columbia. There had been an issue directed, which was tried on the law side of that court. Exceptions were taken at that trial; and it was sought to procure a reversal of the decree upon these exceptions. But this court decided that this could not be done. The court, speaking by Justice McLean, say: "The bills of exceptions are copied into the record, but they do not properly constitute a part of it, as they were not brought to the notice and decision of the court in chancery." This case is directly to the point, that a bill of exceptions is not the proper mode of reviewing the trial of an issue out of chancery. Approved in Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247, 253, 25 L. Ed. 826.

Assignments of error to rejection of evidence.—"The defendant assigns for error the rejections of evidence set forth in the bills of exceptions, and the instructions to the jury which were excepted to. No motion for a new trial was made in the circuit court. The submission of the issues to the jury was for the information of the conscience of the chancellor. It is evident, from the terms of the decree, that the chancellor adopted the findings of the jury as being satisfactory to him upon the whole testimony in the case, for the decree states that the court makes its finding 'upon the proof submitted.' Under such circumstances, it is not the practice of an appellate court to consider formal exceptions to rulings in the course of the trial of the issues before the jury. Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. 691, 11 L. Ed. 786; Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371, 24 L. Ed. 271; Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247, 25 L. Ed. 826." Wilson v. Riddle, 123 U. S. 608, 615, 31 L. Ed. 280.

82. Scope of bill when taken on trial of feigned issue.—Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371, 24 L. Ed. 271, reaffirmed in of the practice is obvious; the verdict of a jury upon an issue out of chancery is only advisory, and never conclusive upon the court. It is intended to inform the conscience of the chancellor. It may be disregarded, and a decree rendered contrary to it.[83]

(2) Trial of Feigned Issues in Patent Cases.—The fact that by virtue of the recent statute, passed Feb. 16, 1875 (18 Stat., part 3, 315, § 2), the trial of a feigned issue may be had in patent cases, at the bar of the court, makes no difference in the rule stated above, for it is expressly declared that the verdict of the jury in such cases "shall be treated and proceeded upon in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of issues sent from chancery to a court of law and returned with such findings."[84]

c. Statement of Facts.—Under the judiciary act of 1789, in chancery cases, a statement of facts must accompany the transcript. This provision was revived by the repeal of the act of February, 1801, and applied to the District of Columbia.[85] But the act of 1803 repeals that part of the judiciary act which authorizes a statement of facts in chancery cases, and directs that a copy of the bill, answer, depositions and all other proceedings, of what kind soever in the cause, shall be transmitted to the supreme court. The depositions are substituted for that statement.[86]

3. Cases from District of Columbia.—A bill of exceptions is necessary in cases removed to the federal supreme court from the supreme court of the District of Columbia.[87]

Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247, 250, 25 L. Ed. 826.

The proper method of presenting a question arising on the trial thereof to the consideration of a reviewing court is by motion for a new trial in the court ordering the issue, and an appeal if the decision be unsatisfactory. By this method, if the proper course has been pursued on the motion for a new trial, the evidence and proceedings become a part of the record, and go up to the appellate court if an appeal is taken. 87. Bill necessary to remove cases from District of Columbia.—Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 18 L. Ed. 704; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 23 L. Ed. 260.

A regular bill of exceptions in the usual way, signed and sealed by the judge, is requisite when the rulings of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence or in giving or refusing instructions, are meant to be brought from the supreme court of the District of Columbia to the federal supreme court for review. Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 18 L. Ed. 704.

The eighth section of the act of congress of 1863 (12 Stat. at Large, 764) to reorganize the courts of the District of Columbia, and which says "that if, upon the trial of the cause, an exception be taken, the bill containing it need not be sealed or signed," does not dispense with a regular bill of exceptions in the way usual in circuit courts of the United States when the rulings of the court, in admitting or rejecting evidence, or in giving or refusing instructions, are meant to be brought from the supreme court of the district to this court for review. The provision has reference to carrying such rulings from the special to the general term of the supreme court of the district itself. Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 18 L. Ed. 704, approving Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592.

The eleventh section of the act of congress of 1863 (12 Stat. at Large, 674) provides that any final judgment, order, or decree of the court may be re-examined, and reversed or affirmed, in the supreme court of the United States upon writ of error or appeal in the same cases and in like manner as is now provided by law in reference to the final judgments, orders, or decrees of the circuit court of the United States for the District. Writs of error and appeals were required to be prosecuted under that law, in the same manner, and under the same regulations as in the case of writs of error or appeals from judgments and decrees rendered in the circuit court of the United States. 2 Stat. 106; United States v. Hooe, 1 Cranch 318, 2 L. Ed. 121. Conclusion is, that the regulations respecting the removal of cases from the supreme court of the District

4. Cases from Territorial Courts.—Under the act of congress of April 7th, 1874 (18 Stat. at L., p. 27, c. 80), a statement of facts is necessary in case of an appeal from the supreme court of a territory to the supreme court of the United States.[88] But a large liberty of review was given by the statutes of Utah to the supreme court of the territory, even in the absence of a formal bill of exceptions.[89]

5. Cases Tried by Court without a Jury—a. In General.—Prior to the act of 1865, where the court below decided both law and fact, no bill of exceptions was needed. The case then became like one at common law, where a special verdict is found or a case is stated, in neither of which is there any necessity for a bill of exceptions.[90] Nor in such case was the admission of improper testimony the subject of a bill of exception,[91] and the reason given was, that if the evidence was improperly admitted, the supreme court would reject it, and proceed to decide the cause as if it were not in the record.[92] On the other hand the exclusion of proper testimony was the subject of a bill of exceptions.[93]

Removal of Causes from Louisiana.—But an exception to these rules was always made for cases removed to the federal supreme court from Louisiana.[94] on writs of error or appeal, are the same as from the circuit courts of the United States. Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 676, 18 L. Ed. 704.

"We must have before us a bill of exceptions, or what is equivalent to such bill, upon which the final judgment below was reviewed by the supreme court of the territory, or we cannot examine into any alleged errors except such as are otherwise apparent on the face of the record. The statement in the present case not being one into which we can look, there is no error presented upon which we can pass." Sparrow v. Strong, 4 Wall. 584, 18 L. Ed. 410; Kerr v. Clampitt, 95 U. 91. Admission of testimony.—Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15 L. Ed. 30, following Field v. United States, 9 Pet. 182, 9 L. Ed. 94.

A bill of exceptions to evidence cannot be taken in the district court of the United States to the admission of evidence, where the cause was not tried by a jury. Field v. United States, 9 Pet. 182, 9 L. Ed. 94.

92. Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 12, 15 L. Ed. 30.

93. "If, upon the rejection of the evidence, no testimony would remain necessary to support the judgment of the court, then the mistake would be one of law, and the proper subject of a writ of error. The case of the refusal of proper evidence on the trial is subject to very different considerations from those applicable to the improper admission of it. The exclusion of the evidence might change the legal features of the cause, and lead to a determination of it upon principles wholly inapplicable, in case the evidence has been admitted; nor can we assume that the testimony offered and rejected would have been proved, if it had not been excluded, and revise the judgment of the court upon that assumption; because the offer of evidence to prove a fact, and the ability to make the proof, are very different matters. If the court, instead of rejecting, had allowed the evidence, the party might have failed in the proof, and the case in the result remain the same as before the improper exclusion. We think, therefore, that the improper rejection of testimony on the trial before the judge, where the jury has been dispensed with, should constitute the subject of review on the writ of error, as in the case of a trial before the jury." Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 12, 15 L. Ed. 30.

There is one qualification applicable to this peculiar mode of trial, that should be noticed. If the testimony rejected is but cumulative, and relates exclusively to a question of fact involved in the case, the rejection may be immaterial, as the decision of that question upon the evidence already in, by the judge, may be regarded as well-warranted. Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 13, 15 L. Ed. 30.

94. Removal of causes from Louisiana.—Where testimony is taken, and the cause is submitted to the court with-

Nor since the passage of the act of 1865,[95] is any bill of exceptions necessary to put on the record the general and special findings of the court under that act. They belong to the record as fully as do the verdicts of a jury.[96]

b. Hearing of Motions.—On the other hand, the proceedings at the hearing by the court of a motion, such as a motion to remand a cause removed from a state court, must in some proper manner be brought into the record.[97]

c. Under the Provisions of Special Statutes.—If a court can only review cases tried without a jury, as it would review cases tried by a jury, it can only review them for errors apparent upon the record, or incorporated in a bill of exceptions.[98]

6. Direct Appeals under Court of Appeals Act.—A bill of exceptions is necessary, on a direct review of a question of jurisdiction under the act of 1891, for the consideration of extraneous matter, such as the testimony of the plaintiff.[99]

7. Appeals from Intermediate Appellate Courts.—On appeals from intermediate appellate courts, a new bill of exceptions is unnecessary. The bill originally filed will suffice.[1]

D. Other Methods than the Bill of Exceptions—1. In General.—It is well settled that the rulings of the court during the progress of a trial, or the court's charge to the jury, can be placed on the record for re-examination in out the intervention of a jury, although there was no jury trial, still the rulings of the court, under the peculiar practice in the Louisiana district, may be examined in this court upon writ of error, and the judgment reversed or affirmed by a bill of exceptions, in the same manner as if there had been a jury trial. They may also be revised here upon a state of facts found by the court, but the question presented in the court below and decided by the court must be clearly stated. Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15, 15 L. Ed. 30; Newell v. Nixon, 4 Wall. 572, 581, 18 L. Ed. 305. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 1027.

Before questions presented and decided at a hearing by the court can be re-examined on the writ of error, they must be brought into the record by bill of exceptions, or an agreed statement of facts, a special finding in the nature of a special verdict, or in some other way known to the practice of courts of error for the accomplishment of that purpose. 99. Direct appeals under act of March 3d, 1891.—"Whilst we must consider, on a direct review of a question of jurisdiction under the act of 1891, the record for the purpose of determining the question of jurisdiction which the certificate shows adequately to have been raised, we may not consider, in passing upon that question, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, the extraneous matter, such as the testimony of the plaintiff, etc., which forms no part of the record." 1. Appeals from intermediate appellate courts.—Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418, 24 L. Ed. 437.

Appeals in bankruptcy cases.—It has been held where a bankruptcy cause was removed from the district into the circuit court, where the parties were again heard, and the circuit court affirmed the decree of the district court, and the defendant accordingly sued out a writ of error, and removed the cause to the supreme court for re-examination, that cases of the kind may be re-examined in the supreme court as well as in the circuit court upon the bill of exceptions filed in the district court. Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418, 24 L. Ed. 437.

Appeals from territorial courts.—On writ of error sued out from the supreme court of the territory of Utah, the original bill of exceptions, signed by the trial judge, certified by the clerk of the trial court and by the clerk of the supreme court of Utah, transmitted with and filed with the record of the case, was held sufficiently authenticated and identified. Bassett v. United States, 137 U. S. 496, 34 L. Ed. 762.

the supreme court in no other manner than by bill of exceptions.[2] Accordingly it has been held by the federal supreme court that statements or entries in the minutes of the case,[3] such as the notes or entries of the judge,[4] or

"True it is that the transcript contains what purport to be certain instructions asked and refused, marked filed by the clerk. True also is it that there is in the printed transcript a petition and other papers concerning the evidence given before the jury, to which we have referred in the statement of the case. And it is also true that there is in the printed transcript an agreement between counsel, reciting that the court allowed the prayer of the petition. But in the absence of a bill of exceptions, allowed and authenticated by the judge, these documents form no part of the record in this court, which we have alone the right to consider in determining the merits of the errors assigned. Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 23 L. Ed. 260; Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 593, 40 L. 3. Statements or entries in the minutes.—"Where exceptions are taken to the ruling of the court in the course of a trial to the jury, such an entry is frequently made in the minutes of the case, or of the presiding justice, as evidence of the fact, and as a means of preserving the rights of the party in case the verdict should be against him and he should desire to have the case re-examined in the appellate tribunal, but it was never supposed that such an entry could be of any benefit to the party unless he seasonably availed himself of the right to reduce the same to writing, and took proper measures to have the bill of exceptions sealed by the judge presiding at the trial, or, in other words, such an entry in the minutes can only be regarded as evidence of the right of the party seasonably to demand a bill of exceptions, but it is not the same thing, and has never been so considered in the Federal courts, or in any other jurisdiction where the rules and practice of the common law prevail." Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 598, 17 L. Ed. 638, quoted with approval in Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 172, 24 L. Ed. 383, and cited in Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117. See Friedenstein v. United States, 125 U. S. 224, 230, 31 L. Ed. 736.

Unless an exception is reduced to writing and sealed by the judge, it is not a bill of exceptions within the meaning of the statute authorizing it, and it does not become part of the record. Were it otherwise, then a bill of exceptions would never be necessary; because if the statement in the minutes is sufficient in one case, it must be in all, which cannot for a moment be admitted, as it would overturn the unbroken practice in courts of error from the passage of the Statute of Westminster to the present time. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 600, 17 L. Ed. 638.

Refusal of instructions.—Where prayers for instructions to the jury are duly presented by the plaintiffs and refused by the court, and other and different instructions were given in their place, but no bill of exceptions in that behalf was tendered by the plaintiffs, or signed or sealed by the court, a statement in the minutes that the plaintiffs excepted in law as well to the refusal of the court to instruct the jury as requested, as to the instructions given, and that the exceptions and the evidence are hereby made record, cannot be of any benefit to the party. Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 18 L. Ed. 704, citing Pomeroy v. Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 598, 17 L. Ed 638.

Instructions requested or given rest in parol and do not, in the practice of the federal supreme court, or in any other court where the common law prevails, become a part of the record, unless made so by a regular bill of exceptions, sealed by the judge who presided at the trial; and it is the well-settled practice in this court that an entry of the ruling in the minutes cannot be of any benefit to the party unless he seasonably reduces the same to form and causes it to be sealed by the judge. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 598, 17 L. Ed. 638; Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 675, 18 L. Ed. 704, cited in Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

4. Judge's notes do not constitute a bill of exceptions.—United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. Ed. 643; Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638; Generes v. Bonnemer, 7 Wall. 564, 19 L. Ed. 287; Avendano v. Gay, 8 Wall. 376, 19 L. Ed. 422.

"And it has been ruled that the judge's notes do not constitute a bill of exceptions. They are but memoranda from which a formal bill may afterwards be drawn up and sealed. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638. There it was said: 'When exceptions are taken to the ruling of the court, in the course of a trial, to the jury, such an entry is frequently made in the minutes of the case, or of the presiding justice, as evidence of the fact, and as a means of pre-clerk,[5] or a certificate of the clerk,[6] the notes of a stenographer,[7] the affidavits, serving the rights of the party in case the verdict should be against him, and he should desire to have the case re-examined in the appellate tribunal; but it was never supposed that such an entry could be of any benefit to the party unless he seasonably availed himself of the right to reduce the same to writing, and took proper measures to have the bill of exceptions sealed by the judge presiding at the trial, or, in other words, such an entry in the minutes can only be regarded as evidence of the right of the party seasonably to demand a bill of exceptions; but it is not the same thing, and it has never been so considered in the federal courts.'" Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 172, 24 L. Ed. 383, cited in Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117

The entries on a judge's minutes, the memoranda of an exception, taken, are not themselves bills of exception, but are only evidences of the parties right seasonably to demand a bill of exceptions; memoranda, in fact, for preserving the rights of the party in case the verdict should be against him, and he should desire to have the case reviewed in an appellate tribunal. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638, cited in Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

5. Statements or entries of the clerk.—Even if the facts occurred as certified by the clerk, his statement that they occurred does not bring them upon the record so as to make them the subject of review. There is but one mode of bringing upon the record and making a part of it the rulings of a judge during the progress of a trial, or his charge to the jury, and that is by a bill of exceptions allowed and sealed or signed by the judge. Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 383.

It is no part of the duty of the clerk to note in his entries the exceptions taken, or to note any other proceedings of counsel, except as they are preliminary to, or the basis of, the orders or judgment of the court. Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418, cited in Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

It is no part of the clerk's duty, nor has he authority as clerk, to state upon the record what was offered in evidence on the trial, or what opinions were expressed by the court in relation to the evidence, otherwise than is stated in the bill of exceptions. The statements of the clerk, so far as they are contrary to the statements verified by the seal of the judge, must be wholly disregarded. De La Croix v. Chamberlain, 12 Wheat. 599, 6 L. Ed. 741.

Statements of clerk as to filing of demurrer.—In Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418, where entries had been made by the clerk in his minutes, stating the filing of a demurrer, argument thereon and overruling of the demurrer, and that exception had been taken by plaintiff, it was held that the exception was not available. The court said (p. 356): "These entries do not present the action of the court and the exceptions in such form that we can take any notice of them. It is no part of the duty of the clerk to note in his entries the exceptions taken, or to note any other proceedings of counsel, except as they are preliminary to, or the basis of, the orders or judgment of the court." Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 330, 49 L. Ed. 219.

Mere memorandum made by clerk.—The entries of a clerk of a territorial district court, stating in a general way the proceedings had in that court, and that they were excepted to by counsel, do not present the action of the court and the exceptions taken in such form that they can be considered by this court. Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418, cited in Lewis v. Wilson, 151 U. S. 551, 554, 38 L. Ed. 267; Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

6. Certificate of clerk on hearing of motion.—In determining a question whether a circuit court had erred in denying a motion to remand a case removed to it from the state court, and giving judgment as if the case had been rightly removed to it, this court cannot pay any attention to a certificate of the clerk of such circuit court, certifying that on the hearing of the motion in the circuit court certain things "appeared," "were proved," or "were admitted," or "agreed to" by the parties respectively; such facts not appearing by bill of exception nor by any case stated. Neither party can gain any advantage by such a statement. "It is true, the clerk makes a recital, running through nearly three pages of the transcript, of the various matters which, he says, were proved on the hearing of this motion, and of certain stipulations and admissions. These recitals form no part of the record and cannot be considered by us. They are not even authenticated by the signature of the judge, nor could they be, to be made available here, except through the mode of a bill of exceptions." Knapp v. Railroad Co., 20 Wall. 117, 121, 22 L. Ed. 328.

7. Notes of stenographer.—"Minutes of the judge or clerk, or notes of a stenographer, cannot take the place of a bill of exceptions, but are only memoranda by the aid of which one may afterwards be drawn up." Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117, citing Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638; Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 18 L. Ed. 704; Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, agreements or stipulations of the parties,[8] a paper in the transcript denominated the "case,"[9] and a paper called an assignment of error, but which refers to no exceptions then taken,[10] do not constitute, and cannot take the place of, a bill of exceptions.

2. Agreed Statement of Facts, Special Verdict and Demurrer—a. In General.—While final judgments in a circuit court in some cases may be re-examined in the federal supreme court, and reversed or affirmed upon a writ of error, founded upon an agreed statement of facts, a special verdict, a demurrer to a material pleading, or a demurrer to evidence,[11] yet, as we have already shown, none of these modes enable the complaining party to review or re-examine the rulings of the court, except the bill of exceptions.[12] In other words, there is but one mode of bringing upon the record and making a part of it the rulings of a judge during the progress of a trial, or his charge to the jury, and that is by a bill of exceptions.[13]

b. Agreed Statement of Facts—(1) In General.—Although, where the record

8. Affidavits and stipulations.—A party cannot by merely filing with the clerk an affidavit not incorporated in any bill of exceptions, bring into the record evidence of what took place on the trial. Nelson v. Flint, 166 U. S. 276, 279, 41 L. Ed. 1002.

"That parties, by their affidavits or agreements, cannot cause that to become a bill of exceptions which is not such in a legal sense, is settled. Nelson v. Flint, 166 U. S. 276, 279, 41 L. Ed. 1002; Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 285, 44 L. Ed. 163, and cases cited." Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 49 L. Ed. 219.

Stipulations cannot take the place of a bill of exceptions. South Carolina v. Wesley, 155 U. S. 542, 39 L. Ed. 254.

9. Paper in transcript denominated the "case."—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978; Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638.

Therefore, where a paper was filed in the court below after the writ of error was issued, which paper, purporting to contain all the evidence, both admitted and rejected, was signed by the judge and certified to be correct by the counsel of the appellee, and concluded as follows: "A verdict was then, by direction of the court, taken for the plaintiffs for the premises claimed, subject to the opinion of the court upon the questions of law, with liberty to turn this case into a special verdict or bill of exceptions," this paper cannot be considered a part of the record. In this case, the paper is merely a report of the judge who presided at the trial, and as such must be disregarded by this court. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978.

10. A paper called an assignment of error.—In Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 383, the transcript exhibited a paper dated November 19, 1874, called an assignment of error, signed by the attorney of one of the parties, and filed on that day, setting forth that in the foregoing record and proceedings various errors appeared, and describing them. The paper appears to have been served on the plaintiff's attorney, and on the same day it was indorsed "Exceptions overruled. John Erskine, Judge." Held, this paper is not a bill of exceptions taken or noted at the trial, because it refers to no exceptions then taken.

12. Rulings of court can be reviewed by the bill of exceptions alone.—Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638; Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 62, 15 L. Ed. 265. See ante, "Other Methods Considered," III, A, 2, e, (4), (c).

"Final judgments in a circuit court may be re-examined in this court and reversed or affirmed upon a writ of error, founded upon an agreed statement of facts, a special verdict, a demurrer to a material pleading, or a demurrer to evidence, as well as by a bill of exceptions; but none of the other modes will enable the appellate court to revise the rulings of the court in refusing to instruct the jury as requested, or the instructions as given, or the rulings of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence. Such rulings rest in parol and can only be incorporated into the record by a bill of exceptions, and of course cannot be re-examined in any other way. None of the other modes suggested, say the court, in the case of Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638, enable the complaining party to review or re-examine the rulings of the court, except that of the bill of exceptions, and we reaffirm that rule." Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. 663, 675, 18 L. contains only an agreed statement of facts, this is not such a transcript as will satisfy the eleventh and thirty-first rules of the supreme court,[14] yet the practice of bringing cases up to the federal supreme court upon an agreed statement of facts is well established by many decisions of that court.[15]

(2) Form and Sufficiency.—The agreed statement must state the facts themselves, not merely the evidence of facts,[16] and no mere agreement of counsel can substitute evidence of facts in place of facts.[17] Nor can a paper be used as an

Decisions of the supreme court establish the rule that writs of error will lie where the judgment in the court below was founded upon an agreed statement of facts, as well as when founded upon the verdict of a jury. United States v. Eliason, 16 Pet. 291, 10 L. Ed. 968; Stimpson v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 10 How. 328, 329, 13 L. Ed. 441; Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 15 L. "It is true, that when there is no dispute as to the facts, counsel may agree on a case stated in the nature of a special verdict; and the judgment of the court below on such case stated, or verdict, may be reviewed here on a writ of error. See Stimpson v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 10 How. 328, 329, 13 L. Ed. 441." Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 62, 15 L. Ed. 265.

16. Agreed statement must give the facts themselves.—Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. 1, 7 L. Ed. 327; United States v. Eliason, 16 Pet. 291, 300, 10 L. Ed. 968; United States v. King, 7 How. 833, 844, 12 L. Ed. 934; Bond v. Brown, 12 How. 254, 256, 13 L. Ed. 977; Weems v. George, 13 How. 190, 14 L. An agreed statement of facts which merely gives the evidence as it was introduced on the one side and the other, and leaves the results of the evidence to be found by the court, as if sitting as a jury, is insufficient. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638.

A bill of exceptions which is nothing more than a recapitulation of conflicting evidence is not a sufficient statement of facts by the parties. Raimond v. Terrebonne Parish, 132 U. S. 192, 33 L. Ed. 309; Davenport v. Paris, 136 U. S. 580, 34 L. Ed. 548.

A cause must be treated as in the nature of a bill of exceptions, and not in the nature of a case stated, that is, a substitute for a special verdict, where the writ of error does not bring up a mere statement of facts, but a mass of testimony. Parsons v. Armor, 3 Pet. 413, 7 L. Ed. 724.

The agreed statement of facts on which this court will inquire, if there is or is not error in the application of the law to them, is a statement of the ultimate facts or propositions which the evidence is intended to establish, and not the evidence on which those ultimate facts are supposed to rest. The statement must be sufficient in itself, without inferences or comparisons, or balancing of testimony, or weighing evidence, to justify the application of the legal principles which must determine the case. It must leave none of the functions of a jury to be discharged by this court, but must have all the sufficiency, fullness, and perspicuity of a special verdict. If it requires of the court to weigh conflicting testimony, or to balance admitted facts, and deduce from these the propositions of fact on which alone a legal conclusion can rest, then it is not such a statement as this court can act upon. The paper before us "is evidence of facts, and not the facts themselves as agreed or found." Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 62, 15 L. Ed. 265; Burr v. Des Moines R., etc., Co., 1 Wall. 99, 102, 17 L. Ed. 561.

17. No mere agreement of counsel can substitute evidence of facts in place of facts, or require the opinion of this court on an imperfect statement of them. A writ of error cannot by these methods be converted into a chancery appeal, nor a court of error into appellate arbitrators. Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 63, 15 L. Ed. 265. See Hartranft v. Wiegmann, 121 U. S. 609, 613, 30 L. Ed. 1012.

"The counsel in this case have agreed, that 'if it should be necessary to a hearing of this cause in the supreme court, to treat the evidence in the nature of a special verdict,' this agreement may be good as between themselves, and point out the source from which the facts for a case stated, or special verdict, may be drawn, but it cannot compel this court to search through the evidence to find out the agreed statement of facts, which does not contain the rulings of the court which the plaintiff desires to have revised.[18]

(3) Must Be Made Part of Record.—The agreed statement of facts must, in some manner in the court below, be made a part of the record of the case.[19]

(4) Scope of Review.—Agreed statements rest upon the consent of the parties, and, consequently, the action of the revising tribunal must be confined to the agreed facts; but the facts cannot be said to be agreed while the parties are at issue as to the admissibility or competency of the evidence.[20]

c. Special Verdict—(1) In General.—Matters resting in parol may also be made a part of the record so as to become re-examinable in a court of errors by a special verdict, if put in due form.[21]

(2) Form and Sufficiency.—A special verdict like an agreed statement of facts must find the facts themselves.[22] But though the finding of the jury is not in the usual form of a special verdict, yet if the counsel for both parties in the court below have treated the findings as amounting to a special verdict, the appellate court will overlook any irregularities.[23]

(3) Rendition and Entry of Judgment.—Where there is a case stated, or spe-

facts. The record exhibits the testimony and evidence laid before the judge. It is evidence of facts, but not the facts themselves as agreed or found." Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 62, 15 L. Ed. 265.

18. Agreed statement must contain rulings of court.—An agreed statement of facts which does not contain the rulings of the court which the plaintiff desires to have revised, is insufficient. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638.

19. Agreed statement must be made part of record.—New Orleans Railroad v. Morgan, 10 Wall. 256, 260, 19 L. Ed. 892.

"It is very clear that a paper not signed by counsel, nor entered on the record of the court, nor made part of the record of the case by bill of exceptions, or in any other manner, cannot be considered by this court as the foundation on which it is to affirm or reverse the case." Burr v. Des Moines R., etc., Co., 1 Wall. 99, 101, 17 L. Ed. 561.

"The case of the United States v. Eliason, 16 Pet. 291, 10 L. Ed. 968, shows, that it was strongly urged upon this court that it had been laid down by Sir Wm. Blackstone in his Commentaries, and by Stephen in his Treatise on Pleadings, that error did not lie on such a statement. The court, however, said that the reason for this was, that in the English practice, the agreed statement was not like a special verdict entered on the record, and the appellate court could not therefore notice it. But that in the practice of our courts such agreements are signed by 'the counsel, and spread upon the record at large as part thereof.' And thus they become technically a part of the record, into which the appellate court look, with the other parts of it, to ascertain if there be error." Burr v. Des Moines R., etc., Co., 1 Wall. 99, 102, 17 L. Ed. 561, citing Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. 1, 7 L. Ed. 327; United States v. Eliason, 16 Pet. 291, 300, 10 L. Ed. 968; United States v. King, 7 How. 833, 844, 12 L. Ed. 934; Bond v. Brown, 12 How. 254, 256, 13 L. Ed. 977; Weems v. George, 13 How. 190, 14 L. Ed. 108; Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 7, 15 L. Ed. 30; Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 15 L. Ed. 265.

20. Scope of review.—Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 603, 17 L. Ed. 638.

21. Special verdict may be used to put matters on the record.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 435, 15 L. Ed. 978, Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638; Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall. 423, 18 L. Ed. 756; New Orleans Railroad v. Morgan, 10 Wall. 256, 260, 19 L. Ed. 892; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 23 L. Ed. 260; Worthington v. Mason, 101 U. S. 149, 152, 25 L. Ed. 848. See, generally, the title VERDICT.

Special verdicts having a conditional or alternative finding are the proper foundation of a judgment for either party, as the law of the case on the facts found may require, and consequently the judgment of the subordinate court on such a verdict, whether for plaintiff or defendant, may be re-examined in the appellate tribunal without any bill of exceptions. Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall. 423, 433, 18 L. Ed. 756, citing Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 432, 15 L. Ed. 978.

22. Form and sufficiency of special verdict.—If a special verdict be ambiguous, or imperfect—if it find but the evidence of facts, and not the facts themselves, or finds but part of the facts in issue, and is silent as to others—it is a mistrial, and the court of error must order a venire de novo. They can render no judgment on an imperfect verdict, or case stated. Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 63, 15 L. Ed. 265, citing Prentice v. Zane, 8 How. 470, 484, 12 L. Ed. 1160.

23. When irregularities in special verdict disregarded.—Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall. 423, 18 L. Ed. 756; Hartranft v. Wiegmann, 121 U. S. 609, 613, 30 L. Ed. 1012.

cial verdict, the court of errors must not only reverse the judgment below, if found erroneous, but enter a correct and final judgment.[24]

d. Demurrer to the Evidence.—Matters resting in parol may be made a part of the record so as to become re-examinable in a court of errors, by a demurrer to the evidence; though this mode is seldom or never adopted in modern practice.[25]

e. Review of Causes from District of Columbia.—Special verdicts and demurrers to the evidence might well have been substituted for the tedious and embarrassing practice which prevailed in the old circuit court for the District of Columbia.[26] But either a case or bill of exceptions may be used upon appeals from the special to the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.[27]

f. Disadvantages Attending These Methods Pointed Out.—Since, it is well settled by the repeated decisions of the supreme court that the rulings of the court below cannot be reviewed or re-examined by an agreed statement of facts,[28] a special verdict,[29] or upon demurrer to evidence,[30] it will be readily Judgments of the circuit court may also be revised here upon writ of error, in cases where they were founded upon a special verdict, or upon demurrer to evidence. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 435, 15 L. Ed. 978; 4 Chitty's Gen. Prac., 7; 2 Inst., 427; Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638.

Evidence must first be admitted before it is properly the subject of demurrer, and when a party elects that mode of trying the case, he thereby waives all objections to the rulings of the court in respect to evidence rejected, as well as to that previously admitted, so that in no point of view can the paper under consideration be regarded as sufficient to lay the foundation for a revision of the rulings which are the subject of complaint. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 603, 17 L. Ed. 638.

It is not competent to revise the rulings of the court below by an agreed statement of facts. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638, citing 2 Tidd's Practice 896.

Rulings upon the evidence.—Where there is no dispute in regard to the facts, and consequently no necessity for any ruling of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence, the case may be brought before an appellate court by a special verdict or an agreed statement of facts. But in such a case, the previous rulings of the court upon questions of evidence do not come before the appellate court, unless brought up by a bill of exceptions. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978.

This court cannot give judgment as on an agreed statement of facts or case stated, except where facts, and facts only, are stated. If there be question as to the competency or effect of evidence, or any rulings of the court below upon evidence to be examined, the court cannot entertain the case as an agreed statement. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638, affirming Burr v. Des Moines R., etc., Co., 1 Wall. 99, 17 L. Ed. 561.

29. Rulings of court not examinable by special verdict.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 435, 15 L. Ed. 978; Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638. See the title VERDICT.

Rulings of court in admitting or rejecting evidence.—Special verdicts are where the jury find the facts of the case, and upon those facts refer the decision of the cause to the court, with a conditional conclusion, that if the court should be of opinion that the plaintiff, upon the facts found, has a good cause for action, then they find for the plaintiff; but if otherwise, then they find for the defendant. Rulings of the court, however, in admitting or rejecting evidence, are never properly included in a special verdict, any more than in an agreed statement of facts; because, when reduced to form, the verdict is then entered on the record, and the judgment of the court is based upon the findings of the jury. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 432, 15 L. Ed. 978; Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 603, 17 L. Ed. 638.

30. Rulings of court not examinable upon demurrer to evidence.—Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 435, 15 L. Ed. 978; Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638. See the title DEMURRER TO THE EVIDENCE, ante, p. 289.

seen that none of these methods are near so comprehensive as the bill of exceptions, and hence are seldom used.[31]

3. STATEMENT OF THE CASE—a. In General.—It was held in an early case that the federal supreme court will not take cognizance of any suit or controversy brought before them by a statement of the case.[32]

b. Statement of Case on Appeal from Territorial Courts.—In General.—But in Arizona,[33] Idaho,[34] Montana,[35] Nevada,[36] and Utah,[37] under the territorial practice, a statement of the case takes the place of a bill of exceptions, when the alleged errors of law are set forth with sufficient matter to show the relevancy of the points taken.[38] This statement is only another name for a

A bill of exceptions may include in its scope the rulings of the court as to the admissibility of evidence, which a demurrer to evidence cannot do. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978.

31. Other modes than bill are seldom used.—"Other modes are known to the practice of this court, by which the evidence produced against a party may in certain cases be put on the record either in whole or in part, according to the circumstances, so as to secure the right to have the questions of law arising upon it revised on a writ of error; but every proceeding of that kind is either so limited in its application or so tied up by conditions, that they are seldom of much practical importance, and are only referred to on the present occasion to confirm the proposition already advanced, that no ancillary step in the cause is of any avail to a party as laying the foundation to support a writ of error, any farther than it has the effect to place on the record what otherwise would rest in parol. * * * The bill of exceptions was always the more comprehensive remedy, because it extended, as it still does, not only to the facts in the case, but also to the rulings of the court in admitting or rejecting evidence, and to the instructions given to the jury upon its legal effect." If a so-called statement of facts under the Arizona Revised Statutes is not a statement of facts in the nature of a special verdict made and certified by the court below under the act of April 7th, 1874, c. 80, 18 Stat. 27, 28, this court will presume that the evidence supports the judgment. A so-called statement, which merely embodies the evidence, is not a compliance with the statute. Cohn v. Daley, 174 U. S. 539, 43 L. Ed. 1077.

35. "Statement on appeal" used in Montana.—The code of civil procedure of Montana provides for a statement of the case to be used on appeal, which shall state specifically the particular errors or grounds upon which the appellant intends to rely, and which seems to take the place of an ordinary bill of exceptions. Bogk v. Gassert, 149 U. S. 17, 23, 37 L. Ed. 631.

In Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 348, 34 L. Ed. 681, which was an appeal from the supreme court of the territory, the proceedings on the trial were embodied in a statement prepared like that for the purpose of a motion for a new trial; but, in addition, it was authenticated by the trial judge as a correct statement of the proceedings. Further than that, at the trial a bill of exceptions was prepared in respect to the rulings of the court on instructions, signed by the trial judge and filed at the time, which bill of exceptions was incorporated in the statement. Held, that this was a perfect bill of exceptions as to the ruling of the court on the matter of instructions; and a statement of all the proceedings in the trial, approved by counsel and authenticated by the trial judge. This proceeding was authorized by the statutes of Montana, and is sufficient for the purposes of review here, distinguishing Kerr v. Clampitt, 95 U. S. 188, 24 L. Ed. 493.

37. Removal of causes from Utah.—Kerr v. Clampitt, 95 U. S. 188, 24 L. Ed. 493.

The statute of Utah also provides the mode in which the final judgments of its district courts may be reviewed. It requires a statement of the errors alleged upon which the appellant relies, with so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain them. Compiled Laws of Utah of 1876, §§ 1413, 1550, and 1555. Kerr v. Clampitt, 95 U. S. 188, 190, 24 L. Ed. 493, reaffirmed in Copper King v. Johnson, 195 U. S. 627, 49 L. Ed. 351.

38. Sufficiency of statement.—A statement of the case, according to the law regulating civil proceedings in the territory, takes the place of a bill of exceptions, when the alleged errors of law are set forth with sufficient matter to show the relevancy of the points taken. It is not the less available on appeal from the judgment when, by stipulation, it is em-

bill of exceptions, and is subject to similar rules;[39] hence, if it is not in compliance with the statute, the judgment of the lower court will be affirmed.[40]

Stipulations.—It will often embody substantially the same matters which are presented on a motion for a new trial, and it is not uncommon for counsel to stipulate that the statement on the motion shall be treated as a statement or bill of exceptions on appeal from the judgment. But, unless it is so stipulated, the statement intended for the motion cannot be used on appeal from the judgment, or considered by the supreme court.[41]

4. SUMMARY.—We have now adverted to the several methods acknowledged by courts of error, by which matters resting in parol at the trial in the subordinate tribunal may be put on the record, so as to lay a proper foundation for a revision of the legal questions arising out of them in the appellate court, and there are no others which can be recognized in the federal supreme court in cases where the proceedings are required to be according to the course of the common law.[42]

E. Changing Case into Special Verdict or Bill of Exceptions—1. IN GENERAL.—The trial court may give either party the liberty to turn a case made into a special verdict or bill of exceptions.[43]

Agreed Case.—But where the case made, which by the terms of the verdict either party was at liberty to turn into a bill of exceptions, sets forth the entire evidence adduced at the trial, but is not an agreed statement of facts, nor a special verdict, nor a finding of facts by the court, and contains no exceptions, it cannot be treated as the basis for any assignment of errors.[44]

2. NECESSITY FOR MAKING ELECTION.—Where for some reason the right to make the change has never been exercised in the court below, it is too late to make the alteration for the first time in the supreme court.[45]

3. NECESSITY FOR OBTAINING LEAVE OF COURT.—It would seem, however, that the option to turn a case either into a special verdict or a bill of exceptions, cannot be exercised without the assent of the judge who presided at the trial, and irrespective of his authority.[46] On the contrary, where a case shall be made with leave to turn the same into a special verdict or bill of exceptions, the party shall not be at liberty to do either, at his election, but the court may, if they think proper, prescribe the one which he shall adopt.[47]

Exceptions to the order of the court in granting a new trial do not lie in any case, and the losing party in case of judgment in a special case cannot except to the rulings of the court during the trial, unless he seasonably reserved the right to turn the special case into a bill of exceptions, because the court has no power, unless otherwise agreed, to render any judgment except upon the verdict of the jury. is brought to the federal supreme court upon a writ of error, and there is no bill of exceptions, agreed statement, or special verdict in the transcript, the general rule is, that the judgment will be affirmed,[48] without opinion.[49]

b. Reason of Rule.—The reason for this rule grows out of another rule[50] equally well settled that the absence of a bill of exceptions, etc., only shows that there is no error in the proceedings.[51]

c. Rule in Territorial Courts.—And these rules apply to appeals from the territorial courts.[52]

Where no bill of exceptions is taken in the case, nor is there any finding of facts, nor any case stated by the parties analogous to a special verdict in stating the ultimate facts of the case, presenting questions of law only, the judgment will be affirmed. Glenn v. Fant, 134 U. S. 398, 33 L. Ed. 969.

It is well settled that it is no ground to dismiss the writ of error because there is no bill of exceptions, agreed statement of facts, or material demurrer in the record presenting any question of law for the decision of the appellate court, as the absence of every such question is good cause for affirming the judgment, but it is not a good ground for dismissing the writ of error. 50. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 2, p. 392.

51. Reason of rule.—Error may be shown in such a case by a bill of exceptions or by a demurrer to the declaration, or a material pleading, or it may appear by an agreed statement of facts, if made a part of the record, or in a special verdict, if put in due form; but even when all these are wanting it is no cause for dismissing the suit, because the writ of error issued to a circuit court under that section brings up the whole record, and their absence only shows that there is no error in the proceedings; and if there is no error in any part of the record the prevailing party in the circuit court is entitled to an affirmance of the judgment. Presumptions on appeal.—In the absence of a bill of exceptions the supreme court will presume that all the issues are tried which were presented in due form for trial, or which the parties desire to be disposed of, though the jury were sworn to try only the issue. Brooklyn v. Insurance Co., 99 U. S. 362, 24 L. Ed. 416.

53. Dismissal for want of bill of exceptions, etc.—"Where a case is brought here upon a writ of error issued under the 22d section of the judiciary act, and there is neither bill of exceptions, agreed statement, nor special verdict brought up, the judgment, generally speaking, will be affirmed; as it was in this case. Burr v. Des Moines R., etc., Co., 1 Wall. 99, 17 L. Ed. 561, where the case was "dismissed," simply, was special in its circumstances." Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638.

"Special circumstances induced the court, in Burr v. Des Moines R., etc., Co., decided at the present term (ante, p. 99), to dismiss the writ of error, and allow the parties an opportunity to make a further effort to present the case in some proper form; but the court in that case held that the legal presumption was in favor of the correctness of the judgment." Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 603, 17 L. Ed. 638.

Statement of case on appeal.—In Peyton v. Brooke, 3 Cranch 92, 93, 2 L. Ed. 376, Chief Justice Marshall said: "We wish to give general notice to the gentlemen of the bar, that unless statements of the case are furnished, according to the entered through inadvertence.[54]

IV. Form and Sufficiency.

A. Of Bill of Exceptions—1. In General.—Authority was conferred, by the seventeenth section of the judiciary act, upon all the courts of the United States, to make and establish all the necessary rules for the ordinary conducting of business in the said courts, provided such rules were not repugnant to the laws of the United States.[55] Pursuant to that authority the several circuit courts, immediately after the judicial system of the United States was organized, adopted the form for bills of exceptions as known at common law, and the practice has been uniformly followed to the present time, without question or any material variation. Bills of exceptions, therefore, in the federal courts, are required to be drawn as at common law, under the statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I, chap. 31), passed in the year 1825.[56] Therefore, the earlier forms under the statute giving the bills of exceptions are models which it would be wise to consult and adhere to.[57]

2. Caption.—Though the transcript should be styled or headed a "Bill of Exceptions" in the caption,[58] it has been held that a paper entitled a "case and exceptions" is a sufficient bill, where it has all the requisites of a bill, except the mere name.[59] In other words, a paper incorporated in the record, and certified to be a part thereof by the court below, if it has all the requisites of a bill of exceptions, will be considered by the supreme court as such, although it be otherwise entitled.[60]

3. Separate Bills—a. In General.—While according to the old practice separate bills of exceptions were generally taken for each exception noted at the trial,[61] and while it is still permissible to prepare either one bill containing rule, the causes must either be dismissed or continued."

54. Cases of dismissal reconciled.—Where there is no bill of exceptions, and nothing upon which error can be assigned, the regular practice is to affirm the judgments, not to dismiss. "Counsel for the appellee has referred us to an order dismissing a writ of error at the last term, under circumstances like those of the case before us. This order must have been entered through inadvertence, and cannot be drawn into a precedent." James v. Bank, 7 Wall. 692, 693, 19 L. Ed. 275.

Practice in cases removed from Louisiana.—Whether or not a record contains a bill of exceptions or statement of facts by the court, according to the practice in Louisiana, by which any question of law is brought up for revision in such a form as to enable this court to decide upon it, is a question to be decided only upon the final hearing of the cause. The court will not go into this inquiry upon a motion to dismiss the writ of error, before the cause is taken up for argument. Minor v. Tillotson, 1 How. 287, 11 L. Ed. 134.

For the form of a bill of exceptions, see Generes v. Campbell, 11 Wall. 193, 194, 20 L. Ed. 110; Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews, 117 U. S. 282, 29 L. Ed. 905.

57. Earlier forms should be adhered to.—Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 11 L. Ed. 979.

58. The bill must be entitled as such.—Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews, 117 U. S. 282, 29 L. Ed. 905; Origet v. United States, 125 U. S. 240, 31 L. Ed. 743.

The document claimed to be a bill should properly be entitled a "bill of exceptions." Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 319, 24 L. Ed. 958.

For the form of a caption, see Bassett v. United States, 137 U. S. 496, 502, 34 L. Ed. 762.

59. What is a sufficient entitling.—Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 319, 24 L. Ed. 958.

A document which commences as follows: "The following case and exceptions is agreed on by the attorneys for Jasper K. Herbert, plaintiff, and Benjamin F. Butler, defendant," then follow the title of the cause, a record of the proceedings had, and the evidence given at the trial, including the rulings of the judge and the exceptions thereto; and the case thus presented closes with the judge's certificate as follows: "Settled as within, pursuant to the above consent. Sept. 19, 1875. (Signed) Charles L. Benedict," was held a sufficient bill of exceptions, because it has all the requisites of a bill except the mere name. Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 319, 24 L. Ed. 958.

several exceptions, or several bills each containing one exception,[62] yet every exception taken at the trial may be put into one bill of exceptions, which practice makes the record less voluminous. It is not necessary that each exception be embodied in a separate bill;[63] indeed, the practice is very inconvenient and entails unnecessary labor.[64]

b. Submission of Controversy.—The correct practice in cases submitted to a court without a jury is for the court to make its finding of facts and its conclusions of law a separate paper from pleadings or bills of exceptions.[65]

4. Definiteness and Certainty in the Bill.—The object of a bill of exceptions is to put on record rulings and instructions in matter of law which could not otherwise be a subject of revision in a court of error. The excepting party, in order to entitle himself to such revision, must not only allege exceptions at the trial or hearing, but he must afterwards draw up and hand to the presiding judge those exceptions in writing, stating distinctly and specifically the rulings or instructions of which he complains.[66] This is also required by a rule of court.[67]

63. A single bill is sufficient.—Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638, followed in Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508; Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. Ed. 1150.

64. A single bill is preferable in practice.—"Several exceptions have been taken to the opinion of the court below, which will be considered in the order in which the objections arising out of them have been presented to us. We are sorry to say, that the practice of filing numerous bills of exception is very inconvenient; for all the points of law might be brought before the court in a single bill, with a simplicity, which would relieve the bar and the bench from every unnecessary embarrassment." 66. Bill must distinctly state rulings and instructions complained of.—2 Inst. 426; Step. Pl. (1st Am. Ed.) 111; Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 29, 14 L. Ed. 824; Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418; Insurance Co. v. Sea, 21 Wall. 158, 22 L. Ed. 511; Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117; Lees v. United States, 150 U. Every bill of exceptions must state and point out distinctly the errors of which complaint is made. The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 389, 26 L. Ed. 1100.

When there is nothing in the record to show specifically what was excepted to, but where all is general—as, for example, when at the end of the bill of exceptions and immediately preceding the signature of the judge, are the words "exceptions allowed," and nothing to indicate the application of the exceptions—so that the exception, if it amounts to anything, covers the whole record—this court will not regard the exception. It should have presented specifically and distinctly the ruling objected to. Insurance Co. v. Sea, 21 Wall. 158, 22 L. Ed. 511.

Where the bill of exceptions in so far as it relates to the charge, specifies with distinctness the parts of the charge excepted to and the legal propositions to which exceptions were taken, it is not open to the objection that it is a mere transcript of the entire testimony and of the charge. Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 37 L. Ed. 1195, distinguishing Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

The exceptions must not leave it in doubt whether they point to instructions granted and refused to the jury, or to the refusal of the court below to grant a new trial. Because if to the latter, no question is presented upon which error would lie, according to the repeated decisions of the supreme court. Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850. As to the point that no error can be assigned to the refusal of the court below to grant a new trial, see the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 997.

67. Rule of court requiring statements in bill to be distinct.—Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722; United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 158, 13 L. Ed. 643; Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black 209, 17 L. Ed. 117; Phœnix Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 30 L. Ed. 644; Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall. 726, 735, 19 L. Ed. 769.

Rule 4 of this court provides: "The party excepting shall be required to state distinctly the several matters of law in such charge to which he excepts; and those matters of law, and those only, shall be inserted in the bill of exceptions and allowed by the court." Allis v. United States, 155 U. S. 117, 122, 39 L. Ed. 91.

5. COMPLETENESS.—Each bill of exceptions must present a substantial case and be complete in itself,[68] or by appropriate references to other parts of the record.[69] But a failure of the bill to contain any part of the charge to the jury cannot be supplied by referring to exhibits annexed.[70] Moreover, omissions in the bill cannot be supplied by any intendment of the court,[71] because the bill is the creature of statute, and the appellate court is restricted to the points stated.[72]

6. EXCEPTIONS AND OBJECTIONS.—In accordance with the well-settled rule of the federal supreme court, not to consider questions other than those of jurisdiction, which were not presented to the court whose judgment that court is asked to examine,[73] where neither party has objected to the imperfect form of a bill of exceptions, neither can complain.[74]

7. HEARING AND DETERMINATION—a. In General.—Where a paper in the transcript is not a good bill of exceptions, it must be wholly disregarded by the court in determining whether the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed or affirmed.[75] But although a bill of exceptions is imperfectly drawn, yet if the supreme court can ascertain the substance of the facts, and the questions on which the judge instructed the jury are apparent, it will proceed to decide the case.[76]

b. Dismissal or Affirmance.—And when the defendants have failed to reduce any of their exceptions to such a form that the supreme court can pass upon them, the judgment must be affirmed;[77] the question whether or not the record

68. Each bill must be complete in itself.—"Each bill of exceptions must be considered as presenting a distinct, substantive case; and it is on the evidence stated in itself alone, that the court is to decide. We cannot go beyond it, and collect other facts which must have been in the mind of the party, and the insertion of which in this bill of exceptions could alone have sanctioned the opinion as prayed for." Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch 242, 270, 3 L. Ed. 329, cited in Jones v. Buckell, 104 U. S. 554, 556, 26 L. Ed. 841.

69. Bill may contain references to other parts of record.—Jones v. Buckell, 104 U. S. 554, 556, 26 L. Ed. 841.

70. Incorporating the instructions.—Where the bill of exceptions, instead of stating distinctly, as required by law and the fourth rule of this court, those matters of law in the charge which are excepted to, and those only, does not contain any part of the charge, or any exception to it, and undertakes to supply the want by referring to exhibits annexed, containing all the evidence introduced at the trial, the whole charge to the jury, and notes of a desultory conversation which followed between the judge and the counsel on both sides, leaving it to this court to pick out from those notes, if possible, a sufficient statement of some ruling in matter of law, the bill of exceptions is insufficient. "To assume to do that would be to take upon ourselves the duty of drawing up a proper bill of exceptions, a duty which belonged to the excepting party, and should have been performed before suing out the writ of error. This we are not authorized to do. Our duty and authority are limited to determining the validity of exceptions duly framed and presented." Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 27, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

71. Omissions cannot be supplied by intendment.—Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch 242, 3 L. Ed. 329.

72. Appellate court is restricted to bill.—Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 297, 11 L. Ed. 979.

73. Exceptions and objections must be taken below.—Bassett v. United States, 137 U. S. 496, 501, 34 L. Ed. 762, citing Clark v. Fredericks, 105 U. S. 4, 26 L. Ed. 938. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 2, p. 83.

74. Objections to form of bill must be taken below.—United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. Ed. 643. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 2, p. 83.

75. Irregular bill will be disregarded.—"Having come to the conclusion that the paper in the transcript is not a good bill of exceptions, agreed statement of facts, or a special verdict, the result is that it is not a part of the record, and under the circumstances of this case, it must be wholly disregarded by the court in determining whether the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed or affirmed." contains a proper bill of exceptions or statement of facts, cannot be decided upon a motion to dismiss.[78]

B. Of Agreed Statement of Facts.—By the settled construction of the acts of congress defining the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court, a statement of facts by the parties is strictly analogous to a special verdict, and must state the ultimate facts of the case, presenting questions of law only, and not be a recital of evidence or of circumstances, which may tend to prove the ultimate facts, or from which they may be inferred.[79] Where the paper in the transcript is not a good agreed statement of facts, it is not a part of the record, and will be disregarded by the appellate court in determining whether the judgment of the court below ought to be reversed or affirmed.[80]

C. Authentication—1. SIGNING—a. Of Bill of Exceptions—(1) In General.—Except on appeals from the special to the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia,[81] a bill of exceptions to be available on appeal, must be signed by the presiding judge.[82] Where a bill of exceptions is not

78. Determination of regularity of bill on motion to dismiss.—Whether or not a record contains a bill of exceptions or statement of facts by the court, according to the practice of Louisiana, by which any question of law is brought up for revision in such a form as to enable this court to decide upon it; and whether or not there is a mass of various and conflicting testimony in relation to facts, upon which no jurisdiction can be exercised upon a writ of error, are questions to be decided only upon the final hearing of the cause. The court will not go into this inquiry upon a motion to dismiss the writ of error, before the cause is taken up for argument. Minor v. Tillotson, 1 How. 287, 11 L. Ed. 134.

79. Agreed statement must state ultimate facts.—Burr v. Des Moines R., etc., Co., 1 Wall. 99, 17 L. Ed. 561; Norris v. Jackson, 9 Wall. 125, 19 L. Ed. 608; Martinton v. Fairbanks, 112 U. "The statement of facts on which this court will inquire, if there is or is not error in the application of the law to them, is a statement of the ultimate facts or propositions which the evidence is intended to establish, and the evidence on which those ultimate facts are supposed to rest. The statement must be sufficient in itself, without inferences or comparisons, or balancing of testimony, or weighing evidence, to justify the application of the legal principles which must determine the case. It must leave none of the function of the jury to be discharged by this court, but must have all the sufficiency, fullness, and perspicuity of a special verdict. If it requires of the court to weigh conflicting testimony, or to balance admitted facts, and deduce from these the propositions of facts on which alone a legal conclusion can rest, then it is not such a statement as this court can act upon." To be of any avail, exceptions must not only be drawn up so as to present distinctly the ruling of the court upon the points raised, but they must be signed by the presiding judge. Unless so signed, they do not constitute any part of the record which can be considered by an appellate court. Williams v. Norris, 12 Wheat. 117, 119, 6 L. Ed. 571; Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 357, 19 L. Ed. 418, approved in Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 287, 44 L. Ed. 163.

"A special verdict requires the presence and assent of the court and a bill of exceptions must always be signed and sealed by the judge." Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978.

Section 953 of the Revised Statutes enacting that a bill of exceptions allowed in any cause shall be deemed sufficiently au-signed by the judge who tried the case, so that there is nothing to show that it was submitted to him, or in any way received his sanction, the judgment below will be affirmed.[83] Nor can the signature be dispensed with by an agreement of counsel.[84]

(2) By Whom Signed—(a) In General.—Whenever a bill of exceptions is necessary,[85] § 953 of the Revised Statutes provides that it shall be authenticated by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, or by the presiding judge thereof, if more than one judge sat on the trial of the cause.[86]

(b) By Successor in Office.—It cannot be signed by a judge who succeeded in office the judge who presided at the trial.[87]

(c) Where District Judge Presides in the Circuit Court.—Where the bill of exceptions is signed by the district judge for the circuit court, and it does not appear that the other judges were present at the trial, which ensued after the meeting of the court, the supreme court will presume that it was had before the district judge alone.[88] thenticated if signed by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, if more than one judge sat on the trial of the cause, without any seal of court or judge being annexed thereto, merely dispenses with the seal. The necessity for the signature still remains. Origet v. United States, 125 U. S. 240, 31 L. Ed. 743.

83. Effect of failure to sign.—Mussina v. Cavazos, 6 Wall. 355, 18 L. Ed. 810, cited with approval in Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 285, 44 L. Ed. 163.

85. Irregularity in signing where no bill necessary.—A motion to dismiss a writ of error because the bill of exceptions filed below was authenticated by a judge other than the trial judge, will not be considered, where it is apparent on the record that the only matters tried and decided in the circuit court were demurrers to pleas to the jurisdiction, and therefore no bill of exceptions was required. Petri v. Creelman Lumber Co., 199 U. S. 487, 50 L. Ed. 281.

"Accordingly, our conclusion is that the errors of the trial court alleged in the bill of exceptions, unauthenticated by the signature of the judge who sat at the trial, cannot be considered by us." Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 288, 44 L. Ed. 163, reaffirmed in Niver v. Fields, 179 U. S. 682, 45 L. Ed. 384.

87. Signing of bill by successor of trial judge.—"An inspection of this record discloses that the bill of exceptions was not settled, allowed and signed by the judge who tried the case, but by his successor in office, several months after the trial. It is settled that allowing and signing a bill of exceptions is a judicial act, which can only be performed by the judge who sat at the trial. What took place at the trial, and is a proper subject of exception, can only be judicially known by the judge who has acted in that capacity. Such knowledge cannot be brought to a judge who did not participate in the trial or to a judge who has succeeded to a judge who did, by what purports to be a bill of exceptions, but which has not been signed and allowed by the trial judge. Section 953 of the Revised Statutes is as follows: 'A bill of exceptions allowed in any cause shall be deemed sufficiently authenticated if signed by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, or by the presiding judge thereof, if more than one judge sat at the trial of the cause, without any seal of court or judge being annexed thereto.' We understand this enactment to mean that no bill of exceptions can be deemed sufficiently authenticated unless signed by the judge who sat at the trial, or by the presiding judge if more than one sat." Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 284, 44 L. Ed. 163, reaffirmed in Niver v. Fields, 179 U. S. 682, 45 L. Ed. 384.

88. Where district judge presides in circuit court, he may sign.—Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. Ed. 209.

Rule as to signing where district judge presides in circuit court.—"Section 953 of the Revised Statutes provides for the authentication of bills of exception by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, or by the presiding judge thereof, if more than one judge sat on the trial of the cause; and, therefore, if this trial had taken place before the circuit justice and one of the other judges, or before the circuit and district judges, the bill of exceptions would, of course, have been signed by the circuit justice or circuit judge, as

(d) Stipulation of Parties.—The failure or omission of the trial judge to sign the bill of exceptions cannot be supplied by an agreement of the parties that another than the trial judge may perform his functions in that regard.[89]

(3) Manner of Signing.—Initials only are not a proper signature by the judge.[90]

(4) Time of Signing.—The time within which the signature of the judge must be applied for if within the term, is left to the discretion of the judge who noted the excepton when it was made. It may depend much upon the nature of the bills. Some require much more time for preparation than others. When an exception has been taken at the trial and noted, reducing the exception to form afterwards and attesting it is not making a new case; it is merely verifying the case as it appeared on the trial.[91] Moreover, the rule requiring the presentation of bills for the signature of the judge within five days is not a rule which controls his action. He may depart from it in order to effectuate justice.[92]

(5) Waiver.—Exceptions are not waived by suing out a writ of error before the judge's signature to the bill has been procured.[93]

(6) Presumptions on Appeal.—Where a bill of exceptions appears upon its face to have been regularly taken, the court cannot presume against the record that it was not signed.[94]

the case might be. The motion to strike out the bill of exceptions upon the ground that it must be held that the judges who were present at the opening of the court were present on the trial, is therefore overruled." Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 384, 37 L. Ed. 209.

89. Stipulation of parties as to who shall sign.—"The rationale of these cases evidently was that the court of errors could not consider a bill of exceptions that had not been signed by the judge who tried the case, and that such failure or omission could not be supplied by agreement of the parties, but that the only remedy was to be found in a motion for a new trial," reviewing cases from other jurisdictions. Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 286, 44 L. Ed. 163, reaffirmed in Niver v. Fields, 179 U. S. 682, 45 L. Ed. 384.

"We are referred to no decision of this court on the precise question whether counsel can stipulate the correctness of a bill of exceptions not signed by the trial judge. But we think that on principle this cannot be done, and we regard the cases just cited as sound statements of the law." Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 288, 44 L. Ed. 163, reaffirmed in Niver v. Fields, 179 U. S. 682, 45 L. Ed. 384.

It certainly cannot be contended that if the trial judge is able officially to sign the bill of exceptions, it would be competent for the counsel to dispense with his action, and rely upon an agreed statement of the facts and law of the case as tried. Nor can they agree that another than the trial judge may perform his functions in that regard. Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 287, 44 L. Ed. 163, reaffirmed in Niver v. Fields, 179 U. S. 682, 45 L. Ed. 384.

90. Signing bill by initials of judge.—A paper found in the record was headed "Bill of Exceptions." But the paper did not bear the signature of the district judge. The trial took place on the 8th of June, 1883. At the foot of the paper referred to appeared the following: "Allowed and ordered on file November 22, '83. A. B." It was held that this could not be regarded as a proper signature by the judge to a bill of exceptions, nor could the paper be regarded for the purposes of review as a bill of exceptions. The court said: "We cannot regard the initials 'A. B.' as the signature of the judge, or as a sufficient authentication of the bill of exceptions, or as sufficient evidence of its allowance by the judge or the court. Therefore, the questions purporting to be raised by the paper cannot be considered." Origet v. United States, 125 U. S. 240, 244, 31 L. Ed. 743, cited with approval in Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 281, 287, 44 L. Ed. 163.

The rule of court is as follows: "No bill of exceptions will be signed unless presented to the judge within five days after the close of the trial, unless further time be allowed by the court." Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 353, 26 L. Ed. 113.

94. Presumptions on appeal as to signature.—It is objected, that it does not appear that the exceptions were taken on the trial, and signed by the judge during the term. The bill of exceptions states, that, "on the trial of the cause, the district attorney requested the court to charge the jury," etc., and at the close,

b. Of Agreed Statement of Facts.—An agreed statement of facts must be signed by counsel.[95]

c. Of Statement of Facts on Appeal.—A statement of facts on appeal from the supreme court of Arizona territory must be approved and signed by the judge.[96] If the parties or their attorneys agree upon a statement of facts on appeal, they shall sign it.[97]

d. A Case under the Practice in the District.—A case, which may be used in place of a bill of exceptions on appeals from the special to the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, need not be signed.[98]

2. SEALING—a. Necessity for.—Formerly it was held that the bill of exceptions had to be sealed by the judge presiding at the trial in accordance with the requirements of the statute of Westminster 2 (Edw. I, chap. 31).[99] But in later cases the contrary was held,[1] and this rule has been confirmed by

"to which opinions of the court, refusing to charge as requested, the district attorney excepts, and prays that the bill of exceptions, with the documents referred to therein, be signed, sealed, and made a part of the record, which is accordingly done," and which is signed by the judge. Upon its face, this bill of exceptions appears to have been regularly signed; and the court cannot presume against the record. United States v. Hodge, 6 How. 279, 281, 12 L. Ed. 437.

96. Statement of facts on appeal from territorial courts.—Cohn v. Daley, 174 U. S. 539, 43 L. Ed. 1077.

A statement of facts on appeal must be approved and signed by the judge, but if the judge does not approve or sign it, the parties may submit their respective statements to the judge, who shall, from his own knowledge, with the aid of such statements, during the term, make out and sign and file with the clerk a correct statement of the facts proven on the trial and such statement shall constitute a part of the record. Cohn v. Daley, 174 U. S. 539, 43 L. Ed. 1077.

Statements in bill.—Formerly the rule was that the bill of exceptions must state that the judge who signed it "was asked to seal, or did seal a bill of exceptions." Weems v. George, 13 How. 190, 14 L. Ed. 108.

Effect of want of seal.—Where a bill of exceptions is neither signed or sealed by the judge who tried the case, so that there is nothing to show that it was submitted to him, or in any way received his sanction, the judgment below will be affirmed. Mussina v. Cavazos, 6 Wall. 355, 18 L. Ed. 810.

1. Later rule dispensed with a seal.—Generes v. Campbell, 11 Wall. 193, 20 L. Ed. 110; Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 319, 320, 24 L. Ed. 958.

Though the statute of Westminster requires bills of exceptions to be sealed, yet as neither an act of congress nor rule of court has made this requirement here, it is sufficient if the bill be signed by the judge. Generes v. Campbell, 11 Wall. 193, 20 L. Ed. 110.

Anciently the bill of exceptions was required to be sealed; but it is sufficient, in the practice of this court, if it be signed by the judge. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 599, 17 L. Ed. 638; Generes v. Campbell, 11 Wall. 193, 20 L. Ed. 110; Mussina v. Cavazos, 6 Wall. 355, 18 L. Ed. 810; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 555, 23 L. Ed. 983.

"It is not a bill of exceptions until it has been sealed, or, as is now sufficient, signed. The sealing or signature of the judge is essential for its authentication." Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 172, 24 L. Ed. 383.

Practice in District of Columbia.—The case or bill of exceptions, which are used on appeals from the special to the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, need not be sealed.[3]

b. Sufficiency of Sealing.—No exceptions not reduced to writing and sealed by the judge, is a bill of exceptions, properly speaking, within the rules and practice of the federal courts. The seal, however, being to the bill of exceptions, and not to each particular exception contained in it, it was sufficient if the bill be sealed, as was the practice in the first and second circuits, at its close only.[4]

c. Import of Seal.—The truth of the bill could never be doubted after it was sealed.[5]

d. Acknowledgment of Seal.—Where the bill of exceptions was a part of the record, and came up with it, the acknowledgment of the judge's seal was unnecessary.[6] But if the bill of exceptions was not tacked to the record, such an acknowledgment might be proper.[7]

3. Construction of Authentication.—A statement in the last sentence of the bill that at the request of counsel, the judge "did put his seal to this bill of exceptions," shows by his signature and seal that he authenticated the bill of exceptions as prepared and presented to him, although two sentences prior to the last suggest that the purpose of counsel was simply to preserve exceptions to the charge. And all the facts and matters stated in the bill are by such authentication brought into the record for all purposes for which they may legitimately be used.[8] party in writing are found to be true, they are sealed, or often, in the practice of the federal courts, merely signed by the presiding judge. Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 319, 24 L. Ed. 958; Rev. Stat., § 953; Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

2. A seal to the bill was dispensed with by the statute.—"A seal is not required, being expressly dispensed with by the act of 1872 (17 Stat. 197; Rev. Stat., § 953); and we had before decided that a seal is not essential in the courts of the United States. Generes v. Campbell, 11 Wall. 193, 20 L. Ed. 110." Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 319, 320, 24 L. Ed. 958.

To make it clear that a seal to a bill of exceptions was not necessary to its validity, congress, by § 4 of the act of June 1, 1872, c. 255 (17 St. 197), now § 953 of the Revised Statutes, enacted as follows: "A bill of exceptions allowed in any cause shall be deemed sufficiently authenticated if signed by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, or by the presiding judge thereof, if more than one judge sat on the trial of the cause, without any seal of court or judge being annexed thereto." Origet v. United States, 125 U. S. 240, 31 L. Ed. 743.

"It may be observed in passing that whilst it is not now necessary to seal a bill of exceptions (Rev. Stat., § 953, U. S. Comp. Stat., 1901, p. 696), the other requisites referred to are essential." Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 49 L. Ed. 219.

The only regulation made by congress as to bills of exceptions is that contained in § 953 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that they shall be sufficiently authenticated by the signature of the presiding judge, without any seal. 3. Appeals from special to general term of district.—Metropolitan R. Co. v. Moore, 121 U. S. 558, 30 L. Ed. 1022.

4. What is a sufficient sealing.—Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638.

Seal, as required, is to the bill of exceptions, and not to each particular exception therein contained. Many exceptions may be inserted in one bill of exceptions, and of course it is sufficient if the bill of exceptions is sealed at the close. Accordingly, the practice, in the first and second circuits, is to put every exception taken at the trial into one bill of exceptions, which makes the records less voluminous. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 600, 17 L. Ed. 638.

5. Seal imports verity to the bill.—Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 199, 8 L. Ed. 92.

6. Acknowledgment of seal.—Clarke v. Russell, 3 Dall. 415, 1 L. Ed. 660.

7. When acknowledgment of seal necessary.—Clarke v. Russell, 3 Dall. 415, 1 L. Ed. 660.

8. Construction of authentication.—The contention that the purpose of counsel in the question of bill of exceptions was to preserve exceptions to the charge, and that the authentication of the judge was requested for that alone, may be overborne by statements in the bill itself. By his signature and seal the judge authenticates the bill of exceptions as prepared and presented to him. And all the facts and matters stated in that bill are by such authentication brought into the record for

V. Scope and Contents of Bill.

A. In General.—So far as error is founded upon a bill of exceptions incorporated into the record, it lies only to exceptions taken at the trial to the rulings of the judge, to the granting or refusing of instructions, and to the admission or rejection of evidence.[9] Beyond this an appellate court has no power to look into the bill, on a writ of error, as it is the creature of statute, and restricted to the points stated.[10] The extent to which a judgment record should go in its recital of the proceedings depends largely upon the purpose for which it is to be used. If it is designed for use in the review by the appellate court of the rulings of the court below, upon the introduction of testimony, or of the validity of the charge to the jury, it must contain in a bill of exceptions so much of the testimony or charge as is necessary to a clear understanding of the questions involved. But if, upon the other hand, it be designed only for the purpose of preserving a record of the conviction in perpetuam rei memoriam, little more is necessary than to set forth the process and return thereto, the pleadings, journal entries, verdict and judgment.[11]

B. Rulings of the Court Below—1. In General.—When an objection is taken to the ruling of the lower court such ruling.[12] and the reasons for the ruling given by the court,[13] must be stated in the bill of exceptions.

2. Materiality of Rulings.—The bill of exceptions must also show the materiality of the rulings complained of.[14]

C. Unnecessary Matter.—Brevity in bills of exceptions is always commended.[15] Unnecessary matter not only has a tendency to involve what is really important in obscurity and confusion,[16] but it serves to perplex and em-all purposes for which they may legitimately be used. Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. Ed. 1150.

The verification by the signature of the judge cannot be restrained to the last sentence of the connected history of the case which precedes. Kleinschmidt v. McAndrews, 117 U. S. 282, 286, 29 L. Ed. 905.

9. Scope and contents of bill.—Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 297, 11 L. Ed. 979, citing 1 Bac. Abr., 779; Bull. N. P. 316.

11. Scope of judgment record to be used in court below.—United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 699, 37 L. Ed. 335.

12. Bill must show ruling complained of.—"Where the objection is to the ruling of the court, it is indispensable that the ruling should be stated, and it should also be alleged that the complaining party then and there excepted to the same. Both conditions are wanting, and indeed the paper is irregular or defective, and insufficient in many of the substantial elements of a proper bill of exceptions." Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638.

Exception to ruling of court below in striking out plea of statute of limitations.—Packet Co. v. Sickles, 19 Wall. 611, 22 L. Ed. 203.

13. Reasons for ruling must be stated.—Caperton v. Bowyer, 14 Wall. 216, 234, 20 L. Ed. 882.

14. Bill must show materiality of rulings.—It has long been settled that abstract questions of law, which may or may not have been ruled in a way to effect the defendant injuriously, will not be considered by the supreme court on a writ of error, unless it appears from the bill of exceptions, or otherwise in the record, that the facts were such as to make them material to the issue which was tried. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Madison, 123 U. S. 524, 31 L. Ed. 258.

15. Unnecessary matter in the bill condemned.—Haussknecht v. Claypool, 1 Black 431, 17 L. Ed. 172.

16. Unnecessary matter tends to confuse.—A bill of exceptions is prepared by the party, and being prepared by him, he may state, and ought to state, only those facts which present the very question he desires to raise. If the objection is to a ruling on the admission of testimony, he should state only that testimony and enough of the case to show its relevancy. It would be absurd to require him to set out all the testimony, or to state in terms that there was no objection to the balance. Lewis v. United States, 146 U. S. 370, 383, 36 L. Ed. 1011, dissenting opinion of Brewer, J.

"In the case before us, the bill of exceptions fills an hundred and twenty-seven printed pages. The points arising for our consideration could have been better presented in a very small part of this space. Such a mass of unnecessary matter has a tendency to involve what is really important in obscurity and confusion. Its presence is a violation of the fourth rule of this court. Its examination consumes our time, increases our labor, and can subserve no useful purpose. The subject was so fully considered in the case

barrass both court and counsel,[17] and is a violation of the fourth rule of the federal supreme court.[18]

D. Objections and Exceptions—1. The Grounds of Objection—a. In General.—The bill of exceptions should point out the alleged errors clearly and show the grounds relied upon to sustain the objections presented, so that it may appear that the court below was informed as to the point to be decided.[19] This rule has been applied to objections to the admission of depositions,[20] to the misconduct of the jury,[21] and to many other objections, instances of which will be found in the notes.[22] referred to, that we deem it unnecessary to pursue it further upon this occasion." Laber v. Cooper, 7 Wall. 565, 568, 19 L. Ed. 151. See, in accord, the language of Mr. Justice Field in Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 136, 19 L. Ed. 106.

"The bill of exceptions (so called) in this case, is a sort of abstract or index to the history of a case tried in the western district of Pennsylvania. Protesting against attempts at mystifying the merits of a case by such records, we shall proceed to notice the single error which it is supposed that the court has committed in the charge to the jury." Evans v. Patterson, 4 Wall. 224, 229, 18 L. Ed. 393.

20. Admission of deposition.—In the absence of any apparent informality, if the objection made by the defendant to the admission of the deposition was made on the ground of an informality, that ground, to avail him here, should appear in the bill of exceptions, with a sufficient statement to enable this court to see that the ground was a valid one; and the informality on which the deposition was ruled out should, to avail him, be stated in the bill of exceptions, with sufficient other matter to enable this court to say that the identical informality on which the rulings of the court proceed existed, and was good ground for the ruling. As the defendant made the objection to the admissibility of the deposition, and it was excluded, it was incumbent on him to make it appear, by the bill of exceptions, what the ground of objection was, and that it was a valid ground. Spaids v. Cooley, 113 U. S. 278, 286, 28 L. Ed. 984. See, generally, the title DEPOSITIONS, vol. 5, p. 321.

21. That the court erred in allowing the jurors to take notes: "It appears from the bill of exceptions that one of the jurymen asked the court if he 'could take notes and jot down any items on paper,' and that the court responded: 'Certainly, you have a right to assist your memory in any way that is consistent with your conscience;' to which defendant excepted. The court subsequently admonished the jury that this was simply for the personal convenience of the juror; that he wished them to understand that their memory and recollection of the testimony were to control in arriving at a verdict; and that they should not be influenced in the least by the juror's notes. The exception saved was to the permission to take notes and not to the use of them the jury room. But the record does not show that any notes were taken, and there is nothing for the exception to rest on." Agnew v. United States, 165 U. S. 36, 45, 41 L. Ed. 624.

22. Illustrative cases.—A bill of exceptions which claimed a right of recovery for negligence must state the loss or damage sustained by the act or omission complained of. Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch 242, 3 L. Ed. 329.

Objections to award of arbitrator.—To present a question to the supreme court, the subordinate tribunal must ascertain the facts upon which the judgment or opinion excepted to, is founded. Therefore, where there was a reference in the circuit court, and the bill of exceptions set out the objections to the award together with the testimony of the arbitrator who was examined in open court, and that testimony showed the facts upon which the objections were founded, it was a sufficient exception. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Myers, 18 How. 246, 15 L. Ed. 380.

Denial of motion for judgment.—An exception to the ruling of the court in denying a motion for judgment on the pleading, must show the ground upon which the motion is made or denied. Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418.

Objection to the number of executions.—Where an action is brought on a judgment rendered by the supreme court of Louisiana, and by the law of that state only one execution can issue at a time on the judgment, an assignment of error that at the time suit was brought on the judgment in the circuit court, an execution had been issued on the same judgment in the state court, which is in full force, which is not made a part of the record of

b. Error to State Court.—Upon a writ of error to a state court, the grounds of the exception must be stated.[23]

2. TAKING OF EXCEPTIONS—a. In General.—Since the power of the Federal supreme court is, as a general rule, confined to exceptions actually taken at the trial, or hearing, it must affirmatively appear from the bill that exceptions were seasonably taken to the rulings of the court on the objections.[24]

b. Illustrative Cases.—For example, instructions though objected to are not subject to review, where the bill of exceptions does not show that the party excepted to them.[25] In like manner, it has been frequently held by the federal supreme court that the rulings of the court upon objections to the admissions,[26] the circuit court by bill of exceptions, cannot be noticed. Lathrop v. Judson, 19 How. 66, 15 L. Ed. 553.

Where a deed was objected to in the circuit court on the ground of fraud, but no specific grounds of objection were made, the federal supreme court cannot inquire into the correctness or incorrectness of the objection. Thomas v. Lawson, 21 How. 331, 16 L. Ed. 82.

Evidence of market value.—Overruling of objection to testimony upon difference in prices at Rheims and at Paris, of other manufacturers' champagne, is not reviewable in absence of showing of difference in quality and price between that and the champagne in question. "If there were such differences as was assumed by the counsel for the defendant, it should have been made to appear, by setting out either the evidence which proved it, or an admission by the judge to that effect: Either would have been sufficient. Their place cannot be supplied by the allegations of counsel. The silence of the judge does not amount to an admission." Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 114, 142, 18 L. Ed. 116.

Admissions of agent's acts and declarations.—Overruling of objection to admission of alleged agent's acts and declarations on ground of insufficient proof of agency is not reviewable where bill of exceptions fails to show evidence on the subject and exception on that ground. Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 114, 18 L. Ed. 116.

Objection that there is no revenue stamp upon bonds as required by the act of congress, or that an insufficient one was upon the contract, will not be noticed by the appellate court unless the bill of exceptions shows what revenue stamp was on the bond. Chambers County v. Clews, 21 Wall. 317, 22 L. Ed. 517.

23. Stating grounds of exception upon error to state court.—Caperton v. Bowyer, 14 Wall. 216, 234, 20 L. Ed. 882. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 546.

24. The bill must show that exceptions were taken.—Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 602, 17 L. Ed. 638; Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418; Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319; Railway Co. v. Heck, 102 U. S. 120, 26 L. Ed. 58; Hanna v. Maas. 122 U. S. 24, 30 L. Ed. 1117; Lees v. United States, 150 U. S. 476, 37 L. Ed. 1150; Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 195 U. S. 322, 49 L. Ed. 219.

Where exceptions are not taken in the progress of the trial in the circuit court, and do not appear on the record, there is no ground for the action of the federal supreme court. Lathrop v. Judson, 19 How. 66, 15 L. Ed. 553.

A bill of exceptions should show that the party then and there excepted to the rulings of the trial court complained of. Pomeroy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 17 L. Ed. 638.

When bills of exceptions are necessary to bring any matter upon record so that it can be reviewed in error, it must appear by the record that the exception was taken at the trial. A judge cannot afterwards allow one not taken in time. Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 127, 24 L. Ed. 395.

Exception to the overruling of a motion in arrest of judgment.—Rodriguez v. United States, 198 U. S. 156, 49 L. Ed. 994.

25. Objections to instructions without showing exceptions.—Tucker v. United States, 151 U. S. 164, 38 L. Ed. 112, citing United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900.

Nor can it regard any part of the charge as the subject matter of revision, unless the judges, or one of them, certify under his seal, that it was excepted to at the trial. Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722.

If the omissions of a part of the charge, which was in fact embraced in the exceptions, is a mere clerical error, the party will be entitled to a certiorari, upon producing a copy of the exceptions, properly certified. Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722.

Judgment affirmed.—Where the record shows various objections to the charge of the court, but it nowhere appears that exceptions were taken to any of these matters, the judgment will be affirmed. Fishburn v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 U. S. 60, 34 L. Ed. 585.

26. Objections to admission of evidence must show exceptions.—Santa Anna v. Frank, 113 U. S. 339, 28 L. Ed. 978; Clune exclusion,[27] or weight and sufficiency of the evidence,[28] are not open to revision, unless the bill of exceptions shows that exceptions were taken.[29]

c. Manner of Showing the Taking of Exceptions.—But that exceptions were taken cannot be shown by the minutes of the clerk.[30]

E. The Evidence—1. IN GENERAL.—Since each bill of exceptions must be considered as presenting a substantial case, and it is the evidence stated in it alone on which the court will decide,[31] unless the evidence is incorporated in the bill or made part thereof it will not be considered,[32] even though appended thereto.[33] However, evidence may be included in a bill of exceptions by ap-

v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 40 L. Ed. 269.

In order to make an objection to the admission of testimony available, it is necessary that an exception should be distinctly taken and placed upon the record. If it only appears that the admission of a part of the testimony was objected to by the defendant, but it does not appear that the objection was overruled, and an exception taken, the point cannot be availed of. Laber v. Cooper, 7 Wall. 565, 19 L. Ed. 151; Newport News, etc., Valley Co. v. Pace, 158 U. S. 36, 39 L. Ed. 887.

The bill of exceptions should state that an exception was taken to the ruling of the court in admitting certain testimony over the defendant's objection. Weems v. George, 13 How. 190, 14 L. Ed. 108.

27. Exceptions to the admission or rejection of evidence constitute no part of the record, unless incorporated in a bill of exceptions. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427, 15 L. Ed. 978, cited in United States v. Taylor, 147 U. S. 695, 700, 37 L. Ed. 335; Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 383; Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 40 L. Ed. 269.

28. Objections to lack of evidence must show exceptions.—Where the record fails to show that any exception was taken at the trial based upon lack of evidence, the objection is not properly presented to the federal supreme court for consideration. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. Ed. 485.

29. "This bill of exceptions has been framed and allowed in disregard of the settled rules of law upon the subject. No ruling upon evidence is open to revision, because none appears to have been excepted to. Scott v. Lloyd, 9 Pet. 418, 442, 9 L. Ed. 178." Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 26, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

30. Taking of exceptions not shown by the minutes.—Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 356, 19 L. Ed. 418. See ante, "Other Methods than the Bill of Exceptions," III, D.

Reference to annexed exhibit insufficient.—Where a bill, instead of stating distinctly the matters of law in the charge which are excepted to, refers to an exhibit annexed, containing the evidence, with minutes that certain parts of it were objected to, and another exhibit containing the charge in full, with the stenographer's notes of an ensuing conversation showing that counsel excepted to that part of the charge which bore upon a certain subject, or to the refusal of the court to charge as orally requested in the course of that conversation, the bill is insufficient in form, and will not be considered. Hanna v. Maas, 122 U. S. 24, 30 L. Ed. 1117.

31. Evidence must be incorporated in bill.—Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch 242, 270, 3 L. Ed. 329; Jones v. Buckell, 104 U. S. 554, 556, 26 L. Ed. 841.

"Each bill of exceptions must be considered as presenting a distinct, substantive case; and it is on the evidence stated in itself alone that the court is to decide. We cannot go beyond it and collect other facts which must have been in the mind of the party, and the insertion of which in this bill of exceptions could alone have sanctioned the opinion as prayed for." Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch 242, 270, 3 L. Ed. 329, approved in New York, etc., R. Co. v. Madison, 123 U. S. 524, 526, 31 L. Ed. 258; Jones v. Buckell, 104 U. S. 554, 556, 26 L. Ed. 841; Hornbuckle v. Stafford, 111 U. S. 389, 393, 28 L. Ed. 468.

32. Evidence not incorporated in bill is not considered.—Russell v. Ely, 2 Black 575, 17 L. Ed. 258 (depositions), cited in United States v. Copper Queen Min. Co., 185 U. S. 495, 46 L. Ed. 1008; Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 40 L. Ed. 269.

Copies of deeds and stipulations in respect to evidence.—Where certain rights are claimed under the act of August 6, 1861, c. 60, "to confiscate property used for insurrectionary purposes" (12 Stat. 319), but the pleadings nowhere show that the rights of the parties depend on the construction or effect of the act of 1861, and no part of the evidence is set out in the bill of exceptions, the judgment will be affirmed. "Copies of deeds and a stipulation in respect to evidence are found in the transcript, but they are nowhere referred to in the bill of exceptions, and it is not even stated in the record that they were used at the trial. As long ago as Dunlop v. Munroe (7 Cranch 242, 270, 3 L. Ed. 329), it was said by this court that 'each bill of exceptions must be considered as presenting a distinct and substantive case; and it is on the evidence stated in itself alone that the court is to decide.'" Jones v. Bucknell, 104 U. S. 554, 556, 26 L. Ed. 841.

33. Merely appending evidence to bill insufficient.—Evidence or statements of fact not contained in the bill of exceppropriate reference to other parts of the record.[34] But merely printing the evidence in the record, without incorporating it in the bill, or so referring to it therein as to make it a part of the record of the case, is not sufficient.[35]

Exceptions to Rules Rendering Evidence Inadmissible.—Where an objection and exception is taken to the action of the court below in excluding evidence, and the party introducing it relies in the appellate court on any special circumstances as an exception to the rule rendering such evidence inadmissible, as that it was part of the res gestæ, that circumstance must appear in the bill of exceptions or by the record in some other manner.[36]

2. Stenographic Reports.—The supreme court has expressed strong disapproval of the practice of incorporating verbatim copies of stenographic reports of evidence in bills of exceptions. In nearly every case the transcript can be much reduced in length by putting the examination of witnesses into narrative form. Both the consideration due to the judges of the appellate courts and the great reduction in expense to the parties should induce counsel to thus shorten the records.[37]

tions, or made a part thereof, though appended thereto, will not be regarded by the court. Bank v. Kennedy, 17 Wall. 19, 20, 21 L. Ed. 551.

34. Evidence may be included by references to other parts of record.—Jones v. Buckell, 104 U. S. 554, 556, 26 L. Ed. 841.

"Of course, evidence may be included in a bill of exceptions by appropriate reference to other parts of the record, and if that had been done here it might have been enough. But with no issue made directly by the pleadings, and no evidence set forth or referred to in the bill of exceptions showing the materiality of the charge complained of, the case presents to us only an abstract proposition of law which may or may not have been stated by the court in a way to be injurious to the plaintiffs in error. Such a proposition we are not required to consider. Reed v. Gardner, 17 Wall. 409, 21 L. Ed. 665." Jones v. Buckell, 104 U. S. 554, 556, 26 L. Ed. 841.

Effect of statement of evidence by court.—Where the evidence returned in the bill of exceptions, which does not purport to contain all the evidence given on the trial, is not sufficiently full, but the judge, in his charge to the jury, refers to evidence on the subject which does not appear in the bill, and is not corrected by counsel, and no exception is taken to the statement, the federal supreme court is not only permitted but bound to regard the evidence in the record as supplemented by the statement of the evidence by the court. "It must be assumed that the statements of the court were correct statements of the testimony. If not, the bill of exceptions should have shown it, and some question made at the time in regard to the erroneous character of the charge upon the facts. Error must appear in the record and cannot be presumed." Sharp v. United States, 191 U. S. 341, 353, 48 L. Ed. 211.

35. Merely printing evidence in record insufficient.—Russell v. Ely, 2 Black 575, 17 L. Ed. 258.

"In Russell v. Ely, 2 Black 575, 17 L. Ed. 258, the court, after remarking that the bill of exceptions did not purport to give all that a certain witness had testified to, said that according to a well-known rule the court under such a condition of the record was bound to presume that there was that in the witness's testimony which justified the instruction. It was then added by the court: 'What purports to be the entire depositions of Baker is sent up by the clerk of the district court, and is printed in the record before us, and if properly before us might sustain the exception. But this deposition is not incorporated into the bill of exceptions, nor so referred to in it as to be made a part of the record of the case. It is only a useless encumberance of the transcript, and an expense to the litigating parties.' The court thus refused to look at the deposition which purported to be the entire deposition of the witness because it was not made a part of the bill of exceptions." Approved in United States v. Copper Queen Min. Co., 185 U. S. 495, 498, 46 L. Ed. 1008.

36. Exceptions to rule excluding evidence must appear.—Smiths v. Shoemaker, 17 Wall. 630, 21 L. Ed. 717.

Admissibility of ex parte declarations.—When a party seeks to justify in a court of review the admission of ex parte declarations of himself or his vendor, against the objection of the other side, he must show by the record some circumstance which would obviate the manifest soundness of the objection. Smiths v. Shoemaker, 17 Wall. 630, 638, 21 L. Ed. 717. See the title DECLARATIONS AND ADMISSIONS, vol. 5, p. 214.

37. Mere stenographic reports of evidence condemned.—"The bill of exceptions should not be simply a stenographic report of all that took place at the trial, leaving this court to consider the whole of the evidence and pick out such portions of it

3. Exclusion of Evidence—a. In General.—Where an assignment of error is taken to the exclusion of evidence, as, for example, an assignment of error to a refusal to admit in evidence a complaint and answer in another case,[38] or to the rejection of a deposition,[39] the bill of exceptions must show that the evidence excluded was material, or that its exclusion is prejudicial.[40]

b. Depositions.—And to accomplish this the record must, in the case of a deposition excluded in whole or in part, set forth the answer or its full substance.[41] Such is the requirement of the twenty-first rule of the federal supreme court,[42] and the rule is not the less applicable because the trial court excludes the answer to the question upon the particular ground stated in the bill of exceptions.[43] as may be pertinent to the issue." McLeod v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 122 U. S. 528, 30 L. Ed. 1237.

38. In order to sustain an assignment of error to a refusal to admit in evidence a complaint and answer in another case offered by the appellants, the court having already admitted the decree rendered in that case, it is necessary that the exception should show what the excluded testimony was, in order that it might appear whether the evidence was material or not. Hornbuckle v. Stafford, 111 U. S. 389, 28 L. Ed. 468, citing Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cranch 242, 3 L. Ed. 329; Reed v. Gardner, 17 Wall. 409, 21 L. Ed. 665.

39. Assignment of error to rejection of deposition.—Packet Co. v. Clough, 20 Wall. 528, 22 L. Ed. 406.

"The refusal of the court to allow the plaintiff to read the answer of the witness Nash to the question, 'You may state whether or not that check has all the appearance of having passed through the bank in the ordinary course of business,' cannot be assigned as error. The bill of exceptions does not show what answer was made to that question in the deposition of the witness. It does not even state the facts the answer tended to establish. We cannot, therefore, say that the exclusion of the answer was prejudicial to the plaintiff. For aught that appears in the record, the witness may have made an answer that was injurious to the plaintiff, or one that was of no value to either party." Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 616, 38 L. Ed. 286.

40. Bill must show materiality of excluded evidence.—Thompson v. First Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 529, 28 L. Ed. 507, citing Packet Co. v. Clough, 20 Wall. 528, 22 L. Ed. 406; Railroad Co. v. Smith, 21 Wall. 255, 22 L. Ed. 513; Hornbuckle v. Stafford, 111 U. S. 389, 28 L. Ed. 468; Thompson v. First Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 529, 28 L. Ed. 507.

Exclusion of proof of contents of letter.—Thompson v. First Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 529, 28 L. Ed. 507.

41. Record must state full substance of evidence.—Railroad Co. v. Smith, 21 Wall. 255, 22 L. Ed. 513; Thompson v. First Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 529, 28 L. Ed. 507; Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 38 L. Ed. 286.

A party who complains of the rejection of evidence must make it appear by his bill of exceptions, that if the evidence had been admitted it might have led the jury to a different result, and that accordingly he has been injured by the rejection. He must therefore have properly before this court the evidence rejected, or some statement of what it tended to prove. "This must be understood as the practice in this court, and such is the requirement of our twenty-first rule. By that rule it is ordered that when the error assigned is to the admission or rejection of evidence, the specification shall quote the full substance of the evidence offered, or copy the offer as stated in the bill of exceptions. This is to enable the court to see whether the evidence offered was material, for it would be idle to reverse a judgment for the admission or rejection of evidence, that could have had no effect upon the verdict." Packet Co. v. Clough, 20 Wall. 528, 543, 22 L. Ed. 406.

42. Requirements of twenty-first rule of court.—The party who complains of the rejection of evidence must show that he was injured by the rejection. His bill of exceptions must make it appear that if it had been admitted, it might have led the jury to a different verdict. This must be understood as the practice in the federal supreme court, and such is the requirement of its twenty-first rule. Packet Co. v. Clough, 20 Wall. 528, 22 L. Ed. 406; Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 38 L. Ed. 286.

By the 21st rule of the supreme court it may be regarded as settled that an assignment of error based upon the exclusion by the trial court of an answer given in the deposition of a witness to a particular question, will be disregarded by the court if the answer, or the full substance of it, is not set out in the record in appropriate form for examination. Packet Co. v. Clough, 20 Wall. 528, 22 L. Ed. 406; Railroad Co. v. Smith, 21 Wall. 255, 22 L. Ed. 513; Thompson v. First Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 529, 28 L. Ed. 507; Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 38 L. Ed. 286.

43. Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 38 L. Ed. 286.

Limitations of General Rule.—But this rule that where the answer of a witness to a deposition is excluded, the record must set forth the answer or its full substance, does not apply where the witness testifies in person, and where the question propounded to him is not only proper in form, but is so framed as to clearly admit of an answer favorable to the claim or defense of the party producing him. It might be very inconvenient in practice if a party, in order to take advantage of the rulings of the trial court in not allowing questions, proper in form and manifestly relevant to the issues, were required to accompany each question with a statement of the facts expected to be established by the answer to the particular question propounded.[44]

c. Rejection of Witnesses over Objection.—And it has been held that, where a bill of exceptions states that a witness was asserted to be competent by the counsel tendering him, and was rejected by the court, a court of error will infer that the witness was material to sustain the issue, without a direct statement to that effect in the bill of exceptions.[45]

4. WITNESSES—a. Examination of Witnesses—(1) Questions—(a) On Direct Examination.—Where an objection is taken to a question asked a witness, the bill of exceptions must show the character of the evidence previously put in.[46]

(b) On Cross-Examination.—Where there is nothing in the bill of exceptions which enables a revising court to say that questions objected to have exceeded the reasonable license which a court, in its discretion, may allow in cross-examination, no error is shown, and the judgment must be affirmed.[47]

(2) Answers.—Where the bill of exceptions does not show what answer was made to a question put to a witness, error cannot be assigned upon the question.[48]

b. Names of Witnesses.—The failure of the bill of exceptions to give the names of the witnesses whom the defendant proposed or intended to call, or to state their testimony in detail, cannot deprive the defendant of the benefit of his exception to the refusal of the court to hear any evidence whatever.[49]

5. HOW MUCH OF THE EVIDENCE SHOULD BE INCORPORATED—a. Former Practice—(1) In General.—Formerly, only so much of the evidence as was necessary to present clearly the matters excepted to was properly embodied in

44. When excluded answer to deposition need not be set forth.—Buckstaff v. Russell, 151 U. S. 626, 636, 38 L. Ed. 292, distinguishing Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 38 L. 45. Materiality of rejected witness need not be stated.—Haussknecht v. Claypool, 1 Black 431, 17 L. Ed. 172. See Scotland County v. Hill, 112 U. S. 183, 186, 28 L. Ed. 692.

In other words, where a bill of exceptions sets out that a witness was offered, was objected to on the ground of incompetency, and rejected by the court below, but does not state what facts he was called to prove, the federal supreme court will not presume that his testimony would have been immaterial if it had been heard. Vance v. Campbell, 1 Black 427, 17 L. Ed. 168.

Where a question is asked of a witness, which is illegal only because it may elicit improper testimony, and the court permits it to be answered against the objection of the other party, if the witness knows nothing of the matter to which he is interrogated, or if his answer is favorable to the objecting party, it is not error of which a revising court can take notice. It works him no injury. If it does work the objecting party injury, he can show it by making the answer a part of the bill of exceptions, and unless he does this there is no error of the sort mentioned. Nailor v. Williams, 8 Wall. 107, 19 L. Ed. 348.

the bill of exceptions,[50] consent of counsel to the contrary notwithstanding.[51] All beyond serves to encumber and confuse the record, and to perplex and embarrass both court and counsel.[52] Besides a contrary practice, was a direct violation of a rule of court then existing.[53]

(2) Admitted and Disputed Facts.—If the facts upon which the rulings were made are admitted, the bill should state them briefly, as the result of the testimony.[54] If the facts are disputed, it was sufficient if the bill alleged that testimony was produced tending to prove them.[55]

(3) Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence.—If a defect in the proofs is the

"Indeed, it can seldom be necessary for the just determination of any question raised at the trial to set forth the entire evidence given; and the practice in some districts—quite common of late—of sending up to this court bills made up in this way—filled with superfluous and irrelevant matter—must be condemned. It only serves to throw increased labor upon us, and unnecessary expense upon parties. If counsel will not heed the admonitions upon this subject, so frequently expressed by us, the judges of the court below, to whom the bills are presented, should withhold their signatures until the bills are prepared in proper form, freed from all matters not essential to explain and point the exceptions." Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 136, 19 L. Ed. 106, opinion of Mr. Justice Field.

"A bill of exceptions should not include, nor, as a rule, does it include, all the evidence given on the trial upon questions about which there is no controversy, but which it is necessary to introduce as proof of the plaintiff's right to bring the action, or of other matters of like nature. If such evidence be admitted without objection, and no point be made at the trial with respect to the matter it was intended to prove, we know of no rule of law which would require that even the substance of it should be embodied in a bill of exceptions subsequently taken. On the contrary, to encumber the record with matter not material to any issue involved has been repeatedly condemned by this court as useless and improper. Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. 1, 15, 7 L. Ed. 327; Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black 209, 219, 220, 17 L. Ed. 117; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 297, 11 L. Ed. 979." Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 414, 36 L. Ed. 485.

"The record contains, embodied in the bill of exceptions, the whole of the testimony and evidence offered at the trial of the cause, by each party, in support of the issue; it is very voluminous, and as no exception was taken to its competency or sufficiency, either generally or for any particular purpose, it is not properly before this court for consideration, and forms an expensive and unnecessary burden upon the record. This court has had occasion, in many cases, to express its regret on account of irregular proceedings of this nature; there was not the slightest necessity of putting any portion of the evidence in this case upon the record; since the opinion of the court, delivered to the jury, presented a general principle of law, and the application of the evidence to it was left to the jury." Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. 1, 7 L. Ed. 327, cited in Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black 209, 17 L. Ed. 117; Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 7 L. Ed. 761.

51. Consent of counsel unavailing.—The rule that the bill of exceptions should not contain all the evidence applies, even though a consent of counsel be obtained. Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 15 L. Ed. 265.

52. Unnecessary evidence in record tends to confuse.—Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 11 L. Ed. 979.

A bill of exception should contain only so much of the evidence as is necessary to present the legal question raised. When more than this is inserted in the bill, it is an irregularity to be condemned as a departure from established practice, inconvenient and embarrassing to the court. Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black 209, 17 L. Ed. 117, following Pennock v. Dialogue, 2 Pet. 1, 15, 7 L. Ed. 327; Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 297, 11 L. Ed. 979.

53. Rule of the court as to amount of evidence.—The bill of exceptions should not contain all the evidence adduced on both sides. This is a direct violation of the rule of the federal supreme court upon the subject. Hickman v. Jones, 9 Wall. 197, 19 L. Ed. 551.

54. Admitted facts.—Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 136, 19 L. Ed. 106.

55. Disputed facts.—Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 136, 19 L. Ed. 106.

ground of the exception, such defect should be mentioned without a detail of the testimony.[56]

(4) The Rule When the Trial Is by the Court.—A bill of exceptions cannot be used to bring up the whole testimony for review when the case has been tried by the court, any more than when there has been a trial by jury.[57] Where a case is tried by the court without a jury, the bill of exceptions brings up nothing for revision except what it would have done had there been a jury trial.[58] And this was the rule prior to the act of March 3rd, 1865, when such a case was brought up to the federal supreme court from the circuit court of the United States for Louisiana.[59]

(5) Presumption on Appeal.—But it will be assumed that the bill of exceptions contains all the testimony material to raise the point of law involved;[60] the supreme court cannot presume that any material part of the evidence is omitted. As to the evidence that was before the court below, the bill is conclusive.[61] On the other hand, it is equally well settled that it is not for the appellate court to say that the entire evidence in the case is set forth in the bill of exceptions, for that would be to presume a direct violation of a settled rule of practice as regards bills of exceptions, viz, that a bill of exceptions should contain only so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the bearing of the rulings of the court upon matters of law, in reference to the questions in dispute between the parties to the case, and which may relate to exceptions noted at the trial.[62]

b. Present Practice—(1) In General.—The rule of practice in the federal supreme court now is that the bill of exceptions must purport to contain,[63] in

Where the parties submit issues of fact in civil cases to be tried and determined by the court under the act of March 3, 1865, a bill of exceptions cannot be used to bring up the whole testimony for review any more than in a trial by jury. 59. Review of causes from Louisiana prior to 1865.—Where a jury is waived, and questions of law and fact decided by the court in Louisiana, the rules of the state appellate court require that the whole evidence should be put into the record. But where a case is brought up to the federal supreme court, by writ of error from the circuit court of the United States for Louisiana, the rules of the federal court only require that so much of the evidence should be inserted as is necessary to explain the legal questions decided by the court. Consequently, the mere fact, that some of the evidence given below is omitted from the record, is not of itself sufficient to prevent the court from examining the questions of law presented by the record. Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15 L. Ed. 30, citing Phillips v. Preston, 5 How. 278, 12 L. Ed. 152.

"In order, however, to disembarrass the proceedings, as far as practicable, in this peculiar mode of the trial of a common-law case, and to enable the appellate court to re-examine the point or points of law involved, the counsel, after the close of the evidence, should present the propositions of law which, it is claimed, should govern the decision; and the court should state the rulings thereon, or in coming to its determination. And, in the return to the writ of error, so much of the evidence, and no more, should be incorporated in the bill of exceptions, as was deemed necessary to present the points of law determined against the party bringing the writ. No technical exception need be stated, except in the case of the rejection or admission of evidence. As the rulings in the final determination do not take place upon the trial, or need not, the exception would be impracticable." Arthurs v. Hart, 17 How. 6, 15, 15 L. Ed. 30.

"On the face of the papers the right of the plaintiff to recover is clear. The record does not contain the entire testimony offered on the trial. It cannot, therefore, be said, even if this court were at liberty to examine the testimony, that it was not amply sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment." Nelson v. Flint, 166 U. S. 276, 278, 41 L. Ed. 1002.

Appeals from special to general term of supreme court of district.—"Of course, if the ground of motion for a new trial is for insufficient evidence, or for excessive damages, the bill of exceptions or case for the appeal must contain a statement of all the evidence offered and received on the trial, because it must bring to the general term all the material necessary to enable it to act upon the appeal precisely as the judge at special term acted upon the motion. If, however, the judge at special term exercises his discretion under § 804, by refusing to entertain the motion for a new trial to be made on his minutes, then the party moving for the new trial may, under § 806, predicate his motion on a case or bill of exceptions, containing, as in the former instance, all the evidence, and in that event the motion shall be heard in the first instance at a general term." Metropolitan R. Co. v. Moore, 121 U. S. 558, 565, 30 L. Ed. 1022.

64. Must contain all the evidence in substance at least.—"If it be objected that the verdict of the jury could not have been rendered on the second count alone, because although it appears from the record that the work and labor of prosecuting the claim to a successful termination was performed by the plaintiff, yet the record fails to show that any evidence was adduced upon the trial before the jury of the value of such work and labor and services, the answer is, that the bill of exceptions does not purport to set out, even in substance, all the evidence bearing on the issues in the case. It is manifest from the face of the bill of exceptions that what is stated to be the evidence given is set forth in a condensed form, and that the charge of the court to the jury assumed that there was evidence in support of the value of the services performed on which the second count was based. We think, therefore, that in the absence of any statement in the bill of exceptions that all of the evidence is set forth, that what is set forth is a mere summary." Delaware City, etc., Nav. Co. v. Reybold, 142 U. S. 636, 642, 35 L. Ed. 1141. See The City v. Babcock, 3 Wall. 240, 18 L. Ed. 31.

Upon a writ of error to the highest state court to review its determination in a criminal case, it was held that in the absence of a bill of exceptions, disclosing at least the substance of the evidence, that the supreme court may suppose that the evidence was trivial and that it did no injury to the defendant. The federal supreme court cannot review a ruling upon a motion on behalf of a defendant at the close of the whole evidence for an instruction in his favor, where the bill of exceptions does not purport to contain all the evidence. Hansen v. Boyd, 161 U. S. 397, 40 L. Ed. 746.

So, in Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 606, 36 L. Ed. 829, which was an action to recover damages against the company for the death of plaintiff's husband, resulting from the negligence of the company, it was remarked, in regard to the evidence in the case, that: "The bill of exception does not purport to contain all the evidence, and it would be improper to hold that the court should have directed a verdict for defendants for want of that which may have existed." Cited and approved in United States v. Copper Queen Min. Co., 185 U. S. 495, 498, 46 L. Ed. 1008.

When the federal supreme court is asked to reverse a judgment entered upon a verdict of a jury, upon a writ of error, upon the ground that there is absolutely no evidence to sustain it, and the court should have directed a verdict, the bill of exceptions must embody a statement or there must be a stipulation of counsel declaring that the bill contains all the evidence given upon the trial so that the record shall affirmatively show the fact. Russell v. Ely, 2 Black 575, 580, 17 L. Ed. 258; United States v. Copper Queen Min. Co., 185 U. S. 495, 497, 46 L. Ed. 1008.

But in the absence of a motion made at the close of the evidence to direct a verdict, the federal supreme court will presume that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the court in permitting the jury to draw the inferences proper to be deduced from the evidence in the case, especially where the bill of exceptions filed of several offenses disclosed by the evidence to have been committed, he would ask for a conviction.[66]

(3) Construction of Words "All the Testimony."—The words "all the testimony" in a bill of exceptions have been held to be synonymous with "all the evidence."[67]

(4) Appeals from Territorial Courts.—Where the supreme court of a territory proceeds upon the record as containing all the evidence, the supreme court will decline to interfere with their action.[68]

(5) Sufficiency of Showing.—Neither in criminal,[69] nor in civil cases,[70] is it in the record does not purport to contain all the evidence. Hansen v. Boyd, 161 U. S. 397, 40 L. Ed. 746.

66. Compelling election by district attorney.—Where as to the action of the court below in overruling defendant's motion on the evidence to compel the district attorney to elect, the bill of exceptions does not contain the evidence, and it is impossible for the federal supreme court to know the ground on which the circuit court proceeded, the exception in that regard need not therefore be considered. Barrett v. United States, 169 U. S. 218, 220, 42 L. Ed. 723.

67. Construction of words "all the testimony."—Waldron v. Waldron, 156 U. S. 361, 39 L. Ed. 453. See ALL, vol. 1, p. 256.

"Whether the concluding words in the bill of exceptions, 'which was all the testimony offered on the trial of the cause,' would be treated as meaning all the evidence, if unexplained by the context of the bill, need not be considered, as all the recitals in the bill, from the caption to the end thereof, taken together, we think, conclusively show that the words, 'all the testimony,' were used as synonymous with 'all the evidence.' This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that the bill was settled contradictorily, and no reservation as to its incompleteness was made." Waldron v. Waldron, 156 U. S. 361, 378, 39 L. Ed. 453.

68. Appeals from territorial courts.—"Several of the errors assigned are to the effect that the supreme court (of the territory) erred in considering or determining the case upon questions of fact, because the bill of exception failed to state that it contained all of the evidence given in the case, and the record failed 'to show that the bill of exceptions contains all of the evidence given in the case, or all of the evidence bearing upon the questions involved in the decisions' of the court. The supreme court proceeded upon the record as containing all the evidence and we are not inclined to hold that the contention that it should not have done so is open to our consideration under the limitations of the statute." Crowe v. Trickey, 204 U. S. 228, 235, 51 L. Ed. 454, followed in Crowe v. Harmon, 304 U. S. 241, 51 L. Ed. 461.

69. Sufficiency of showing in criminal cases.—Where the bill of exceptions, after citing the empanelling of the jury, proceeds in these words: "And thereupon the plaintiff, to maintain the issues upon its part, produced and offered as a witness James R. Dean, who, being first duly sworn, did testify as follows:" That recital is followed by what purports to be the testimony of the witness. Then follows in succession the testimony of several witnesses, each being preceded by a statement in form similar to this: "The plaintiff then introduced and offered as a witness, H. S. Sutton, who, being first duly sworn, did testify as follows." At the close of the testimony of the last witness named in this statement: "Whereupon the plaintiff rests its case. Defendant rests—introduces no testimony. And the said judge, after charging the jury on the law in the case, submitted the said issues and the evidence so given on the trial, to the jury, and the jury aforesaid then and there gave their verdict for the plaintiff." Held, such recitals sufficiently show that the bill contains all the evidence. Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 220, 49 L. Ed. 726.

"If in a civil case such recitals in the bill of exceptions are sufficient to show that it contains all the testimony, a fortiori should this be the rule in a criminal case, and the defendant therein should not be deprived of a full consideration of the question of his guilt by an omission from the bill of the technical recital that it contains all the evidence." Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 221, 49 L. Ed. 726.

70. Sufficiency of showing in civil cases.—Goodlett v. Louisville, etc., Railroad, 122 U. S. 391, 411, 30 L. Ed. 1230.

"This question was presented in Gunnison County Comm'rs v. Rollins, 173 U. S. 255, 43 L. Ed. 689, a civil case, brought to this court on certiorari to the circuit court of appeals, which court had held that the bill of exceptions did not purport to contain all the evidence adduced at the trial, and for that reason did not consider the question whether error was committed in instructing the jury to find for the defendant. Mr. Justice Harlan, delivering the unanimous opinion of the court, disposed of that question in these words (p. 261): 'We are of opinion that the bill of exceptions should be taken as containing all the evidence. It appears that as soon as the jury was sworn to try the issues in the cause "the complainants, to sustain the issues on their part, offered the following oral and documentary evinecessary that the bill of exceptions should state in express words that it contains all the evidence.[71] It is sufficient if the bill shows by a reasonable construction that all the evidence was contained therein.[72] And where the evidence returned in the bill of exceptions, which does not purport to contain all the evidence on the trial, is not sufficient, but the judge, in his charge to the jury, refers to evidence which does not appear in the bill, and he is not corrected by counsel, and no exception is taken to the statement, the supreme court will regard the evidence in the record as supplemented by the statement of the evidence by the court.[73]

(6) Presumptions on Appeal.—But when there is nothing whatever in the bill of exceptions to show that the evidence contained therein is all the evidence that was given on the trial, the appellate court cannot presume, for the purpose of reversing the judgment, that there was no evidence given upon which the jury might rightfully have found the verdict which they did.[74] Though where the record in a criminal case contains only a small portion of the testimony, the appellate court will presume that it was sufficient to establish the guilt of the defendant, and the judgment will be affirmed.[75]

F. The Instructions—1. In General.—As has been stated elsewhere in this title,[76] a bill of exceptions is necessary to incorporate the charge of the court in the record, and this can be accomplished in no other manner.

2. Necessity for Setting out the Facts or Evidence—a. Where Error Is Assigned to the Giving of Instructions—(1) In General.—Where error is assigned to the instructions given to the jury, the material facts or proofs on which the instructions rest should be inserted before the instructions, in order that the dence." Then follow many pages of testimony on the part of the plaintiffs, when this entry appears: "Whereupon complainants rested." Immediately after comes this entry: "Thereupon the defendants, to sustain the issues herein joined on their part, produced the following evidence." Then follow many pages of evidence given on behalf of the defendant, and the evidence of a witness recalled by the defendant, concluding with this entry: "Whereupon the further proceedings herein were continued until the 20th day of May, 1896, at 10 o'clock a. m." Immediately following is this entry: "Wednesday, May 20th, at 10 o'clock, the further trial of this cause was continued as follows." The transcript next shows some discussion by counsel as to the exclusion of particular evidence, after which is this entry: "Thereupon counsel for defendant made a formal motion under the evidence on both sides that the court instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant." Although the bill of exceptions does not state, in words, that it contains all the evidence, the above entries sufficiently show that it does contain all the evidence.'" 71. Affirmative statement in bill unnecessary.—"It is true there is no affirmative statement in the bill of exceptions that it contains all the testimony, but such omission is not fatal." Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 220, 49 L. Ed. 726.

73. Evidence in record may be supplemented by statement of evidence by court.—"It must be assumed that the statements of the court were correct statements of the testimony. If not, the bill of exceptions should have shown it, and some question made at the time in regard to the erroneous character of the charge upon the facts. Error must appear in the record and cannot be presumed." Sharp v. United States, 191 U. S. 341, 353, 48 L. Ed. 211.

Where it does not appear that the bill of exceptions contains all the evidence given upon the trial, this court cannot in the absence of any statement in the bill to that effect presume that it does for the purpose of reversing the judgment and verdict ascertaining that the defendant in an action for wrongfully cutting and taking the timber was not a bona fide resident under the act of congress of June 3d, 1878, 20 Stat. 88, permitting bona fide residents to fell and remove for certain purposes timber or other trees growing or being on public lands. appellate court may see if the points arise on which they are given, and to which exception is taken,[77] unless such preliminary evidence on which the judge instructed the jury is apparent.[78] In other words, when the question is on the soundness of the judge's law as given to the jury, he must, on his due responsibility, certify to the appellate court, and not to the jury, the evidence on which he pronounced the law.[79] And where none of the evidence given or offered on the trial is set out in the bill of exceptions to support the charge, this cannot be supplied by presumptions,[80] nor can the charge of the judge be looked to for the state of the evidence on which that very charge is to be held right or wrong,[81]

"As we understand the principles on which judgments here are reviewed by writ of error, that error must appear by some ruling on the pleadings, or on a state of facts presented to this court. Those facts, apart from the pleadings, can only be shown here by a special verdict, an agreed statement duly signed and submitted to the court below, or by bill of exceptions. When in the latter, complaint is made of the instructions of the court given or refused, it must be accompanied by a distinct statement of testimony given or offered which raises the question to which the instructions apply." Worthington v. Mason, 101 U. S. 149, 152, 25 L. Ed. 848, approved in Phœnix Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 196, 30 L. Ed. 644; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Madison, 123 U. Where an exception is taken to the giving or refusal of an instruction, the bill of exceptions must show that there was evidence to which the instruction given or refused was applicable. Phœnix Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 30 L. Ed. 644, citing Worthington v. Mason, 101 U. S. 149, 25 L. Ed. 848.

Where the bill of exceptions does not purport to set out all the evidence given in a case below, and it does not appear what other evidence, if any, was there given, a court of error will not reverse for an instruction whose correctness or want of it depends upon the state of the evidence; the terms of the instruction not necessarily implying that there were not facts in proof bearing upon the subject besides those of which the instruction was expressly predicated; and error not being matter to be presumed, but contrariwise. Wiggins v. Burkham, 10 Wall. 129, 19 L. Ed. 884.

In considering the question whether an instruction to the jury was erroneous, the appellate court is confined to the evidence reported in the bill of exceptions as the only means of ascertaining the precise state of facts on which the instruction to the jury was given. Whether the report of the evidence, as set forth in the bill of exceptions, may or may not be incomplete, or imperfectly stated, cannot be known in an appellate court. Chaffee v. Boston Belting Co., 22 How. 217, 222, 16 L. Ed. 240.

Where on an indictment for murder there is no portion of the evidence returned in the bill of exceptions, the federal supreme court cannot judge whether there was any which would justify, or which did justify the court in submitting the question of irresistible impulse to the jury. Hotema v. United States, 186 U. S. 413, 46 L. Ed. 1225.

Theory of the case.—The exception noted to the charge was, "that there is nothing in the pleadings, evidence, or record in this action to support or justify the theory of the plaintiffs stated by the court in this part of its charge here excepted to; that the portion of said charge here excepted to is prejudicial to the defendant and is misleading to the jury, is error in the charge and error in law on all the evidence and facts in the case." Held, the assignment is without merit. As all the evidence is not shown to be contained in the record, we must assume that there was evidence in the case tending to support plaintiffs' theory of the case stated by the court. The proof of the facts which make the charge erroneous must be distinctly set forth, or it must appear that evidence was given tending to prove them. It is not sufficient to show that the judge assumed this in his charge to the jury; it must be certified to the supreme court distinctly under his hand. Worthington v. Mason, 101 U. S. 149, 152, 25 L. Ed. 848, followed in New York, etc., R. Co. v. Madison, 123 U. S. 524, 31 L. Ed. 258.

nor is it to be sought for in the comments of the court to the jury on the testimony.[82]

(2) Instructions Giving Undue Prominence to Particular Evidence.—A bill of exceptions which alleges that the instructions of the court laid too large a stress upon the testimony of a particular witness, should embody the testimony at length, or so refer to it as to make it part of the record; otherwise a court of error must presume that it justified the instruction.[83]

(3) Showing as to Materiality of Instructions.—Where no evidence is set forth or referred to in a bill of exceptions, showing the materiality of the charge complained of, the case presents only an abstract proposition of law which may or may not have been stated by the court in a way injurious to the plaintiffs in error, and, therefore, will not be considered by the appellate court.[84]

b. Where Error Is Assigned to the Refusal to Give Instructions.—When error is assigned to the refusal of the court to give instructions, the bill of exceptions must set forth so much of the evidence as tends to prove the facts, out of which the question is raised to which the instructions apply.[85] Or as the rule has been otherwise expressed, bills of exceptions ought to state that evidence was offered of the facts upon which the opinion of the court is prayed, else the court is under no obligation to give the instruction.[86] Where the bill embodies only the instructions refused, the supreme court will not reverse the judgment.[87]

3. How Much of the Instructions Should Be Incorporated—a. In General.—But only so much of the charge as is excepted to should be embodied in the bill.[88] An appellate court has nothing to do with the charge of the court to the

Where error is assigned that the court below erred in its charge to the jury, but there is nothing in the record to show the materially of the charge complained of, or of the requests to charge which were refused, and no part of the evidence save that which was excepted to, is set out in the bill of exceptions, and there is no such statement of the facts proven as will enable this court to see that the charge as given or refused had any reference to the case as it appeared at the trial, the errors assigned will not be considered, because such a record presents only abstract questions of law, which may or may not have been ruled in a way to affect the defendant injuriously. The bringing up, with the record of the proceedings in the circuit court, the charge of the court at large, is a practice which the federal supreme court has often disapproved and deems incorrect. Conard v. Pacific Ins. Co., 6 Pet. 262, 8 L. Ed. 392.

The whole charge of the circuit court was brought up with the record. By the court: This is a practice which this court have uniformly discountenanced, and which the court trusts a rule made at last term will effectually suppress. Magniac v. Thomson, 7 Pet. 348, 8 L. Ed. 709.

"The whole charge to the jury is made part of the bill of exceptions, in accordance with a practice which this court for more than half a century has emphatically condemned, and has by repeated decisions, as well as by express rule, constantly endeavored to suppress. As long ago as 1822, Mr. Justice Story, speaking for the whole court, said: 'The charge is spread in extenso upon the record, a practice which is unnecessary and inconvenient, and may give rise to minute criticisms and observations upon points incidentally introduced, for purposes of argument or illustration, and by no means essential to the merits of the case.' Evans v. Eaton, 7 Wheat. 356, 426, 427, 5 L. Ed. 472. Opinions to the same effect have been delivered in many later cases. Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 80, 81, 7 L. Ed. 761; Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. Ed. 92; Conard v. Pacific Ins. Co., 6 Pet. 262, 280, 8 L. Ed. 392; Magniac v. Thomson, 7 Pet. 348, 390, 8 L. "The whole charge of the judge to the jury is incorporated into this record. This mode of making up the error books is exceedingly inconvenient and embarrassing to the court, and is a departure from familiar and established practice. So far as error is founded upon the bill of exceptions incorporated into the record, it lies only to exceptions taken at the trial, and to the ruling of the law by the judge, and to the admission or rejection of evidence. And only so much of the evidence as may be necessary to present the legal questions thus raised and noted should be carried into the bill of exceptions. All beyond serves to encumber and confuse the record, and to perplex and embarrass both court and counsel. The earlier forms under the statute giving the bill of exceptions are models which it would be wise to consult and adhere to." Zeller v. Eckert, 4 How. 289, 11 L. Ed. 979.

Duty of court below pointed out.—"The bill of exceptions in this case sets forth the charge of the court below in full, in disregard of our frequent condemnation of this practice. Only the parts to which the exceptions relate should have been given; all else is unnecessary, and produces only inconvenience. We repeat of this practice what we said of another practice not uncommon, and equally objectionable—that of inserting the entire evidence in the record: 'If counsel will not heed our admonitions upon this subject, so frequently expressed by us, the judges of the courts below, to whom the bills are presented, should withhold their signatures until the bills are prepared in proper form, freed from all matter not essential to explain and point the exceptions.' Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 137, 19 L. Ed. 106." United States v. Rindskopf, 105 U. S. 418, 421, 26 L. Ed. 1131.

89. Matters of fact and the weight of the evidence.—The practice of bringing the whole of the charge of the court delivered to the jury in the court below for review before the federal supreme court, is unauthorized and extremely inconvenient, both to the inferior and to the appellate court. With the charge of the court to the jury upon mere matters of fact, and with its commentaries upon the weight of evidence, this court has nothing to do. Observations of that nature are understood to be addressed to the jury merely for their consideration as the ultimate judges of the matters of fact, and are entitled to no more weight or importance than the jury in the exercise of their own judgment choose to give them. They neither are, nor are understood to of the judge to the jury is in direct violation of a rule of court.[90]

b. Matters Incidental to the Charge.—It is entirely clear that it is unnecessary to set forth matters merely incidental to the charge, and which had no immediate bearing upon the result of the case, or of the validity of the judgment.[91]

G. Papers and Documents.—1. In General.—When a paper which is to constitute a part of a bill of exceptions is not incorporated into the body of the bill, it must be annexed to it, or so marked by letter, number, or other means of identification mentioned in the bill, as to leave no doubt, when found in the record, that it is the one referred to in the bill of exceptions; otherwise it will be disregarded.[92] But the mere fact that a paper is found among the files in a cause be, binding on them as the true and conclusive exposition of the evidence. If, in summoning up the evidence to the jury, the court should misstate the law, that would justly furnish a ground for an exception. But the exception should be strictly confined to that misstatement, and by being made known at the moment, would often enable the court to correct an erroneous expression, so as to explain or qualify it in such manner as to make it wholly unexceptionable, or perfectly distinct. Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 7 L. Ed. 761, reaffirmed in Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. Ed. 92; Hicks v. United States, 150 U. S. 442, 457, 37 L. Ed. 1137, dissenting opinion of Brewer, J.

"Exceptions taken on the trial of a cause before a jury, for the purpose of submitting to the revision of this court questions of law decided by the circuit court, during the trial, cannot be taken in such a form as to bring the whole charge of the judge before this court—a charge in which he not only states the results of the law from the facts, but sums up all the evidence." Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. Ed. 92, citing with approval Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 80, 7 L. Ed. 761.

90. Rule of court condemns insertion of whole charge.—Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722; United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 158, 13 L. Ed. 643; Hickman v. Jones, 9 Wall. 197, 19 L. Ed. 551.

"And in 1832 this court adopted a rule, which, with slight verbal changes, has ever since remained in force, by which it was ordered, not only that the judges of the circuit and district courts should not allow any bill of exceptions containing the charge of the court at large to the jury in trials at common law, upon any ground of exception to the whole of such charge; but also, 'that the party excepting be required to state distinctly the several matters of law in such charge to which he excepts; and that such matters of law, and those only, be inserted in the bill of exceptions, and allowed by the court.' Rule 38 of 1832, 6 Pet. iv and 1 How. xxxiv; Rule 4 of 1858 and 1884, 21 How. vi and 108 U. S. 574." Phœnix Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 194, 30 L. Ed. 644.

"The 38th rule of this court, adopted at January term, 1832, directs that thereafter 'the judges of the circuit and district courts do not allow any bill of exceptions which shall contain the charge of the court at large to the jury, in trials at common law, upon any general exception to the whole of such charge, but that the party excepting be required to state distinctly the several matters in law in such charge, to which he excepts, and that such matters of law, and those only, be inserted in the bill of exceptions, and allowed by the court.'" Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black 209, 220, 17 L. Ed. 117.

"The whole charge of the court is spread upon the record (a practice which this court have uniformly discountenanced, and which, we trust, a rule made at the last term will effectually suppress), and the question now is, whether that charge contains any erroneous statement of the law; for as to the comments of the court upon the evidence, it is almost unnecessary to say, after what was said by this court in Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. 1, 80-1, 7 L. Ed. 761, that we have nothing to do with them. In examining the charge, for the purpose of ascertaining its correctness in point of law, the whole scope and hearing of it must be taken together. It is wholly inadmissible, to take up single and detached passages, and to decide upon them, without attending to the context, or without incorporating such qualifications and explanations as naturally flow from the language of other parts of the charge. In short, we are to construe the whole, as it must have been understood, both by the court and the jury, at the time when it was delivered." Magniac v. Thomson, 7 Pet. 348, 390, 8 L. Ed. 709.

Rule four.—If he objects to a specific portion of a charge, he should state only that portion. A paper filed in the circuit court upon the trial of a cause before that court with-does not of itself make it a part of the record. If not a part of the pleadings or process in the cause, it must be put into the record by some action of the court.[93] This may be done by a bill of exceptions, or something which is equivalent.[94]

2. Illustrative Cases.—A paper constituting the withdrawal of appearance is sufficiently brought into the record by a bill of exceptions in which it is set forth at length, and wherein it is averred that the paper was filed by the party in the cause.[95]

H. Proceedings before Special Tribunals—1. In General.—A bill of exceptions in courts of common law of original jurisdiction may embrace all such judgments or opinions of the court as arise in the course of a cause, which are the subjects of revision by an appellate court, and which do not otherwise appear on the record. But to present a question to the supreme court, the subordinate tribunal must ascertain the facts upon which the judgment or opinion excepted to is founded.[96]

2. Proceedings before Referees and Arbitrators.—Since the equity of the statute of Westminster allowing a bill of exceptions in courts of common law of original jurisdiction embraces all such judgments or opinions of the court as arise in the course of a cause which are the subjects of revision by an appellate court, and which do not otherwise appear on the record, therefore the testimony elicited before an arbitrator and his decision are properly embodied in a bill of exceptions.[97] out a jury, eight days after the opinion and findings of the court were filed, which paper forms no part of the bill of exceptions which is signed by the judge, but is a paper signed only by the attorney for the defendant, and purports to be exceptions to certain findings of fact made by the judge and to his conclusion based upon such findings, cannot be regarded as a bill of exceptions, or as part of the bill of exceptions signed by the judge, irrespectively of the point that this court cannot review the findings of fact. Sire v. Ellithorpe Air Brake Co., 137 U. S. 579, 34 L. Ed. 801.

93. Manner of incorporating papers.—Fisher v. Cockerell, 5 Pet. 248, 254, 8 L. Ed. 114; Sargeant v. State Bank, 12 How. 371, 384, 13 L. Ed. 1028, England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502, 505, 28 L. Ed. 811.

That a copy of a paper is attached to a pleading in the case, which purports to be the same as the paper mentioned in the bill of exceptions, does not make it a part of that bill, nor can the federal supreme court presume that it is the same paper read in evidence and excepted to. Leftwich v. Lecanu, 4 Wall. 187, 18 L. Ed. 388.

The fact that the papers not in the judgment roll are in the transcript, and certified to by the clerk, does not make them any part of the record on appeal. England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502, 28 L. Ed. 811; Young v. Martin, 8 Wall. 354, 19 L. Ed. 418; Sire v. Ellithorpe Air Brake Co., 137 U. S. 579, 34 L. Ed. 801.

Paper must be set forth in bill.—Where objections are made and exceptions are taken to receiving in evidence a certain paper (a certificate from a clerk of a court for a Louisiana parish), marked D., but the paper is not copied in, or annexed to the bill, the appellate court cannot know whether the objection was overruled because the paper was not what it assumed to be, or because the objection was not well taken, if it was. Weems v. George, 13 How. 190, 14 L. Ed. 108.

95. Paper constituting withdrawal of appearance.—Rio Grande Irrigation, etc., Co. v. Gildersleeve, 174 U. S. 603, 43 L. Ed. 1103. See, generally, the title APPEARANCES, vol. 2, p. 458.

"We agree, however, with the supreme court of the territory, that this letter, which constituted the withdrawal of appearance, was sufficiently brought into the record by the defendant's bill of exceptions, in which it is set forth at length, and wherein it is averred that said paper, signed by Pickett, was filed by plaintiff in said cause. The mere fact that a paper is found among the files in a cause does not of itself make it a part of the record. But it may be put into the record by a bill of exceptions, or something which is equivalent; so, at least, to enable the supreme court of the territory to deal with it as part of the record." I. Proceedings in Criminal Cases.—All the authorities agree that, in a criminal case, the judgment record should show what the prisoner is charged with, that the court had jurisdiction of the case, that the defendant was duly convicted, and the sentence.[98]

J. Rules of Practice.—When it is assigned for error that the court below has incorrectly construed its rules of practice, the rule should be incorporated in the bill of exceptions.[99]

VI. Settlement of Bill or Statement of Facts.

A. Duty to Draw Up and Tender Bill.—The duty of seasonably drawing up and tendering a bill of exceptions, stating distinctly the rulings complained of and the exceptions taken to them, belongs to the excepting party, and not to the court; the trial court has only to consider whether the bill tendered by the party is in due time, in legal form, and conformable to the truth; and the duty of the court of error is limited to determining the validity of exceptions duly framed and presented.[1]

B. Rule in District of Columbia.—The case or bill of exceptions, upon an appeal from the special to the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, is settled in the usual manner.[2] But whenever the judge is unable to settle the bill of exceptions, and counsel cannot settle it, a new trial will be granted.[3]

C. Notice of Request for Allowance.—Notice must be given to the op-

roy v. State Bank, 1 Wall. 592, 598, 17 L. Ed. 638; Heckers v. Fowler, 2 Wall. 123, 129, 17 L. Ed. 759; Bond v. Dustin, 112 U. S. 604, 606, 28 L. Ed. 835.

The opinion of the court below as to the regularity of a certain mode of proceeding before arbitrators, and whether the judgment can be revised, should be embodied in the bill. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Myers, 18 How. 246, 251, 15 L. Ed. 380, cited and approved in Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 131, 23 L. Ed. 260.

When the report is filed in court, the losing party may file objections in writing to the confirmation of the report, and may introduce evidence in support of the objections; and it is well-settled law, that the ruling of the court in overruling such objections is the proper subject of a bill of exceptions. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Trustees of Sixth Presbyterian Church, 91 U. S. 127, 131, 23 L. Ed. 260, citing New York, etc., R. Co. v. Myers, 18 How. 246, 250, 15 L. Ed. 380.

99. Rules of practice in trial court.—Whilst the right to plead the statute of limitations is no more within the discretion of the court than other pleas, when the refusal of the court to permit that plea to be filed is based on the allegation that it is not filed within the time prescribed by the rules of practice adopted in that court, it is necessary that the party excepting to the refusal shall incorporate the rule in his bill of exceptions, or the federal supreme court will presume that the court below construed correctly its own rules. Such rules are indispensable to the dispatch of business and the orderly administration of justice, and it must be presumed that the court below is familiar with the construction and course of practice under them. Packet Co. v. Sickles, 19 Wall. 611, 22 L. Ed. 203.

2. Appeals from general to special term of supreme court of district.—Metropolitan R. Co. v. Moore, 121 U. S. 558, 30 L. Ed. 1022.

3. "The supreme court of the District had power to prescribe rules upon the subject, and had done so. Under those rules, whenever the judge was unable to settle the bill of exceptions, and counsel could not settle it by agreement, a new trial followed as matter of course. If, therefore, in this case, the bill of exceptions was open to be settled at the time of the granting of the new trial, the power to grant the latter existed. If the bill were settled, the court in general term could hear the case, and if reversible error were found, could set aside the judgment; and if the bill could not be settled, the judgment was necessarily so far in fieri as to be susceptible of being vacated under the rule. Ordinarily where a party, without laches on his part, loses the benefit of his exceptions through the death or illness of the judge, a new trial will be granted." Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 253, 37 L. Ed. 438.

posite parties of an intention to ask for the allowance of a bill of exceptions, either during the term or after.[4]

D. Notice of Settlement—1. In General.—A reasonable compliance with a rule of court as to notice of settlement is all that is required.[5]

2. Service of Notice.—By rule of court in some circuits, notice of settlement of the bill must be served on the opposite party within a certain time.[6]

E. Time of Settlement—1. In General.—While the rule is well established and of long standing that an exception to be of any avail must be taken at the trial and before the jury withdraws from the bar,[7] which fact must ap-

4. Notice of request for bill must be given.—Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319.

5. Rule as to notice of settlement.—In the Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508, the defendant prepared and served its bill of exceptions within the forty days from January 25. The expression "prepare and serve," in the order allowing the forty days, clearly meant, in view of rules 67 and 69 of the circuit court for the Southern District of New York, that the proposed bill was to be prepared and served on the opposite party within the forty days, so that he might propose amendments to it within the time prescribed by the rules. It was so prepared and served within the forty days. It was retained by the plaintiff for ten days after its service. He then obtained, by stipulation from the defendant, ten days' more time to prepare and serve amendments. The proposed amendments were served on the tenth day and the notice of settlement was accepted, written admission of its service was given and it was retained. Under these and the other circumstances above detailed, we think the defendant was entirely regular in its practice and that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the objection that the time had elapsed, which he made before the district judge.

6. Service of notice of settlement.—Where the circuit judge was not in the district at the end of the four days allowed for service of notice of settlement of a bill of exceptions, service of such notice within fourteen days is sufficient compliance with the rule limiting the service of notice to four days. Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 553, 32 L. Ed. 508.

7. Exceptions must be seasonably taken.—Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182; Ex parte Bradstreet, 4 Pet. 102, 7 L. Ed. 796; Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850; Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 275, 12 L. Ed. 430; United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 555, 23 L. There can be no doubt that exceptions to the opinions given by courts below must all be taken at the time the opinions are pronounced. Garland v. Davis, 4 How. 131, 143, 11 L. Ed. 907.

"We hold now, as we have always holden, that when bills of exceptions are necessary to bring any matter upon record so that it can be reviewed in error, it must appear by the record that the exception was taken at the trial. A judge cannot afterwards allow one not taken in time. Could he allow it, the record would be made to speak falsely." Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 127, 24 L. Ed. 395.

It is not necessary that the bill of exceptions should be formally drawn and signed, before the trial is at an end. But the exception must be noted then, and must purport on its face so to have been, although signed afterwards nunc pro tunc. Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 14 L. Ed. 824, following The Fanny, 9 Wheat. 658, 6 L. Ed. 184; Ex parte Tillinghast, 4 Pet. 108, 7 L. Ed. 798; Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. 185, 9 L. Ed. 680; Tombigbee R. Co. v. Kneeland, 4 How. 16, 11 L. Ed. 855.

A bill of exceptions dated during the term at which the trial was had, though some days after the trial, is sufficient if it show that the exceptions were taken at the trial. French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. 506, 20 L. Ed. 702.

The theory of a bill of exceptions is that it states what occurred while the trial was going on. Accordingly the bill of exceptions must show that the exceptions were taken in the progress of the trial to what was done by the court below, because the power of this court is confined to exceptions actually taken at the trial. Railway Co. v. Heck, 102 U. S. 120, 26 L. Ed. 58.

Exceptions to instructions.—"It has been repeatedly ruled by this court, as will appear by the cases reported, that no instruction to the jury, given or refused by the court below, can be brought here for revision by writ of error, unless the record shows that the exception to it was taken or reserved while the jury were at the bar." Barton v. Forsyth, 20 How. 532, 533, 15 L. Ed. 1012.

Effect of use of wrong tense.—Where a bill of exceptions at all fairly discloses the fact that the exceptions were made in proper time, the appellate court will not allow the right of review by it to be defeated because the bill uses words in the present tense, when the true expression of the court's meaning required the use of the past one; nor because the bill is unskillfully drawn, and justly open philologically, to censure. Simpson v. Dall, 3 Wall. 460, 18 L. Ed. 265.

Under the statute of Westminster 2, the courts have always held that the exceptions should be taken and reduced to writing at the trial. Not that they need not be drawn up in form; but the substance must be reduced to writing while the thing is prosecuted. The practice is well settled also by the decisions of this court. Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 274, 12 L. Ed. 430, citing 1 Bac. Abr., tit. Bill of Exceptions; Ex parte Bradstreet, 4 Pet. 102, 106, 7 L. Ed. 796; Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 657, 6 L. Ed. 182.

It has been repeatedly decided, by the federal supreme court, that it must appear by the transcript, not only that the instructions were given or refused at the trial, but also that the party who complains of them excepted to them while the jury were at the bar. The Statute of Westminster 2d, which provides for the proceeding by exceptions, requires in explicit terms that this should be done; and if it is not done, the charge of the court, or its refusal to charge as requested, form no part of the record, and cannot be carried before the appellate court by writ of error. It need not be drawn out in form and signed before the jury retire; but it must be taken in open court, and must appear, by the certificate of the judge who authenticates it, to have been so taken. Nor is this a mere formal or technical provision. It was introduced and is adhered to for purposes of justice. For if it is brought to the attention of the court that one of the parties excepts to his opinion, he has an opportunity of reconsidering or explaining it more fully to the jury. And if the exception is to evidence, the opposite party might be able to remove it, by further testimony, if apprised of it in time. Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 161, 14 L. Ed. 643, cited in Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 555, 23 L. Ed. 983.

Recitals as to time of taking exceptions.—In the case of Barton v. Forsyth, 20 How. 532, 15 L. Ed. 1012, it appeared that after the verdict and judgment the defendant filed a motion, supported by affidavit, which was overruled. Following the recital of this fact, the record added, "to all which decisions, rulings and instructions defendant then and there excepted;" and it was held that such recital showed that the exceptions were taken at the time of the overruling of the motion. Cited with approval in New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 22, 35 L. Ed. 919.

The record sufficiently shows that the rulings of the court were excepted to at the time the rulings were made, and before the jury retired from the bar of the court, where just preceding the formal part of the bill of exceptions is the statement in the record that "the following exceptions were made by the defendants upon the trial of this cause," and that the same "were allowed by the court," and immediately following the instructions given is the additional statement that the "defendants then and there excepted" to the instructions, rulings, and decisions of the court. Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 17 L. Ed. 253, followed in Kellogg v. Forsyth, 2 Black 571, 17 L. Ed. 256.

Exceptions to evidence.—In New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. Ed. 919, the bill of exceptions recited in the ordinary form the coming on of the case to trial, the impaneling of a jury, the testimony offered and the instructions given and refused. "In respect to one matter of testimony, the bill of exceptions recites: 'Whereupon the court refused to allow the testimony, to which ruling the defendant excepted.' So, following the recital in respect to the last matter of instructions, is the statement 'to which defendant excepted.' It is true the words used are not 'then and there excepted,' neither is it said that the court 'then and there instructed;' but as the bill purports to be a recital of what took place on the trial, it is to be assumed that the instructions were given, and the exceptions taken, during and as a part of the trial. The statement as to the exception follows that as to the instructions, and the only fair and reasonable intendment from the language is that as the one was given, so the other was taken, at the trial. The same form of recital was pursued in the case of United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900, and held sufficient."

Exceptions to instructions.—Where the bill of exceptions states "(1) The court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant. (2) The jury returned a verdict in accordance with said instructions, and judgment was thereupon entered up in behalf of defendant in pursuance of said instructions; and to said instructions, verdict and judgment, the plaintiff, by his counsel, excepted and now excepts, during the term at which said case was tried and while said term is still in session, and assigns the same as error, and prays the court to sign and certify this exception," it was held that the general instruction of the court to find for the defendant was excepted to at the proper time. Dunlap v. Northeastern R. Co., 130 U. S. 649, 653, 32 L. Ed. 1058.

In Railroad Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 19 L. Ed. 909, the bill of exceptions commenced after the title of the case, by saying that, "on the trial of this cause, the following proceedings were had." Then came the testimony introduced, the prayer pear affirmatively in the record by a bill of exceptions,[8] and that it comes too late after verdict,[9] or judgment,[10] it is equally well settled that it may be drawn of the plaintiff in error for five distinct instructions, the refusal of the court to grant them, and the instructions which the court did give (all as already mentioned), and the statement that the defendant excepted to the action of the court in refusing the instructions aforesaid, and also in giving the charge aforesaid, and also in overruling his motion for a new trial. Held: It is a reasonable inference from the language used at the beginning and end of this bill, that the exceptions were taken during the trial, as the rulings excepted to were made.

Rule in Mississippi.—Mississippi has a statute providing for the case of exceptions to be taken in the progress of the trial in the usual form, and this is the practice in the federal courts. Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850.

8. That party "then and there excepted" must appear affirmatively.—Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182; Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850; Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 14 L. Ed. 643; Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 14 L. Ed. 824; United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900; Barton v. Forsyth, 20 How. 532, 15 L. Ed. 1012; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 35 L. Ed. 919.

The rule is well established and of long standing that an exception to be of any avail must be taken at the trial. It may be reduced to form and signed afterwards, but the fact that it was seasonably taken must appear affirmatively in the record by a bill of exceptions duly allowed or otherwise. Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 14 L. Ed. 643; United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900; French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. 506, 20 L. Ed. 702; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983; Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 26 L. Ed. 113; United States v. Carey, 110 U. S. 51, 52, 28 L. Ed. 67.

In order to make a bill of exceptions valid, it must appear by the transcript not only that the instructions were given or refused at the trial, but also that the party who complains of them, excepted to them while the jury were at the bar. The bill of exceptions need not be drawn out in form and signed before the jury retire; but it must be taken in open court and must appear by the certificate of the judge who authenticates it, to have been so taken. Hence, when the verdict was rendered on the 13th of December, and on the next day the plaintiff came into court and filed his exception, it is not properly before this court. And no error being assigned or appearing in the other proceedings, the judgment of the circuit court must be affirmed, with costs. Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 14 L. Ed. 643, citing Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 275, 12 L. Ed. 430.

9. The bill of exceptions must be tendered before the verdict.—Jones v. Insurance Co., 4 Dall. 246, 1 L. Ed. 819.

Time is usually given to put what was done into an appropriate form for the record; but, unless objection was made and exception taken before the verdict, no case is presented for a review here of the rulings at the trial. Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182; Railway Co. v. Heck, 102 U. S. 120, 26 L. Ed. 58.

In the case of Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 14 L. Ed. 643, the verdict was rendered on the 13th of December, and the next day the plaintiff came into court and filed his exceptions, and there was nothing to show that any exception was reserved pending the trial. Cited in New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 22, 35 L. Ed. 919.

"It may be further remarked that the alleged bills of exception do not show that the exceptions were taken on the trial. While exceptions may be reduced to form and signed after the trial, they must appear affirmatively to have been taken before the jury withdrew from the bar. United States v. Carey, 110 U. S. 51, 28 L. Ed. 67, and cases cited. Here it is expressly stated that the exceptions were taken on the 8th day of October, two days after the return of the verdict. This was too late." Pacific Express Co. v. Malin, 132 U. S. 531, 538, 33 L. Ed. 450.

Where the verdict was returned on October 21, and on November 2 counsel for defendant came into court, and sought to save other exceptions to the charge, the court will note those exceptions but will decline to make any ruling on them, because they are obviously too late. Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 40 L. Ed. 237, citing Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 36 L. Ed. 162.

Before delivery of verdict.—But counsel may tender exceptions for the first time to the charge of the court when the jury are at the bar, ready to deliver a verdict. Jones v. Insurance Co., 4 Dall. 246, 1 L. Ed. 819.

And although the jury have agreed upon a verdict and sealed it up, until it has been opened and confirmed in court, it is, in fact, no verdict. It will be sufficient, if the substance of the exception be reduced to writing and tendered to the court, before the verdict has been delivered. The exception may afterwards be reduced to form, and the court is not bound to suspend the trial of a cause, until a bill of exceptions is drawn in form and sealed. Cochran v. Cummings, 4 Dall. 250, 1 L. Ed. 820.

10. An exception comes too late after up and signed by the judge after the trial during the term,[11] and the time within which this may be done must depend upon the rules and practice of the court rendition of judgment.—In the case of Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182, it appeared that the exception was not taken until after the judgment. Cited in New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 22, 35 L. Ed. 919.

Where there is nothing whatever to indicate that any exception was taken to the rejection of the evidence complained of until the next term after the trial was over and the judgment rendered, though not signed, even the liberal extension of the rule granted in Simpson v. Dall, 3 Wall. 460, 18 L. Ed. 265, is not enough to reach this defect. "The language here implies an exception only at the time of tendering the bill of exceptions to be signed, which was not only long after the trial, but at a subsequent term of the court." United States v. Carey, 110 U. S. 51, 52, 28 L. Ed. 67.

11. Bill may be settled and signed after trial and during term.—United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900; Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 568, 17 L. Ed. 253; Kellogg v. Forsyth, 2 Black 571, 573, 17 L. Ed. 256; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 555, 23 L. Ed. 983; Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 133, 24 L. Ed. 395; Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 354, 26 L. Ed. 113; Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 143, 30 L. Ed. 1090; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 22, 35 L. Ed. 919; Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 37 L. Ed. 438.

"The attention of this court has, upon several occasions, been called to this subject, and the rule established by its decisions will be found to be this; the exception must show that it was taken and reserved by the party at the trial, but it may be drawn out in form and sealed by the judge afterwards. This point was directly decided in the case of Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 14 L. Ed. 643; and again, in Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 28, 14 L. Ed. 824." United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 254, 15 L. Ed. 900; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983.

An exception taken to the ruling of a court, before the retirement of the jury from the bar, may be drawn out in form and sealed by the judge afterwards. Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 17 L. Ed. 253.

If an exception be seasonably taken and reserved, it may be drawn out and sealed by the judge afterwards, and the time within which it may be so drawn out and presented to the court must depend on the rules and practice of the court and the judicial discretion of the presiding justice. Kellogg v. Forsyth, 2 Black 571, 17 L. Ed. 256.

"It is true that in the hurry of the trial the bill is not often reduced to form and sealed or signed. Generally an exception is only noted by the judge at the time claimed, and it is subsequently drawn up." Insurance Co. v. Lanier, 95 U. S. 171, 24 L. Ed. 383.

It is no doubt necessary that exceptions should be taken and, at least, noted before the rendition of the verdict; but the reduction of the bills to form, and the signature of the judge to the bills, required for their attestation, or, as said in the Statute of Westminster, "for a testimony," may be afterwards, during the term. Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 353, 26 L. Ed. 113.

The rule is one of convenience.—"Undoubtedly the rule is that the record must show that the exception relied on was taken and reserved by the party at the trial; but it is a mistake to suppose that it has ever been held by this court that it must be drawn out and sealed by the judge before the jury retire from the bar of the court. Great inconvenience would result from such a requirement, and in point of fact there is no such rule. On the contrary, it is always allowable, if the exception be seasonably taken and reserved, that it may be drawn out in form and sealed by the judge afterwards; and the time within which it may be so drawn out and presented to the court must depend on the rules and practice of the court, and the judicial discretion of the presiding justice. Such was the rule laid down by this court in United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 254, 15 L. Ed. 900, and we see no reason to qualify it on the present occasion. See, also, Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 14 L. Ed. 643; Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 28, 14 L. Ed. 824." Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 568, 17 L. Ed. 253.

"Bills of exceptions cannot always be formally prepared until a considerable time after verdict and judgment. They may require, in some cases, a full statement of almost all that occurred at the trial. Papers necessary to be incorporated may be mislaid or withheld by the opposite party; the charge of the judge, to which exception has been taken, may not have been filed, or sickness may have interfered. Meanwhile, judgment on the verdict may have been entered, and unless the party can protect himself by a writ of error, an execution may follow. For these reasons, the universal practice is to give reasonable time to make up the bills of exceptions and obtain the signature. This is not altering the record, it is completing it. It is not exercising jurisdiction over the case. It is merely putting into form the record statement of what was done before the writ of error was sent down." Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 356, 26 L. Ed. 113.

Practice is not to reduce bill to form until afterwards.—It is well settled that and the judicial discretion of the presiding judge.[12] The convenient dispatch of business, in most cases, does not allow the preparation and signature of bills of exceptions during the progress of a trial.[13] This practice is well settled and exceedingly plain and simple, and will be strictly adhered to by the court.[14]

2. Signing Nunc Pro Tunc.—Where the bill of exceptions is signed by the judge after the trial, it is signed nunc pro tunc, and purports on its face to be bills of exceptions are restricted to matter which occurred during the progress of the trial; but it is not necessary, neither is it the practice, to reduce to form every exception as it is taken, and before the trial is at an end. It will do for the judge to note them as they occur, and after the trial is over, if it is desirable to preserve them, they can be properly embodied in a bill of exceptions. Simpson v. Dall, 3 Wall. 460, 473, 18 L. Ed. 265, criticised in United States v. Carey, 110 U. S. 51, 52, 28 L. Ed. 67, as being a "liberal extension" of the rule.

In practice it is not usual to reduce bills of exception to form and to obtain the signature of the judge during the progress of the trial. Nor is it necessary. The Statute of Westminster did not require it. It would greatly and uselessly retard the business of courts were it required that every time an exception is taken the progress of the trial should be stayed until the bill could be reduced to form and signed by the judge. For this reason it has always been held that the exception need only be noted at the time it is made, and may be reduced to form within a reasonable time after the trial is over. United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900; Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 564, 17 L. Ed. 253; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983; Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 354, 26 L. Ed. 113.

Formal bill to overruling motion for new trial settled and signed after motion overruled. Railroad Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 188, 19 L. Ed. 909.

12. Time of settling and signing after trial depends on rules of practice and judicial discretion.—United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 254, 15 L. Ed. 900; Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 17 L. Ed. 253; Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508; Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 253, 37 L. Ed. 438.

The record must show that the exception was taken at that stage of the trial when its cause arose. The time and manner of placing the evidence of the exception formally on the record are matters belonging to the practice of the court in which the trial is held. Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 29, 14 L. Ed. 824.

Their requisite certainty and accuracy can hardly be secured, if any considerable delay afterwards be permitted; and it is for each court in which cases are tried to secure, by its rules, that prompt attention to the subject necessary for the preservation of the actual occurrences on which the validity of the exception depends; and so to administer those rules that no artificial or imperfect case shall be presented here for adjudication. Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 29, 14 L. Ed. 824.

Exceptions reserved at the trial of the cause may, within such time thereafter during the time as the judge shall deem reasonable, be reduced to form and presented to him for signature. Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 26 L. Ed. 113, citing United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 253, 15 L. Ed. 900; Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 564, 17 L. Ed. 253; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983.

Execution to admission of evidence.—In the ordinary course of things, on the trial of a cause before a jury, if an objection is made and overruled, as to the admission of evidence, and the party does not take any exception, he is understood to waive it. The exception need not, indeed, then be put in form, or written out at large and signed; but it is sufficient, if it be taken, and the right reserved to put it in form, within the time prescribed by the practice or the rules of the court. Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. 185, 9 L. Ed. 680.

13. Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 29, 14 L. Ed. 824.

Beyond doubt, the record must show expressly or impliedly that the exception was taken and reserved by the party at the trial; but it is a mistake to suppose that it has ever been decided by this court that it must be drawn out and signed or sealed by the judge before the jury retire from the bar. Manifest inconvenience would result from such a requirement; and, in point of fact, there is no such rule. On the contrary, it is always allowable, if the exception is seasonably taken and reserved, that it may afterwards be put in form and filed in the case, pursuant to the order and direction of the judge who presided at the trial. Dredge v. Forsyth, 2 Black 563, 568, 17 L. Ed. 253; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 555, 23 L. Ed. 983.

Formal bill settled after overruling motion for new trial.—It is a common practice, convenient in dispatch of business, to permit the party to claim and note an exception when the occasion arises, but defer reducing it to a formal instrument until the trial is over. Railroad Co. v. Reeves, 10 Wall. 176, 188, 19 L. Ed. 909.

14. Practice must be strictly complied with.—Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 15, 11 L. Ed. 850.

the same as if actually reduced to form, and signed, during the trial,[15] though it is not necessary to render it effective that it be antedated, or ordered to be filed nunc pro tunc, as of a time during the trial.[16]

3. Removal of Causes from District of Columbia.—Writs of error from the federal supreme court to the supreme court of the District of Columbia are governed by the same rules and regulations as are those to the circuit courts. When, therefore, the record shows that an exception was taken and reserved at the trial, it is not necessary that the bill of exceptions be drawn out in form, and signed or sealed by the judge, before the jury retires; but it may be so signed or sealed at a later period; and, when filed nunc pro tunc, brings the case within the settled practice of courts of error.[17]

4. Settlement during or after the Term—a. In General.—Save under very extraordinary circumstances,[18] the bill of exceptions must be settled and

15. Signing nunc pro tunc.—Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 657, 6 L. Ed. 182; Turner v. Yates, 16 How. 14, 14 L. Ed. 824; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983.

It is not necessary, that a bill of exceptions should be formally drawn and signed, before the trial is at an end; the exception may be taken at the trial, and noted by the court, and may afterwards, during the term, be reduced to form, and signed by the judge; but in such cases, it is signed nunc pro tunc, and purports, on its face, to be the same as if actually reduced to form, and signed, during the trial; it would be a fatal error, if it were to appear otherwise. Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850; Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 12 L. Ed. 430; Phelps v. Mayer, 15 How. 160, 14 L. Ed. 643; Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 652, 6 L. Ed. 182.

The statutes of Iowa provide a mode for taking bills of exceptions, by directing that they shall be tendered to the judge for his signature during the progress of the trial, although judges may, and often do, sign bills of exception, nunc pro tunc, after the trial. Such is also the English practice under the Statute of Westminster 2, and such is the practice recognized by this court. Therefore, where a bill of exceptions was signed two years after the trial (but not nunc pro tunc), the supreme court of Iowa were right in striking it out of the record. Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 12 L. Ed. 430.

In Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 274, 12 L. Ed. 430, the supreme court declined to interfere with the action of the supreme court of the territory of Iowa in refusing to grant a mandamus to the judge of the district court to sign a bill of exceptions nunc pro tunc, tendered two years or more after the trial. "It is true, judges may, and often do, sign bills of exception after the trial, nunc pro tunc, the bills being dated as if taken on the trial; but the propriety of their refusal to do so on particular occasions depends on so many circumstances which cannot appear on the record, and are known only to themselves, that we ought not to presume they have acted improperly in the exercise of their discretion. Certainly a judge ought not to be called on to make up a bill of exceptions two or more years after a trial, where the counsel have disagreed as to the facts, and failed to settle the exceptions at the term in which the cause was tried."

Findings of court.—Where the court tried the issues of fact, and its opinion, embodying its findings and the conclusions of law thereon, was filed concurrently with the entry of the judgment, but there was no formal finding of facts, and the court, at the next following term, upon a rule awarded, and, after hearing the parties, made an order that a special finding, with the conclusions of law conformable to that opinion so filed, be entered nunc pro tunc, and made part of the record as of the term when the judgment was rendered, held, that the order was within the discretion of the court, and that by it such special finding became a part of the record of the cause, and that the judgment upon it is, without a bill of exceptions, subject to review here. Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. Ed. 395. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 1028.

16. Necessity for antedating or filing nunc pro tunc.—Where a bill of exceptions is signed during the term at which the trial took place, though after the close of the trial, it is not necessary to render it effective that it be antedated, or ordered to be filed nunc pro tunc, as of the time during the trial. Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 26 L. Ed. 113, explaining Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182.

17. Removal of causes from the District.—Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. Ed. 983.

18. Extraordinary circumstances may justify settlement after term.—Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 250, 23 L. Ed. 319, cited and distinguished in Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 603, 37 L. Ed. 1195; Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 143, 30 L. Ed. 1090, cited in Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 298, 36 L. Ed. 162.

Signing after adjournment upheld under special circumstances.—The circuit signed during the term at which the judgment was rendered;[19] it cannot be settled after the term at which it was rendered expires,[20] or at a subsequent court of the United States in Alabama, by a general rule, adopted the practice of the state courts, which is regulated by a statute providing that no bill of exceptions can be signed after the adjournment of the court, unless with the consent of counsel, etc. But where a judge holding the circuit court in Alabama signed a bill of exceptions under special circumstances, after adjournment, and without the consent of counsel, the federal supreme court will consider the exception as properly before it. It is in the power of a court to suspend its own rules, or except a particular case from them, to subserve the purposes of justice. United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900, expressly approved in Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 143, 30 L. Ed. 1090.

19. Bill must be settled during term.—Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850; Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 250, 23 L. Ed. 319; Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 602, 37 L. Ed. 1195.

"As early as Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182, the power to reduce exceptions taken at the trial to form, and to have them signed and filed, was, under ordinary circumstances, confined to a time not later than the term at which the judgment was rendered. This, we think, is the true rule, and one to which there should be no exceptions without an express order of the court during the term or consent of the parties, save under very extraordinary circumstances." Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 251, 23 L. Ed. 319, reaffirmed in Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 37 L. Ed. 1195, and distinguished in Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 143, 30 L. Ed. 1090; Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 555, 32 L. Ed. 508.

By the uniform course of decision, no exceptions to rulings at a trial can be considered by this court, unless they were taken at the trial, and were also embodied in a formal bill of exceptions presented to the judge at the same term, or within a further time allowed by order entered at that term, or by standing rule of court, or by consent of parties; and, save under very extraordinary circumstances, they must be allowed by the judge and filed with the clerk during the same term. After the term has expired, without the court's control over the case being reserved by standing rule or special order, and especially after a writ of error has been entered in this court, all authority of the court below to allow a bill of exceptions then first presented, or to alter or amend a bill of exceptions already allowed and filed, is at an end. United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900; Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319; Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 26 L. Ed. 113; Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 30 L. Ed. 1090; Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508; Jones v. Grover, etc., Sewing Machine Co., 131 U. S., appx. cl, 24 L. Ed. 925; Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 298, 36 L. Ed. 162.

Illustrative cases.—In Jones v. Grover, etc., Sewing Machine Co., 131 U. S., appx. cl, 24 L. Ed. 925, the judgment was rendered at the June term, 1875, "the writ of error sued out July 16, and the citation served the same day. The authentication of the transcript of the record annexed to and returned with the writ, as required by § 997, Rev. Stat., bears date October 7, and the bill of exceptions, signed as it was after that time, is simply appended to what was thus authenticated. There is nothing to show that it was ever even filed in the office of the clerk of the court. Certainly such a paper cannot be considered here." Cited in United States v. Jones, 149 U. S. 262, 37 L. Ed. 726.

Where the court below rendered judgment upon a finding, and at the next term, in the absence of any special circumstances in the case, and without the consent of parties or any previous order on the subject, allowed and signed a bill of exceptions, and directed it to be filed as of the date of the trial, it was held, that the bill, although returned with the record, cannot be considered here as a part thereof. Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319, citing Generes v. Bonnemer, 7 Wall. 564, 565, 19 L. Ed. 287; Flanders v. Tweed, 9 Wall. 425, 19 L. Ed. 678; Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182, and distinguishing United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 253, 15 L. Ed. 900, distinguished in Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 143, 30 L. Ed. 1090.

Clerical errors.—Where a bill of exceptions purported to have been taken at April term, 1848, but the record showed that at that time no suit between the parties was pending, and that the trial took place in April, 1849, the date of 1848 must be considered as a clerical error. The certificate from the circuit court showed that the bill of exceptions was regularly allowed upon the trial, and this must be conclusive upon this court. United States v. Wilkinson, 12 How. 252, 13 L. Ed. 974.

20. Bill cannot be settled after the term expires.—Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 127, 24 L. Ed. 395; Glaspell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 144 U. S. 211, 36 L. Ed. 409; Morse v. Anderson, 150 U. S. 156, 37 L. Ed. 1037.

The rule is unquestionably correctly laid down in Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319, that when judgment has been rendered, and the term expires, a bill of exceptions cannot be allowed, term,[21] unless by an express order of the court made during the term,[22] by consigned and filed as of the date of the trial, in the absence of any special circumstances in the case, and without the consent of parties or any previous order of court. Cited in Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 253, 37 L. Ed. 438.

Where the bill of exceptions is not tendered to the judge or signed by him until the court has adjourned for the term, and no order is entered extending the time for its presentation, nor is there any consent of parties thereto, nor any standing rule of court which authorizes such approval, the bill of exceptions allowed thereafter is improvidently allowed, and the judgment will be affirmed if the errors assigned arise upon the bill of exceptions. United States v. Jones, 149 U. S. 262, 37 L. Ed. 726, citing Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319; Jones v. Grover, etc., Sewing Machine Co., 131 U. S., appx. cl, 24 L. Ed. 925; Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 36 L. Ed. 162.

21. Bill cannot be settled at subsequent term.—The court, at a term subsequent to the judgment, cannot lawfully allow and sign a bill of exceptions not noted at the trial. Insurance Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. Ed. 395.

22. Express order of court may allow settlement after term.—Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 555, 32 L. Ed. 508, distinguishing Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319; Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 298, 36 L. Ed. 162; United States v. Jones, 149 U. S. 262, 37 L. Ed. 726.

Where the record discloses an express order of the court during the judgment term extending the time for preparing and presenting a bill of exceptions, the rule that the power to reduce exceptions taken at the trial to form and have them signed and filed is, under ordinary circumstances, confined to a time not later than the term at which the judgment was rendered, does not apply. Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 37 L. Ed. 1195, citing Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319; Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182, and distinguishing Morse v. Anderson, 150 U. S. 156, 158, 37 L. Ed. 1037.

The law requires that a bill of exceptions should be tendered at the trial. If a party intends to take a bill of exceptions, he should give notice to the judge at the trial; and if he does not file it at the trial, he should move the judge to assign a reasonable time within which he may file it. A practice to sign it after the term must be understood to be matter of consent between the parties, unless the judge has made an express order in the term, allowing such a period to prepare it. Ex parte Bradstreet, 4 Pet. 102, 7 L. Ed. 796.

Muller v. Ehlers distinguished.—"The decision in Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319, has no application because here the rights of the defendant were saved by the express order of the court made during the term, and by a sufficient compliance on the part of the defendant with the rules of the circuit court, and by what must be held to have been the consent of the plaintiff." Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 556, 32 L. Ed. 508.

Must be settled within time fixed by special order.—Where the time is extended for settling and filing a bill of exceptions, the federal supreme court will not review bills of exceptions signed after the time fixed by such special order of the court has expired. Morse v. Anderson, 150 U. S. 156, 37 L. Ed. 1037, citing Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319; Jones v. Grover, etc., Sewing Machine Co., 131 U. S., appx. cl, 24 L. Ed. 925; Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 36 L. Ed. 162; Glaspell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 144 U. S. 211, 36 L. Ed. 409; Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 37 L. Ed. 438, cited in Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 597, 37 L. Ed. 1195.

Where an order is made extending the time for signing and settling the bill, it must be signed within the time limited in the order; if signed after the expiration of that time, the bill of exceptions is void. Jones v. Grover, etc., Sewing Machine Co., 131 U. S., appx. cl, 24 L. Ed. 925; Morse v. Anderson, 150 U. S. 156, 157, 37 L. Ed. 1037; Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 36 L. Ed. 162; Glaspell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 144 U. S. 211, 36 L. Ed. 409; Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 37 L. Ed. 438.

Practice in North Dakota.—In Glaspell v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 144 U. S. 211, 222, 36 L. Ed. 409, the time within which to settle a bill of exceptions was extended six times. The first was by consent of counsel, the second for reasons given, the third, as asserted, "upon good cause shown," and the fourth, fifth and last extension assigned no ground. The last order of extension expired June 29, 1889, defendant having ten days after the settling of the bill within which to serve notice of intention to move for new trial and within which to move for a new trial. The bill of exceptions was, nevertheless, signed August 30, 1889, and filed September 3. The certificate originally stated not only the date but that the settlement was "within the time provided by law, as enlarged and extended by orders of the judge of this court," but subsequently these words were stricken out by the judge, and the question whether the bill was improvidently signed or not was left open, unless the rule be applied, as subsequently laid down by the supreme court sent or agreement of parties given during the term,[23] or by standing rule of

of the state, that the settlement, whenever made, in itself operated to extend the time. Notice of the intention to move and of the motion appear to have been given on the third of September, returnable on September 12, 1889, and the hearing appears to have been extended by the judge until September 21. Here the record becomes silent. It is nowhere disclosed that the defendant appeared to prosecute its motion on the 21st of September, and whatever liberality might be indulged under the provisions of the territorial code, as now expounded by the supreme court of the state, we are not prepared to hold, in passing upon the question before us, that any motion was pending on the 7th of December, 1889, there being no evidence whatever that a motion was ever made, except the action of the court assigning the hearing of a proposed motion for a day more than two months before, which came and went without such hearing, the meditated motion having apparently been waived and abandoned. Held, this bill of exceptions was not settled and filed within the time allowed by the laws of North Dakota or under any order of the court.

• 23. Stipulation of parties may allow settlement after term.—Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 30 L. Ed. 1090; United States v. Jones, 149 U. S. 262, 37 L. Ed. 726; Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 250, 23 L. Ed. 319; Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 556, 32 L. Ed. 508, distinguishing Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 250, 23 L. Ed. 319.

The signing of the bill of exceptions, after the expiration of the term at which the judgment was rendered, is lawful if done by consent of parties given during that term. Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 26 L. Ed. 113; Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 30 L. Ed. 1090; Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 36 L. Ed. 162; Waldron v. Waldron, 156 U. S. 361, 378, 39 L. Ed. 453.

The law requires that a bill of exceptions should be tendered at the trial. But the usual practice is to request the judge to note down in writing the exceptions, and afterwards, during the session of the court, to hand him the bill of exceptions, and submit it to his correction from his notes. If he is to resort to his memory, it should be handed to him immediately, or in a reasonable time after the trial. It would be dangerous, to allow a bill of exceptions, of matters dependent on memory, at a distant period, when he may not accurately recollect them; and the judge ought not to allow it. If the party intends to take a bill of exceptions, he should give notice to the judge at the trial; and if he does not file it at the trial, he should move the judge to assign a reasonable time within which he may file it. A practice to sign it after the term, must be understood to be a matter of consent between the parties, unless the judge has made an express order in the term, allowing such a period to prepare it. Ex parte Bradstreet, 4 Pet. 102, 107, 7 L. Ed. 796.

Where the bill has the sanction and signature of the judge, though settled after the trial, yet if it was agreed upon by the parties, "it is free from objections which have prevailed in other cases. Generes v. Bonnemer, 7 Wall. 564, 19 L. Ed. 287; Graham v. Bayne, 18 How. 60, 15 L. Ed. 265." Herbert v. Butler, 97 U. S. 319, 320, 24 L. Ed. 958.

Delay agreed to for convenience of judge.—Although a bill of exceptions was signed after the beginning of the term of the federal supreme court at which the writ of error was made returnable, and during the term of the circuit court succeeding that at which the case was tried, a motion to strike out will be denied if the record shows a stipulation between the parties that the matter of the settlement of the bill had been submitted to the judge, and that the delay was agreed to for the convenience of the judge. Davis v. Patrick, 122 U. S. 138, 30 L. Ed. 1090, following United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 15 L. Ed. 900, and distinguishing Walton v. United States, 9 Wheat. 651, 6 L. Ed. 182; Ex parte Bradstreet, 4 Pet. 102, 7 L. Ed. 796; Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 12 L. Ed. 430; Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 23 L. Ed. 319; Coughlin v. District of Columbia, 106 U. S. 7, 27 L. Ed. 74.

Case distinguished.—"This case differs very materially from that of United States v. Breitling, 20 How. 252, 253, 15 L. Ed. 900. There the bill of exceptions was prepared during the term, and presented to the court for allowance four days before the adjournment. It was handed back to the attorney presenting it, three days before the adjournment, with the request that he submit it to the opposing counsel. Delay occurred, and the signature was not actually affixed until after the term. Under the special circumstances of that case, the signature, after the term, was recognized as proper. The particular grounds for this ruling are not stated; but it was probably for the reason, that, upon the facts stated, the consent to further time beyond the term for the settling of the exceptions might fairly be presumed. That case went to the extreme verge of the law upon this question of practice, and we are not inclined to extend its operation." Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 250, 23 L. Ed. 319.

Bill must be presented within time fixed by agreement.—"If the bill is not delivered to counsel within the time fixed by the agreement for extension of time, objection to the failure so to deliver it should have been urged when the bill was settled. And if an objection then taken was court,[24] the time for preparing and presenting the bill is extended. It has also been held that if the delay in not signing the bill until a term of the court succeeding that at which the case was tried, it attributable to the judge after the party excepting has done all that he can to procure the settlement and signature of the bill, a motion to strike out will be denied.[25]

Affirmance of Judgment.—Where the errors assigned arise upon a bill of exceptions signed after the adjournment of the court for the term, the judgment of the court below will be affirmed.[26]

b. Reason of Rule.—The reason for this is that a judge cannot act judicially upon the rights of parties, after the parties in due course of proceeding have both in law and in fact been dismissed from the court. Upon the adjournment for the term the parties are out of court, and the litigation there is at an end.[27]

c. Application for Extension of Time.—Application must be made to the court for an extension of time for the purpose of filing the bill.[28]

d. Appeal from Circuit Court for Southern District of New York.—But under rules of court in some circuits, a bill of exceptions may be perfected even after the expiration of the term at which the verdict was rendered.[29]

e. Removal of Causes from Montana Territory.—What is meant by § 279 of the Montana code of civil procedure is that the exception must be to some decision or ruling of the court, occurring before final judgment is rendered, and not that the exception must be taken before the decision excepted to has been made.[30]

f. Removal of Causes from the District of Columbia.—In the District of Columbia, the bill of exceptions must be settled before the close of the term,[31] and a case stated, filed after the adjournment of the term at which the judgment appealed from was rendered, comes too late.[32] But the rules of the supreme court of the District of Columbia provide that the term may be prolonged for the purpose of settling bills of exceptions.[33] overruled, the question of the correctness of such action should have been then reserved. The fact is, that the only reservation made in the settlement of the bill is thus stated in the record: "Counsel for plaintiff move that the judge do not sign the same, because the defendant has not filed this bill of exceptions within the time prescribed * * * at the time the appeal was prayed." This, of course, was not sound, in view of the agreement whereby the time which had been at first fixed was extended. The only question reserved in this connection is accordingly, also, without merit." Waldron v. Waldron, 156 U. S. 361, 378, 39 L. Ed. 453.

29. Rule of court in New York circuit.—On appeals to the federal supreme court from the circuit court for the southern district of New York, the question whether the term at which the verdict was rendered has expired is immaterial. The rules of that circuit court clearly contemplate proceedings to perfect a bill of exceptions within the time limited by those rules, without reference to the expiration of a term. Where upon an appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the only case stated which appears of record is the case stated by the judge two months after the adjournment of the term at which he has overruled a motion made before him for a new trial, a new trial cannot be granted upon a case stated filed by the judge at a subsequent term. Coughlin v. District of Columbia, 106 U. S. 7, 27 L. Ed. 74, citing Generes v. Bonnemer, 7 Wall. 564, 19 L. Ed. 287.

33. Prolongation of term of supreme

g. Certificate under Court of Appeals Act.—And the inability of the supreme court to deal with matters of this sort after the expiration of the term, has been extended to the certificate of the circuit or district courts under the circuit court of appeals act, where the jurisdiction of the court below is in issue.[34]

h. Presumptions on Appeal.—Where a bill of exceptions is signed during the term, purporting to contain a recital of what transpired during the trial, it will be assumed that all things therein stated took place at the trial, unless from its language the contrary is disclosed.[35]

5. Settlement after Appeal or Writ of Error.—By the uniform course of decision, no exceptions to rulings at a trial can be considered by the federal supreme court, unless they were taken at the trial, and were also embodied in a formal bill of exceptions presented to the judge at the same term, or within a further time allowed by order entered at that term, or by standing rule of court, or by consent of parties; and, save under very extraordinary circumstances, they must be allowed by the judge and filed with the clerk during the same term. After the term has expired, without the court's control over the case being reserved by court of district.—The rules of the supreme court of the District of Columbia also provided that the terms of court might be prolonged by adjournment for the purpose of settling bills of exceptions, and an order was accordingly entered prolonging the term at which this judgment was rendered, for the purpose of doing that in this case. This was equivalent to the practice in many jurisdictions of entering an order granting additional time, after the expiration of the term, in which to settle such bills. The provision as to the prolongation of the term for the particular purpose is a mere difference in phraseology and not of the substance, and the question as to the close of the term in other respects is quite immaterial. Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 253, 37 L. Ed. 438.

Prolongation of term only granted when requested.—The rule of court in regard to the settlement of bills of exceptions, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia is as follows: "The bill of exceptions must be settled before the close of the term, which may be prolonged by adjournment in order to prepare it, but not longer than thirty-eight days, exclusive of Sundays, save in case of a trial begun during a term but not concluded until after the expiration of the term, in which case the trial justice may extend the term in his discretion in order to prepare a bill of exceptions." Held, that the duty of the supreme court of the district under this rule was to be exercised only when invoked. "The argument of plaintiff is that the purpose of the rule was to allow thirty-eight days for the settlement of bills of exceptions, and to afford time to do so the rule provided that the term might be prolonged by adjournment, and the duty of prolonging the term was imposed on the court. We do not so interpret the rule. It provided the means for parties to secure the necessary time to present bills of exceptions. The court was not required to anticipate the intention of parties. Its duty under the rule, like its other duties, was to be exercised when invoked." Gordon v. Randle, 189 U. S. 417, 418, 47 L. Ed. 875.

May term of supreme court of District.—Rule 2 of the supreme court of the District of Columbia provides that the May term of the circuit court shall not extend beyond the second Saturday in July. Rule 62 provides that the bill of exceptions must be settled before the close of the term, which may be prolonged by adjournment in order to prepare it. Held, that for this purpose the May term could be extended indefinitely up to and beyond the beginning of the succeeding term. Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 37 L. Ed. 438, following Jones v. Pennsylvania Railroad, 18 Dist. Col. 426.

Effect of death of judge during extended time.—Where a term of the circuit court of the District of Columbia has been extended indefinitely for the purpose of settling a bill of exceptions, and the attorneys are unable to agree upon it, and the judge dies before settling it, the supreme court of the district, in general term, has authority to grant a new trial, pursuant to rule 64 of that court, which provides for new trials when the judge is unable to settle the bill of exceptions. Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 37 L. Ed. 438, distinguishing Phillips v. Negley, 117 U. S. 665, 29 L. Ed. 1013.

standing rule or special order, and especially after a writ of error has been entered in the supreme court, all authority of the court below to allow a bill of exceptions then first presented, or to alter or amend a bill of exceptions already allowed and filed, is at an end.[36] But because a party who at the trial of a cause has tendered a bill of exceptions, sues out a writ of error before he has procured the judge's signature to the bill, he does not thereby waive the bill of exceptions.[37]

6. Statement of Facts in Cases from Louisiana.—In cases removed to the federal supreme court from the district of Louisiana, the statement of facts was required to be seasonably presented and filed.[38]

7. Writ of Error to State Court in Criminal Cases.—Upon a writ of error to review the decision of the highest state court in a criminal case, it has been held that a bill of exceptions to the admission of testimony, not presented to the judge for signature until two weeks after the sentence was rendered, and after a new trial had been refused and an appeal allowed, comes too late, and the judgment of the state court will be affirmed.[39]

F. Mandamus to Compel Settlement of Bill[40]—1. In General.—The federal supreme court may properly issue a writ of mandamus to compel an inferior federal court to settle and sign a bill of exceptions.[41] Because such a writ does not undertake to control the discretion of the judge as to how he shall frame the bill of exceptions, or as to how he shall decide any point arising 37. Waiver of bill by suing out writ of error.—Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 354, 26 L. Ed. 113, disapproving Tidd's Practice, 863 (4th Am. Ed. from the 9th London).

38. Statement of facts on appeal from Louisiana.—It was said by this court in Generes v. Bonnemer, 7 Wall. 564, 565, 19 L. Ed. 287, that "to permit the judge to make a statement of the facts on which the case shall be heard here, after the case is removed to this court by the service of the writ of error, or even after it is issued, would place the rights of parties who have judgments of record entirely in the power of the judge, without hearing and without remedy." This language is substantially adopted in Flanders v. Tweed, 9 Wall. 425, 19 L. Ed. 678, where it was said: "The statement of facts by the judge is filed upon the 29th May, 1868, nearly three months after the rendition of the judgment. This is an irregularity, for which this court is bound to disregard it, and to treat it as no part of the record." Approved in Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 251, 23 L. Ed. 319, and distinguished in Hunnicutt v. Peyton, 102 U. S. 333, 354, 26 L. Ed. 113.

A statement of facts made up six months after the court has rendered its decision, to which the plaintiff refuses his assent, will not be signed by the trial judge. Martin v. Imhsen, 21 How. 394, 16 L. Ed. 134.

39. Writ of error to state court in criminal cases.—The action of the trial court in permitting to be read in evidence the testimony of a witness which had been taken in the presence of the accused in open court at a preliminary hearing and read to and signed by the witness, for the reason that the witness had since gone beyond the jurisdiction of the court and the state could not procure his attendance, was not reversible error where the record disclosed that the bill of exceptions to the allowance of such evidence was not presented to the judge until two weeks after the sentence was rendered and after a new trial had been refused and an appeal allowed. Murray v. Louisiana, 163 U. S. 101, 108, 41 L. Ed. 87. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 763.

40. See, generally, the title MANDAMUS.

41. Mandamus will lie to compel settlement of bill.—Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508.

The supreme court has power to issue a mandamus directed to a circuit court of the United States commanding the court to sign a bill of exceptions in a case tried before such court. Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. Ed. 92, cited with approval in Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508; Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 277, 288, 39 L. Ed. 424.

"The discretion of a judge, indeed, in on its settlement; but it only compels him to settle and sign it in some form.[42]

2. Illustrative Cases.—For example, mandamus will even lie to compel a judge to sign a bill tendered after the term of court at which the action was tried upon a sufficient excuse being shown for the delay.[43] But mandamus will not lie to compel a judge to sign a bill which he does not think to be a true and correct statement of the case,[44] nor to sign a bill after the trial nunc pro tunc,[45] nor to compel a chancellor to sign a bill of exceptions, because such a bill is unknown in chancery practice.[46]

a matter entrusted by law to his judicial determination, cannot be controlled by writ of mandamus. But if he declines to exercise his discretion, or to act at all, when it is his duty to do so, a writ of mandamus may be issued to compel him to act. For instance, a writ of mandamus will lie to compel a judge to settle and sign a bill of exceptions, although not to control his discretion as to the frame of the bill. Ex parte Bradstreet, 4 Pet. 102, 7 L. Ed. 796; Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. Ed. 92; Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 557, 32 L. Ed. 508. See, also, Ex parte Morgan, 114 U. S. 174, 29 L. Ed. 135; Ex parte Parker, 120 U. S. 737, 30 L. Ed. 818; Parker, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 221, 33 L. Ed. 123; Virginia v. Paul, 148 U. S. 107, 123, 124, 37 L. Ed. 386." Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 277, 288, 39 L. Ed. 424.

Review of the English practice.—"That a mandamus to sign a bill of exceptions is 'warranted by the principles and usages of law,' is we think, satisfactorily proved by the fact that it is given in England by statute; for the writ given by the statute of Westminster the second is so in fact, and is so termed in the books. The judicial act speaks of usuages of law generally, not of common law. In England it is awarded by the chancellor, but in the United States it is conferred expressly on this court, which exercises both common-law and chancery powers, is invested with appellate power, and exercises extensive control over all the courts of the United States. We cannot perceive a reason why the single case of the refusal of an inferior court to sign a bill of exceptions and thus to place the law of the case on the record, should be withdrawn from that general power to issue writs of mandamus to inferior courts which is conferred by statute." Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. Ed. 92.

42. Reason of rule.—Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 557, 32 L. Ed. 508.

43. Bill tendered after term.—A judge of the circuit court of the United States refused to settle and sign a bill of exceptions because of the expiration of the term of the court at which the action was tried. The delay being caused by a mistake by the parties as to whether the state or federal court rules governed, the judge was ordered by mandamus to sign the bill. Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508.

44. Bill must contain correct statement of case.—A rule had been granted on the district judge of the northern district of New York, to show cause why he did not sign a bill of exceptions in a case tried before him. The court said, that on the day of the return of the rule, the district judge has a right to show cause, whether the person who obtained the rule moved or not, he has a right to have the rule disposed of. On the trial of a cause in the district court of the United States for the Northern District of New York, exceptions were taken to opinions of the court delivered in the course of the trial; and some time after the trial was over, a bill of exceptions was tendered to the district judge, which he refused to sign, objecting to some of the matters stated in the same, and at the same time, altering the bill then tendered, so as to conform to his recollection of the facts of the case, and inserting in the bill all that he deemed proper to be contained in the same; which bill of exceptions, thus altered, was signed by the judge. On the motion of the party who had tendered the bill of exceptions, a rule was granted on the district judge, to show cause why he did not sign the bill of exceptions as first tendered to him. To this rule, the judge returned his reasons for refusing to sign the bill so tendered, and stating, that he had signed such a bill of exceptions as he considered correct. By the court: This is not a case in which the judge has refused to sign a bill of exceptions. The judge has signed such a bill as he thinks correct. The object of the rule is to oblige the judge to sign a particular bill of exceptions which has been offered to him. The court granted the rule to show cause, and the judge has shown cause, by saying he has done all that can be required from him, and that the bill offered is not such a bill as he can sign. The court cannot order him to sign such a bill. Ex parte Bradstreet, 4 Pet. 102, 7 L. Ed. 796.

45. Mandamus will not be awarded to compel a judge to sign the bill of exceptions after the trial nunc pro tunc, because the propriety of their refusal to do so on particular occasions depends on so many circumstances which cannot appear on the record, and are known only to themselves, that an appellate court ought not to presume that they had acted improperly in the exercise of their discretion. Sheppard v. Wilson, 6 How. 260, 12 L. Ed. 430.

46. Mandamus to compel a chancellor

3. Resettlement.—Unless a very clear case is made out, a petition for a mandamus to compel the lower court to resettle a bill of exceptions will be denied.[47]

4. Return to Rule to Show Cause.—A return by the district judge to a rule to show cause, need not be sworn to by him.[48]

VII. Filing and Service.

A. Filing—1. Of Bill of Exceptions—a. Necessity for Filing.—The bill of exceptions must be filed as well as certified or allowed.[49]

b. Time of Filing.—If a party does not file his bill of exceptions at the trial, he should move the judge to assign a reasonable time within which he may file it.[50] But where parties expressly so consent, the bill of exceptions may, at common law, be filed in vacation.[51]

c. Original Bill or a Copy.—The original bill is equally as good as a copy and may be filed in the appellate court in place of the copy, where it appears that the copy thereof cannot be obtained, and the original is properly identified and authenticated.[52]

2. Of Statement of Facts on Appeal—a. Time of Filing—(1) In General.—A statement of facts, made and filed by the judge several months after the rendition of the judgment,[53] or after the issuance and service of the writ of error in the case,[54] or after the case is disposed of by the circuit to sign a bill.—The court refused to award a mandamus to the district judge of the district of Louisiana, commanding him to sign a bill of exceptions tendered to him, and to command him to have inscribed, by the clerk of the court, on the order book of the court, an order passed by him, in a case which was before him under a mandate from the supreme court of the United States, requiring him to do, and to have done, certain matters to carry into effect the decree of the supreme court, in a case which had been brought before the court by appeal from the district of Louisiana. Ex parte Story, 12 Pet. 339, 9 L. Ed. 1108. See ante, "In Chancery Cases," III, C, 2.

47. Mandamus to compel resettlement denied.—An application for leave to file a petition for a mandamus to require a judge of a district court acting as judge of the circuit court to resettle the bill of exceptions in a cause lately pending in the circuit court as to a certain request to charge, in respect of which request to charge affidavits to the effect that the bill of exceptions, as settled and signed by the judge, was incorrect, will be denied. A judgment affirmed in a case where the only ruling of the court, to be found in the record, was a judgment rendered in favor of a plaintiff for the recovery of a sum of money; where there was no question raised in the pleadings, no bill of exceptions, and no instructions or ruling of the court; and where what purported to be a statement of facts, signed by the judge, was filed more than two months after the writ of error was allowed and filed in the court, and nearly a month after the citation was issued. "To permit the judge to make a statement of facts, court,[55] is a nullity and cannot be noticed by the appellate court though both parties consent.[56]

(2) Statement of Facts on Appeal from Arizona.—A statement of facts on appeal after it has been settled and signed, must be filed with the clerk during the term; or the court may by an order entered upon the record during the term authorize the statement of facts to be made up and signed and filed in vacation, at any time not exceeding thirty days after the adjournment of the term.[57] A statement of facts under the Revised Statutes of Arizona is not filed in time to become a part of the bill of exceptions, if it was not on file at the time of the settlement of the bill of exceptions or did not afterwards become a part of the record.[58]

b. Consent of Parties.—A statement of facts, filed without consent of the parties, must be treated as a nullity.[59]

B. Service—1. Of Bill of Exceptions.—By rules of court in some of the circuits, a copy of the bill of exceptions must be served upon the opposite party within a certain time.[60]

2. Of Statement of Facts on Appeal.—The statutes provide that a statement of facts on appeal shall be submitted to the opposite party or his attorney for inspection.[61]

VIII. Amendment or Contradiction of Bill.

A. Amendment—1. In General.—The exceptions must be drawn up and settled in proper form in the court below, and cannot be amended or redrafted in the supreme court,[62] either by referring to the charge at length,[63] or to the notes of the presiding judge.[64]

2. Opening Judgment for Purpose of Amendment.—A party cannot have on which the case shall be heard here, after the case is removed to this court by the service of the writ of error, or even after it is issued, would place the rights of parties who have judgments of record, entirely in the power of the judge, without hearing and without remedy." Generes v. Bonnemer, 7 Wall. 564, 19 L. Ed. 287, cited and approved in Muller v. Ehlers, 91 U. S. 249, 251, 23 L. Ed. 319.

55. A paper, found in the record, purporting to be a statement of facts agreed to by the parties, and filed with the clerk after the writ of error is issued, or after the case is disposed of by the circuit court, cannot be noticed here on writ of error though both parties consent. A statement which is not filed until after the adjournment of the term is not filed within the time required by the Arizona revised statutes, and cannot be considered as part of the record. Cohn v. Daley, 174 U. S. 539, 43 L. Ed. 1077.

60. Service of bill of exceptions.—Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 544, 32 L. Ed. 508.

Where the record shows that judgment was entered on the verdict on July 10th, 1890, but time is extended until November 15th to prepare the bill of exceptions and deliver it to counsel on the other side, the fact that the bill of exceptions was not handed to counsel on the other side on or before November 15th, is rendered immaterial by the action of the judge below in settling the bill. Waldron v. Waldron, 156 U. S. 361, 39 L. Ed. 453.

61. Service of statement of facts on appeal.—Cohn v. Daley, 174 U. S. 539, 43 L. Ed. 1077.

63. Amendment by reference to charge at length.—Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722.

64. Bill cannot be amended by referring to notes of judge.—Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722.

a judgment opened in order to correct a mistake in the bill of exceptions.[65] Where, in correcting a bill of exceptions, or causing it to be corrected before signing, there are considerable erasures or interlineations in it or an exhibit thereto, the better practice is to require such portions of the bill of exceptions or exhibits to be rewritten, or to note the fact that the erasures or interlineations were made by the judge before signing.[65a]

3. Amendments at a Subsequent Term.—Any fault or omission in framing or tendering a bill of exceptions, being the act of the party and not of the court, cannot be amended at a subsequent term as a misprision of the clerk in recording inaccurately or omitting to record an order of the court might be.[66]

B. Correcting or Supplying Omissions—1. In General.—Nor can the supreme court correct an omission in the bill.[67] Where any omissions have been made in the court below in framing the bill of exceptions, and the omission is due to a clerical error, then upon producing a copy of the exception properly certified, the plaintiff in error will be entitled to a certiorari, in order to supply the defect.[68] But the bill of exceptions is conclusive upon the federal supreme court. They cannot presume or suspect that any material part of the evidence is omitted.[69]

2. Causes Removed from District of Columbia.—On appeals from the special term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, omissions from the bill discovered before the hearing at the general term may be remedied by amendment.[70]

C. Impeachment or Contradiction.—Bills of exception, when properly taken and duly allowed, become a part of the record, and, as such, cannot be contradicted.[71]

65. Judgment will not be opened to allow amendments.—Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. 509, 13 L. Ed. 517; United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. Ed. 643.

Generally as to opening judgments, see the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

After a case has been decided, and judgment pronounced by the supreme court, it is too late to move to open the judgment for the purpose of amending the bill of exceptions, upon the ground that material evidence which might have influenced the judgment of the court was omitted in the bill. If there was any error or mistake in framing the exception, it might have been corrected by a certiorari, if the application had been made in due time and upon sufficient cause. But after the parties have argued the case upon the exception, and judgment has been pronounced, it is too late to reopen it. Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. 509, 13 L. Ed. 517.

65a. Manner of correcting interlineations stated.—Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 772.

66. Amendments not allowed at subsequent term.—Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 299, 36 L. Ed. 162, citing In re Wight, 134 U. S. 136, 33 L. Ed. 865. See, generally, the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

After the term has expired, without the court's control over the case being reserved by standing rule or special order, and especially after a writ of error has been entered in the supreme court, all authority of the court below to allow or amend a bill of exceptions is at an end. Michigan Ins. Bank v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 36 L. Ed. 162.

67. Appellate court cannot correct omissions.—Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722; United States v. Morgan, 11 How. 154, 13 L. Ed. 643.

68. How omissions in bill supplied.—Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. 509, 13 L. Ed. 517. See the title CERTIORARI, vol. 3, p. 651.

If the omission of a part of the charge, which was in fact embraced in the exception, is a mere clerical error, the party will be entitled to a certiorari, upon producing a copy of the exception, properly certified. Stimpson v. West Chester R. Co., 3 How. 553, 11 L. Ed. 722.

69. No presumption that matter has been omitted.—Bingham v. Cabot, 3 Dall. 19, 1 L. Ed. 491.

70. Practice in District of Columbia.—A certificate used as evidence at a special term was accidentally omitted from a bill of exceptions until after it had been signed, but the omission being discovered before the case was heard at general term, it was remedied by amendment. No objection being made at the general term, the objection will not be considered on review of the judgment by the supreme court. Keyser v. Hitz, 133 U. S. 138, 146, 33 L. Ed. 531.

71. Impeachment of bill.—Chaffee v. Boston Belting Co., 22 How. 217, 222, 16 L. Ed. 240.

IX. Striking Out.

A motion to strike out is the proper remedy where it is contended that the bill of exceptions was improperly settled and signed;[72] as where it is contended that the bill is not authenticated in accordance with the requirements of § 953 of the Revised Statutes.[73]

Definition.—An exchange is an executed contract; it operates, per se, as a reciprocal conveyance of the thing given, and of the thing received; the thing given or taken in exchange must be specific, and so distinguishable from all things of the like kind, as to be clearly known and identified.[1]

The narration contained in the bill of exceptions of what occurred should generally be incorporated in the body of the decree. Thus, where the decree after stating that the case was heard on the bill, answer, exhibits, etc., and had been fully argued, and that the court had duly deliberated thereon, says: "It is further ordered that the bill of exceptions tendered and signed by the court be filed as a part of the record, which is done accordingly," and there is in the record a bill of exceptions filed the same day the decree was made, and the bill of exceptions states the case, it must have the same effect as if the narration it contains of what occurred were incorporated in the body of the decree. Ensminger v. Powers, 108 U. S. 292, 27 L. Ed. 732.

1. Definition.—Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. 133, 10 L. Ed. 387.

In article 2630 of the civil code of Louisiana, an exchange is defined to be "a contract by which the contractors give to one another one thing for another, whatever it be, except money; for in that case it would be a sale." This definition proves, as the term exchange, ex vi termini, imports, that it is what is denominated in the civil code, a reciprocal contract; which, by article 1758 of that code, is declared to be a contract, where the parties expressly enter into mutual engagements. Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. 133, 136, 10 L. Ed. 387.

Example.—A paper was executed by R. R. K., of the city of New Orleans, stating that the grantor, for and in consideration of a certain lot or parcel of land (describ-for an exchange of real property is not to be construed by the strict rule in regard to the quantity of land that might govern its interpretation if it were an independent purchase to be paid for in money.[2]

Exchange by an Insolvent.—An insolvent may at any time exchange his property before proceedings in bankruptcy are taken by or against him, provided the exchange be conducted in good faith.[3]

Parol Exchange as Conveying Estate in Land.—A parol exchange of lands, or parol evidence that a conveyance should operate as an exchange, will not convey any estate or interest in lands.[4]

Remedies.—It has been held that one who has made an exchange for real property, if evicted, may either sue for damages, or for the thing given in exchange; but he must be evicted, before his cause of action can accrue.[5]

ing it), conveyed and transferred to J. B. and S. B., all his right, title and interest in a certain tract or parcel of land (describing it), "hereby warranting and defending unto" the said J. B. and S. B., all his right and title in the same, unto all persons claiming under them; the paper, called, under the laws of Louisiana, "an act of sale," was signed by R. R. K., J. B., S. B., and a notary of New Orleans, and was deposited in the office of the notary. This was not "an exchange," according to the laws of Louisiana. Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. 133, 10 L. Ed. 387.

2. Not construed strictly.—Lawson v. Floyd, 124 U. S. 108, 118, 31 L. Ed. 347. See, generally, the title VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

In Lawson v. Floyd, 124 U. S. 108, 115, 31 L. Ed. 347, a bill in equity for relief from a contract for the exchange of lands, it was alleged that defendant L. apart from the written contract and at or about the time it was made, made representations in regard to the number of acres within the boundaries of the tract which he was selling, under circumstances that authorized plaintiff F. to rely upon them as true, and that these representations were either intentionally false and made to deceive or were in fact untrue and known to L. to be so. It was held, the evidence did not leave the impression that L. made any positive representations as to the quantity of land within the boundaries described, and especially as to the tract containing a thousand acres, much less any statements on that subject which were intended to deceive, and which he knew to be false or untrue.

3. Insolvent may exchange land.—Cook v. Tullis, 18 Wall. 332, 21 L. Ed. 933. See the title BANKRUPTCY, vol. 2, p. 947.

4. Parol exchange no conveyance of estate in land.—Clark v. Graham, 6 Wheat. 577, 5 L. Ed. 334; Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 513, 18 L. Ed. 435; Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 129 U. S. 305, 32 L. Ed. 673. See the title FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

But possession and improvement will take the contract out of the operation of the statute. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 129 U. S. 305, 32 L. Ed. 673.

5. Remedies.—So held under the civil code of Louisiana. Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. 133, 10 L. Ed. 387.

Nature and Object.—Exchanges are generally voluntary associations for business purposes. Their object is to furnish a meeting place for those engaged in the purchase and sale of commodities, to give them the advantages provided by the exchange and to promote honest and fair dealing among their members.[1]

Membership—Property in Seat.—Membership of a stock and exchange board is not a matter of absolute sale. Although property, it is, when purchased, qualified and encumbered by conditions which the creators of it had the right to impose, and a compliance with which is necessary to obtain it.[2] While the property in a seat is peculiar and in its nature a personal privilege, yet such value as it may possess, notwithstanding the restriction to which it is subject, is susceptible of being realized by creditors. A provision in the constitution of a stock and exchange board, whose members are limited in number, and elected by ballot, that a member, upon failing to perform his contracts, or becoming insolvent, may assign his seat to be sold, and that the proceeds shall, to the exclusion of his outside creditors, be first applied to the benefit of the members to whom he is indebted, is not open to objection on the ground of public policy.[3] Nor does such exclusion violate the bankrupt act.[4]

The membership is elective, with certain provisions for a right to sell and assign the seat, subject to an election of the purchasing member by the board. This is generally done, unless special reasons appear to the contrary; and the result is, that, as the number of members is limited, the right to a seat at the board has a moneyed value. When a member fails to perform his contracts, or becomes insolvent, he can no longer be a member of the board, until he resumes payment; but his seat may be sold for his benefit, or for that of his creditors, among the other members of the board. Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523, 524, 24 L. Ed. 264.

In Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523, 24 L. Ed. 264, it was ruled that the ownership of a seat in a stock and exchange board is property not absolute and unqualified, but limited and restricted by the rules of the association; that such rules in imposing the condition upon the disposition of membership that the proceeds should be first applied to the benefit of creditor members are not open to objection on the ground of public policy. Sparhawk v. Yerkes, 142 U. S. 1, 12, 35 L. Ed. 915.

It has been held in Pennsylvania that Contracts Made with Reference to Rules.—All transactions regarding the sales and purchases of shares of stock, which are made subject to the rules of a board of trade, must be regarded as having taken place with direct reference and subject to those rules.[5] But one contracting with reference to the rules and regulations of an exchange, which provide a means by which the parties may seek and obtain relief in accordance with their terms, but which do not assume to exclude the jurisdiction of the courts, in pursuing a remedy, is not confined to that which the rules provide, to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of ordinary courts of justice.[6]

Rules and Regulations as Evidence.—The rules and regulations of a board of trade are competent evidence in an action upon a contract where the contract was to be conducted under the rules and regulations, and they were understood by the party contracting with the board of trade.[7]

Ratification of Contracts.—The mere retention of an account and statement rendered by a board of trade that they have offset one contract for another does not amount to a ratification of the change.[8] But where under a rule of a board of trade, a commission merchant of the board assumes to offset or cancel a contract, made by him for the board by substituting therefor another equivalent contract with some person who shall be bound for its performance, it is a question of law whether there has been an actual substitution within the meaning of the rule.[9]

Quotations—Property Right Therein.—A board of trade, which has collected at its own expense quotations of prices offered and accepted, may distribute the use of them under contract to any persons it chooses, and upon any condition, and may equally exclude them from whom it chooses; nor is this property right lost by communicating the quotations to any number of persons approved by the board. The fact that this collection of information concerns an illegal act, does not affect the property right therein. And as the board of trade can refrain from communicating the quotations at all, a contract excluding a certain class of persons is not against public policy.[10]

It was held that the failure to complain of the statement of the change, rendered him, did not amount to a ratification. Hansen v. Boyd, 161 U. S. 397, 40 L. Ed. 746. See the title PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

9. Whether substitution is a sufficient question of law.—Under this rule a commission merchant, having many similar contracts to the one cancelled, designated no particular contract, but intended to substitute a similar contract at the time of settlement. It was held that this was not a sufficient substitution within the meaning of the rule, and therefore an instruction to the jury to that effect was proper. Higgins v. McCrea, 116 U. S. 671, 29 L. Ed. 764.

10. Property right in quotations.—Board of Trade v. Christie Grain, etc., Co., 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. Ed. 1031; Hunt v. New York Cotton Exchange, 205 U. S. 322, 51 L. Ed. 821.

Injunction to restrain use of quotations.—An injunction will lie to restrain the use of quotations used without authority of a board of trade. Board of Trade v. Christie Grain, etc., Co., 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. Ed. 1031. See, generally, the title INJUNCTIONS.

Jurisdiction of circuit court to enjoin the use of quotations depending upon amount in controversy.—See the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 978.

EXCHEQUER BILLS.—Exchequer bills are a class of bills of credit, in England issued by the officers of the exchequer, when a temporary loan is necessary to meet the exigencies of government. They were first termed tallies of loan, and orders of repayment, charged on the credit of the exchequer in general, and made assignable from one person to another.[1]

EXCISE.—See the titles REVENUE LAWS; TAXATION; TERRITORIES. "An excise duty is an inland impost, levied upon articles of manufacture or sale, and also upon licenses to pursue certain trades or to deal in certain commodities."[2]

EXCLAMATIONS.—See the title RES GESTÆ.

EXCLUSION.—Of aliens, see the titles ALIENS, vol. 1, p. 245, et seq.; CHINESE EXCLUSION ACTS, vol. 3, p. 769. Of passengers by carrier, see the title CARRIERS, vol. 3, p. 566. See, also, the titles BENEFICIAL AND BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION, vol. 3, p. 212; INDIANS; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES; STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS; WAR.

EXCLUSIVE.—Exclusive is defined to mean "Appertaining to the subject alone; not including, admitting or pertaining to any other or others; undivided; sole; as, an exclusive right or privilege; exclusive jurisdiction."[3]

EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES.—See the title MONOPOLIES AND CORPORATE TRUSTS. As to exclusive ferry privilege, see the title FERRIES. As to bridges, see the title BRIDGES, vol. 3, pp. 520, 521. As to fish, see the title FISH AND FISHERIES. 2. Excise.—Pollock v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 158 U. S. 601, 622, 39 L. Ed. 1108; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 46 L. Ed. 713.

In Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 46 L. Ed. 713, it is said: "If we turn to the general dictionaries, Webster's International calls it 'an inland duty or impost, operating as an indirect tax on the consumer, levied upon certain specified articles, as tobacco, ale, spirits, etc., grown or manufactured in the country. It is also levied on licenses to pursue certain trades and deal in certain commodities.' The definition in the Century Dictionary is substantially the same, though in addition this is quoted from Andrews on Revenue Laws, § 133: 'Excises is a word generally used in contradistinction to imposts in its restricted sense, and is applied to internal or inland impositions, levied sometimes upon the consumption of a commodity, sometimes upon the retail sale of it, and sometimes upon the manufacture of it.'"

In Pollock v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 157 U. S. 429, 592, 39 L. Ed. 759, it is said: "Excises are a species of tax consisting generally of duties laid upon the manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities within the country, or upon certain callings or occupations, often taking the form of exactions for licenses to pursue them."

In Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. 443, 445, 19 L. Ed. 95, it is said: "Excise is defined to be an inland imposition, sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, and sometimes upon the retail sale; sometimes upon the manufacturer, and sometimes upon the vendor."

3. Vicksburg v. Vicksburg Waterworks Co., 202 U. S. 453, 471, 50 L. Ed. 1102, citing Century Dictionary.

Exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.—The phrase, "'within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States,' is well understood as applying to the crimes which are committed within the premises, grounds, forts, arsenals, navy yards, and other places within the boundaries of a state, or even within a territory, over which the federal government has by cession, by agreement, or by reservation exclusive jurisdiction." Gon-Shay-Ee, 130 U. S. 343, 352, 32 L. Ed. 973. See the title CRIMINAL LAW, vol. 5, p. 76, et seq.

1. Executed.—In Young v. Clarendon Tp., 132 U. S. 340, 351, 33 L. Ed. 356, in construing a statute authorizing the issuance of bonds by a township to a railroad, the court said: "The bonds were to be executed; that is to say, written or printed, signed and sealed by the supervisor and clerk of the township. Here the powers of those persons ceased. They could not perfect the instruments by delivery. The word executed, used in the statute in connection with the acts mentioned, manifestly does not import the final delivery, for that is expressly directed to be done by the treasurer. Such delivery as they could make was clearly not the technical delivery needed to complete the bonds as negotiable instruments, because the power to hand over to the payee was not conceded to them in any event. The delivery which they were directed to make to the treasurer in his capacity of statutory trustee was only such as amounted to a 'giving up' or the 'committing' of them to the treasurer for his safe-keeping. The word was used in its ordinary and popular sense, not in the technical one." See the title MUNICIPAL, COUNTY, STATE AND FEDERAL AID.

I. Nature of Capias Ad Satisfaciendum.

The writ of capias ad satisfaciendum in some states is similar to the original of the English practice,[1] and in its terms applies to civil suits only.[2]

II. Grounds for Issuance.

A capias ad satisfaciendum is the proper writ to take the body of a person, against whom a judgment has been recovered.[3] Also, it has been held that a capias ad satisfaciendum is the only mode by which the equitable estate of a debtor or his choses in action can be in any way reached by any legal process.[4] And it is provided by statute in some states that the writ may issue for fines, and such proceedings shall be had as in cases where similar suits of capias ad satisfaciendum are issued in personal suits.[5]

III. Against Whom Execution May Issue.

It has been held that though where two joint debtors are sued, and only one is brought into court on process, and judgment passes for plaintiff, he may have judgment against both joint debtors, but it is not lawful to issue or execute an execution against the body of the one not brought into court.[6]

IV. Election of Remedies.

The plaintiff in a judgment has an undoubted right to an execution against the person and the property of the defendant. He has his election, but his adoption of an execution against the property does not preclude him from resorting to an execution against the body, if he does not obtain satisfaction of the debt on the first execution. His remedies are cumulative and successive which he may pursue until he reaches that point at which the law declares his debt satisfied.[7]

1. Nature.—So held in Pennsylvania, Schlosser v. Lesher, 1 Dall. 411, 1 L. Ed. 200.

It may be here stated, that writs of capias ad satisfaciendum in Maryland are the same in substance in their exigency as those prescribed in the common law. Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 575, 8 L. Ed. 786.

2. Applies to civil suits only.—Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 576, 8 L. Ed. 786.

3. To take body of person.—Snead v. McCoull, 12 How. 407, 417, 13 L. Ed. 1043; Bank v. Tyler, 4 Pet. 366, 7 L. Ed. 888; Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 576, 8 L. Ed. 786; Tayloe v. Thomson, 5 Pet. 358, 8 L. Ed. 154; Bank v. Weisiger, 2 Pet. 331, 7 L. Ed. 441.

4. To reach equitable estate of debtor.—So held under the law of Kentucky. Bank v. Tyler, 4 Pet. 366, 7 L. Ed. 888.

5. May issue for recovery of fines.—Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 8 L. Ed. 786. See the title FINES.

6. Issuance against person not brought unto court.—So held under the New York law. D'Arcy v. Kelchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. Ed. 648.

7. Election of remedies.—Tayloe v. Thomson, 5 Pet. 358, 8 L. Ed. 154.

"This execution or seizing of lands by elegit is of so high a nature that after it the body of the defendant cannot be taken, but if execution can only be had of the goods because there are no lands, and such goods are not sufficient to pay

V. Requisites of Writ.

The writs of capias ad satisfaciendum must always specify the nature of the action declared on.[8]

VI. Duty to Produce Body in Court.

It has been by statute in some states made the duty of the officer, who has taken the body of the defendant, if he cannot acknowledge in open court the receipt of the amount due from the defendant, to produce the body to the court to which the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum is returnable.[9]

VII. Privilege from Arrest.

See the title PRIVILEGE.

VIII. Duration of Imprisonment.

The prisoner in a criminal case cannot be detained in jail longer than the return day of the process of capias ad satisfaciendum without a committitur. The writ becomes functus officio after the return day.[10]

IX. Discharge.

A. Ground for.—A defendant may be discharged from an arrest under an execution by a justice of the peace, when the execution was issued, for a sum beyond the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace.[11] Also provisions have been made by statute for the discharge of insolvent persons confined under execution, by giving notice to the plaintiff of the defendants' intention to claim his discharge as an insolvent.[12]

X. Rearrest.

If the plaintiff consent to the defendant being discharged out of execution, he cannot afterwards rearrest him, although the security given by the defendant on his discharge should be afterwards set aside.[13] But where the defendant is arrested and brought into court on the return day, and it not then prayed into the debt, a capias ad satisfaciendum may then be had after the elegit, for such elegit is in this case no more than a fieri facias, so that body and goods may be taken in execution, or lands and goods; but not body and land too, upon any judgment between subject and subject in the course of the common law." Snead v. McCoull, 12 How. 407, 416, 13 L. Ed. 1043.

With regard to the effect of the capias ad satisfaciendum upon the rights of the parties to a judgment, we are told by Blackstone, vol. 3, p. 415, that: "The writ of capias ad satisfaciendum is an execution of the highest nature, in as much as it deprives a man of his liberty till he makes the satisfaction awarded, and therefore, when a man is once taken in execution upon this writ, no other process can be sued out against his lands or his goods." Snead v. McCoull, 12 How. 407, 416, 13 L. Ed. 1043.

8. Must specify nature of action declared on.—Schlosser v. Lesher, 1 Dall. 411, 413, 1 L. Ed. 200.

9. Duty to produce body to the court.—Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 575, 8 L. Ed. 786.

The Maryland act of December 24, 1795, ch. 74, declares it to be the duty of the sheriffs to return the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum of the courts to which they are returnable, at the term succeeding the issuing of the same; and wherever the sheriff shall make return, that he has taken the body of the party, he shall be obliged either to acknowledge in open court the receipt of the amount of the fine or forfeiture, or to produce the body of the party to the court, to which the said writ shall be returned. Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 575, 8 L. Ed. 786.

10. Cannot be detained longer than the return day of the writ.—Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 579, 8 L. Ed. 786.

Maryland courts assert the uniform practice upon writs of capias ad satisfaciendum to be to bring the party into court and then to award a committitur. No instance is shown, in which a party has ever been held in custody after the return term, upon such a capias ad satisfaciendum, without a committitur. Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 577, 8 L. Ed. 786.

11. Execution issued by justice without jurisdiction.—Geyger v. Stoy, 1 Dall. 135, 1 L. Ed. 70. See the title JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

12. See the title IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

13. Rearrest.—Snead v. McCoull, 12 How. 407, 416, 13 L. Ed. 1043.

commitment, though he is no longer to be detained in custody, he may be re-arrested upon a new capias ad satisfaciendum.[14]

XI. Liability to Marshal for Poundage.

It has been held that the plaintiff in the execution, and not the defendant, is liable to a marshal for poundage on a capias ad satisfaciendum; especially so where the plaintiff releases the defendant, and thereby deprives the marshal of all recourse against the defendant.[15]

XII. Execution of Ca. Sa. as Binding Real Estate.

It has been enacted by statutes in some states that executions of capias ad satisfaciendum shall bind the real estate of the defendant from the time when they shall be levied.[16]

XIII. Effect of Commitment on a Ca. Sa.

A. Suspension of Other Remedies.—The greatest effect which the law gives to a commitment on a capias ad satisfaciendum, is a suspension of the other remedies, during its continuance; whenever it terminates, without the consent of the creditor, the plaintiff is restored to them as fully as if he had never made use of any.[17]

B. As Discharging Judgment.—See the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

XIV. Alias Capias.

It is necessary that an alias capias be tested at the return of the original capias,[18] and it must be made returnable to the next issuing term.[19]

XV. Right of Creditor against Third Persons for Rescuing Debtor from Arrest.

The right of a judgment creditor to proceed by action against those who rescue the person of his debtor arrested on mesne or final process, is well recognized at common law.[20]

EXECUTION AND PROOF OF DOCUMENTS.—See the titles BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE, vol. 3, p. 214; CONTRACTS, vol. 4, p. 556, et seq.; DEEDS, vol. 5, p. 245; DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE, vol. 5, p. 431; WILLS; ETC. EXECUTION OF WILLS.—See the title WILLS.

14. The case of West v. Hayland, 3 Har. & Johns. 200, decides that a new capias ad satisfaciendum may issue against a person who has been arrested and brought into court, but was not committed, which presupposes that he is not then deemed in custody upon the old one. Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 577, 8 L. Ed. 786.

15. Plaintiff liable for poundage.—United States v. Ringgold, 8 Pet. 150, 162, 8 L. Ed. 899.

16. Virginia statute.—In the revisal of the laws of Virginia, made in the year 1819 (going into operation in the year 1820), a provision was introduced by the tenth section of the law concerning execution, declaring that all executions of capias ad satisfaciendum, levied after the commencement of this act, shall bind the real estate of the defendant from the time when they shall be levied. Snead v. McCoull, 12 How. 407, 419, 13 L. Ed. 1043.

17. Only temporarily suspends remedies.—Taylor v. Thomson, 5 Pet. 358, 8 L. Ed. 154. See ante, "Election of Remedies," IV.

18. Must be tested at time of the original capias.—United States v. Parker, 2 Dall. 373, 378, 1 L. Ed. 421.

19. Must be returned to next issuing term.—United States v. Parker, 2 Dall. 373, 378, 1 L. Ed. 421.

20. May have action for damages.—"In Comyns's Digest, under the head of Action on the Case for Misfeasance, A. 5, it is stated that an action will lie for rescue of a person arrested upon mesne or judicial process, citing 2 Cro. 419, 486; Cro. Car. 109; or of goods taken in execution. And the action lies by the party to the suit in which the arrest was citing 2 Cro. 486; Cro. Car. 109; 2 Rolle's Ab. 556, pl. 14, 15." I. Definition and Purpose.

An execution is a writ, issuing from a court,[1] and is an authority to the sheriff or other officer to do what it commands.[2] An execution is the end and life of the law,[3] and is indispensably necessary to the beneficial exercise of the jurisdiction of a court.[4] The purpose of an execution is to give effect to the judgment on which issued.[5]

The award of execution is a part, and an essential part, of every judgment passed by a court exercising judicial power. There is no judgment, in the legal sense of the term, without it. III. Property Subject to Execution.

A. In General.—An execution may ordinarily be levied upon all property that has a visible and tangible existence,[11] within the jurisdiction of the court and the precinct of the officer;[12] and all rents, profits and rights, arising from or appurtenant or appendant thereto.[13] By the common law, the body, lands, and goods of the king's debtor were liable to be levied on to obtain payment.[14] The property need not be the subject of sale.[15] It is the title of the defendant, and not the property itself, which is subject to execution.[16]

B. Conflict of Laws.—Liability of property to be subjected to execution is, in the case of real estate, to be determined by the law of the jurisdiction of the situs;[17] in the case of personal property, by law of the state where the property actually is, regardless of the domicile of the owner;[18] and, in the case of choses in action and trusts, where created or to be found.[19]

C. Effect of State Laws in United States Courts.—The different states have the power to subject property within their territory to execution,[20] and such state laws can be availed of in the United States courts, when adopted.[21]

D. Personal Property—1. Money.—Though not subject to sale, money may be taken in execution;[22] but the legal or actual possession of the specific pieces

13. If the incorporeal right in question is a parcel of the corporeal thing levied upon, as a right appendant or appurtenant thereto—not a distinct and independent right unannexed to any other corporeal thing—it is subject to execution. Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How. 447, 453, 15 L. Ed. 155.

"By the levy of an execution on a mill, the incorporeal rights actually annexed to the mill, and necessary to its use, pass with the mill. So does what is parcel of the mill, though temporarily removed from it—as a millstone, which has been taken from its place to be picked." Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How. 447, 453, 15 L. Ed. 155.

15. Salability of property is not an infallible test of its being subject to execution. Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch 117, 134, 2 L. Ed. 53.

16. Title of debtor.—By the common-law process of execution, property is reached only through a personal defendant, and then only to the extent of his title. Under a sale, therefore, upon a judgment in a common-law proceeding, the title acquired can never be better than that possessed by the personal defendant. It is his title, and not the property itself, which is to be sold. The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 427, 18 L. Ed. 397.

17. Conflict of laws—Realty.—Spindle v. Shreve, 111 U. S. 542, 547, 28 L. Ed. 512. See the title CONFLICT OF LAWS, vol. 3, pp. 1035, 1088. And see post, "Equitable Estates and Interests," III, F.

18. Personalty.—Where personal property is seized and sold under an execution, issuing from a court of the state where the property is, the question of the liability of the property to be sold under such writ must be determined by the law of that state, notwithstanding the domicile of all the claimants to the property may be in another state. Green v. Van Buskirk, 5 Wall. 307, 18 L. Ed. 599; Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 664, 23 L. Ed. 1003.

22. Money—Nonsalability not objection.—The court can perceive no reason, in the nature of the thing, why an execution should not be levied on money. That given in the books, viz, that it cannot be sold, seems not to be a good one. The reason of a sale is that money only will of money must be first obtained by the debtor.[23] Money in the hands of a sheriff under a levy by him is not considered as in his possession.[24]

2. Choses in Action.—At common law, a chose in action is not subject to be levied upon by a fieri facias;[25] but, by statute in many states, this rule has been changed in regard to a number of choses.[26]

3. Patents and Copyrights.—Patent and copyrights, being invisible and intangible,[27] not existing within the jurisdiction of any particular court nor the precinct of any particular officer,[28] and not attached to any corporeal thing,[29] are not subject to execution;[30] but the tangible thing patented or copyrighted satisfy the execution, and if anything else be taken, it must be turned into money; but surely that the means of converting the thing into money need not be used, can be no adequate reason for refusing to take the very article to produce which is the sole object of the execution. The object is, not the sale, but money, and if the money can be made, without a sale, it cannot be unlawful to do so. But in the case of an execution for tobacco, money may be sold, and therefore may be executed, and it would be strange, if, by an execution ordering a sheriff to make the money, money could not be taken, and yet might be taken on an execution ordering him to make some other article. Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch 117, 134, 2 L. Ed. 53.

23. Necessity for possessing debtor.—"A right to specific pieces of money can only be acquired, by obtaining the legal or actual possession of them, and until this is done, there can be no such absolute ownership, as that an execution may be levied on them." Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch 117, 134, 2 L. Ed. 53.

24. Money collected by a sheriff on an execution cannot be levied upon under execution placed in his hands against the judgment creditor, and the latter can maintain an action against the sheriff for a failure to pay the money thus collected. Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch 117, 134, 2 L. Ed. 53; Clarke v. Larremore, 188 U. S. 486, 489, 47 L. Ed. 556.

A sheriff makes the money upon a fi. fa. at the suit of A. v. B., and afterwards a fi fa. against A. is put into his hands. He cannot levy it upon the money of A., made by the fi. fa. of A. v. B., for it does not become the goods and chattels of A., until it is paid over to him; and by the command of the writ, the sheriff is, in strictness, bound to bring the money into court, there to be paid to the plaintiff. Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cranch 117, 2 L. Ed. 53.

25. Choses in action—At common law.—Van Ness v. Hyatt, 13 Pet. 294, 10 L. Ed. 168.

A conditional right to purchase, is, in effect, nothing more than a chose in action, upon which an execution of fieri facias cannot be levied. Van Ness v. Hyatt, 13 Pet. 294, 301, 10 L. Ed. 168.

"In Louisiana, the debts due to an execution debtor may be seized and sold on execution, like other movable property, and equally with the immovable property." Collier v. Stanbrough, 6 How. 14, 21, 12 L. Ed. 324.

27. Patents and copyrights.—The incorporeal right, secured to an author, to multiply copies of a map, by the use of a copperplate, being intangible, and resting altogether in grant, is not the subject of seizure or sale by means of this process—certainly not at common law. Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. 528, 531, 14 L. Ed. 528.

28. Have no locality.—There would certainly be great difficulty in assenting to the proposition that patent and copyrights, held under the laws of the United States, are subject to seizure and sale on execution. Not to repeat what is said on this subject, in Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. 528, 531, 14 L. Ed. 528, it may be added that these incorporeal rights do not exist in any particular state or district; they are coextensive with the United States. There is nothing in any act of congress, or in the nature of the rights themselves, to give them locality anywhere, so as to subject them to the process of courts having jurisdiction limited by the lines of states and districts. Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How. 447, 451, 15 L. Ed. 155.

29. The incorporeal right of an author or patents does not pass by a sale of the corporeal thing patented or copyrighted; for instance, the seizure and sale, under execution, of "one copperplate for the map of the state of Rhode Island," did not carry with it the right to fit and publish the map. Stevens v. Gladding, 17 How. 447, 448, 15 L. Ed. 155.

is.[31] This incorporeal right may be reached in equity.[32]

4. Franchises.—A franchise being an incorporeal hereditament cannot be seized on a fieri facias,[33] unless authorized by a statute of the state which granted such franchise.[34] Neither can the lands or works essential to the enjoyment of a franchise be separated from it and sold under a fieri facias, so as to destroy or impair the value of the franchise.[35]

5. Corporate Stocks.—Corporate stock is subject to execution, if declared so by statute.[36] which such a course has been judicially approved." Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 126, 129, 26 L. Ed. 942. See the titles COPYRIGHT, vol. 4, p. 602; PATENTS.

31. A copperplate engraving of a map, which has been copyrighted, like any other tangible personal property, is the subject of seisure and sale, on execution, and the title passes to the purchaser, the same as if made at a private sale, but without the right to multiply copies therefrom. Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. 528, 531, 14 L. Ed. 528; Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 126, 129, 26 L. Ed. 942.

32. Supplemental proceedings in equity.—"We are not aware of any instance in which such a course has been judicially approved. But it is within the general jurisdiction of a court of chancery to assist a judgment creditor to reach and apply to the payment of his debt any property of the judgment debtor, which, by reason of its nature only, and not by reason of any positive rule exempting it from liability for debt, cannot be taken on execution at law." Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 126, 129, 26 L. Ed. 942.

By creditor's bill.—The property may be reached by a creditor's bill, and be applied to the payment of the debts of the author, the court compelling a transfer and sale of the stock for the benefit of creditors; but in such case it would be necessary for the court to compel a transfer to the purchaser, in conformity with the requirements of the copyright act, in order to vest him with a complete title to the property. Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 126, 129, 26 L. Ed. 942.

33. Franchises—At common law.—Gue v. Tidewater Canal Co., 24 How. 257, 263, 16 L. Ed. 635. See Hammock v. Loan, etc., Co., 105 U. S. 77, 90, 26 L. Ed. 1111.

Franchise to take tolls.—This court decided, in Gue v. Tidewater Canal Co., 24 How. 257, 16 L. Ed. 635, that a corporate franchise to take tolls on a canal could not be seized and sold under a fieri facias. This decision was put on the ground that the franchise or right to take toll on boats going through the canal would not pass to the purchaser under the execution on a judgment at law against the corporation, because it was an incorporeal hereditament, and, upon the settled principles of the common law, could not be seized on a fieri facias; and was made in a case where the corporation owned in fee the real estate, toll houses, canal locks and wharf seized, all of which were necessary for the uses and working of the canal. East Alabama R. Co. v. Visscher, 114 U. S. 340, 353, 29 L. Ed. 136.

The right to take tolls of a bridge built over and partially obstructing a navigable stream conferred by the sovereign power, being a franchise, and sole right in the corporation, and the bridge a mere easement, the corporation not owning the fee in the land at either bank of the river, or under the water, it is difficult to say how an execution could attach to either the franchise or the structure of the bridge as real or personal property. Covington Drawbridge Co. v. Shepherd, 21 How. 112, 124, 16 L. Ed. 38.

34. Under statute.—Gue v. Tidewater Canal Co., 24 How. 257, 268, 16 L. Ed. 635.

Under the laws of Maryland the sale of the canal property and the franchise can be affected only by a proceeding in a court of chancery where the rights and priorities of all creditors may be considered and protected—not by levy and sale under execution. 36. Corporate stocks.—Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 36 L. Ed. 338. See the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.

By the law of Michigan the share or interest of a stockholder may be taken in execution, a copy of the execution being left by the officer with the clerk, treasurer or cashier of the company. The authority of the state to establish such regulations in reference to the stock of a corporation organized and existing under its laws cannot be doubted. Jellenik v. Huron Copper Min. May be reached in equity.—Ager v.

6. Pensions and Bounties.—Money paid by the government under a claim of a bounty or pension is not subject to execution.[37]

7. Chattels Real.—The general rule of law is that all chattels real may be taken in execution.[38] At common law, a leasehold interest in land is personal property and subject to execution before the expiration of the term.[39]

8. Fixtures.—Fixtures, in the sense of chattels annexed to land, yet which may be severed and removed therefrom, are subject to execution.[40]

E. Real Property—1. At Common Law.—At common law, real property is not subject to be levied upon and sold under a writ of fieri facias;[41] but is under a writ of extendi facias,[42] or under a writ of elegit.[43]

2. By Statute.—Land has been made subject to levy under fieri facias in the different states, by statutes,[44] that may be proceeded under in the United States

F. Equitable Estates and Interests.—The well-established rule at common law is that an equitable interest in real or personal property is not subject to execution.[53] Such interests have been made subject to execution by statute.[54] Whether or no equitable interests are subject to execution is to be determined,

It is admitted, that though this statute extends in terms only to executions in favor of British merchants, it has long received an equitable construction, applying it to all judgment creditors; and that this construction has been uniform throughout this state. This grew out of the fact that courts of law did not recognize any such titles and could not deal with them. Freedman's Savings, etc., Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 712, 28 L. Ed. 301. See the title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

In equity by analogy to elegit.—"As judgment creditors, after the statute of Westminster, 13 Ed. I, c. 18, were entitled, by the writ of elegit, to be put in the possession of a moiety of the lands of the debtor, until satisfaction of the judgment; and as it would be contrary to equity to permit a debtor to withdraw his lands from liability to his judgment creditors, this analogy was at an early date extended, so as to give to judgment creditors similar benefits in respect to the equitable estate of their debtors; and as the remedies in favor of judgment creditors by way of executor upon the legal estate of their debtors have been enlarged, they have been imitated by a corresponding analogy as to equitable estates by courts of equity. This is in pursuance of the principle stated in a pregnant sentence by Lord Northington, in Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden 177-261, where he said: 'For my own part, I know no instance where this court ever permitted the creation of a trust to affect the right of a third party.'" Freedman's Savings, etc., Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 713, 28 L. Ed. 301.

by the law of the situs in the case of real property, and where the trust was created or is to be administered in the case of personal property.[55]

G. Property Mortgaged or Conveyed by Deed of Trust.—It has been held by many courts that a mortgagee cannot, upon a judgment recovered for a debt secured by his mortgage, levy an execution upon the mortgaged property.[56] By the common law, an equity of redemption, is not liable to execution;[57] and if this be so, in the case of a mortgage, the principle applies most strongly, in case of a deed of trust;[58] but this has been changed in some states by statute,[59] and in others by practice.[60]

c, 3, made trust estates in fee simple assets for the payment of debts, and subject to an elegit upon judgment against the cestui que trust. "But this statute did not extend to chattels real, to trusts under which the debtor had not the whole interest, to equities of redemption, or to any equitable interest which had been parted with before execution sued out." Freedman's Savings, etc., Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 714, 28 L. Ed. 301.

The statute of 5 Geo. II, which made "houses, lands, negroes, and other hereditaments and real estate," liable to execution "in like manner as personal estate," etc., did not subject an equitable interest to seizure under a fieri facias. The equity of redemption of a mortgagor of land, in that part of the District of Columbia ceded by the state of Maryland to the United States, cannot be taken in execution under a fieri facias; at the time of the cession to the United States, the rule of the common law was the law of Maryland. Van Ness v. Hyatt, 13 Pet. 294, 10 L. Ed. 168.

"The interest of the mortgagor, according to the common law, is not liable to execution as real estate." Bank v. Guttschlick, 14 Pet. 19, 28, 10 L. Ed. 335.

Equity will not enforce an execution against a mortgagor's equity of redemption where third persons, without notice and for valuable consideration have acquired a previous equitable right and also acquired the legal estate. Van Ness v. Hyatt, 13 Pet. 294, 300, 10 L. Ed. 168.

58. Conveyed by deed of trust—At common law.—Bank v. Guttschlick, 14 Pet. 19, 29, 10 L. Ed. 335. See Webb v. Sharp, 13 Wall. 14, 16, 20 L. Ed. 478.

"A deed of trust does not protect goods from sale by execution. The owner has still an interest, or equity of redemption in them, which is subject to sale; and a purchaser at an execution sale would be entitled to redeem the goods from the deed of trust by paying the debt secured thereby." Webb v. Sharp, 13 Wall. 14, 16, 20 L. Ed. 478.

It has been held in Virginia, that the resulting interest of a grantor in a deed of trust made to secure debts, cannot be reached by execution. And this principle is not without some strong reasons in its support, independently of mere authority. Van Ness v. Hyatt, 13 Pet. 294, 298, 10 L. Ed. 168.

59. By statute.—Beebe v. United States, 161 U. S. 104, 109, 40 L. Ed. 632; Hammock v. Loan, etc., Co., 105 U. S. 77, 90, 26 L. Ed. 1111.

In Indiana the right of redemption is subject to execution. Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 113 U. S. 408, 413, 28 L. Ed. 1009.

60. By practice.—It is said, in 4 Kent's Com. 153-4, that courts of law have, by a gradual and almost insensible progress adopted the views of the court, of equity, on the subject of mortgages, which are founded in justice, and accord with the true intent and inherent nature of the transaction; that except as against the mortgagee, the mortgagor, while in possession, and before foreclosure, is regarded as the real owner; and that, in this country, the rule has very extensively prevailed, that an equity of redemption was vendible as real property, on an

H. Property of Cotenants and Partners.—In Alabama, executions can be levied on real property in which the defendant has the entire estate or is entitled to it in common with others.[61]

I. Property of Decedents.—The assets of the estate are first liable before the property of the representative.[62] In the state of Missouri, the lands of a deceased debtor may be taken in execution to satisfy a judgment against the administrator, as such.[63]

The laws of Mississippi direct that, where the insolvency of the estate of a deceased person shall be reported to the orphans' court, that court shall order a sale of the property, and distribute the proceeds thereof among the creditors pro rata, and that in the meantime no execution shall issue upon a judgment obtained against such insolvent estate. A judgment obtained against the administrator before the declaration by the orphans' court of the insolvency of the estate, is not, upon that account, entitled to a preference, but must share in the general distribution.[64]

J. Property or Interest Conveyed or Assigned.—Where there has been, before judgment, a bona fide alienation or assignment of any property or interest, an execution cannot issue thereon against the alienator or assignor;[65] but property, alienated or assigned after judgment, remains subject to execution in the hands of the alienee or assignee;[66] so does real property sold on credit under a execution at law. Van Ness v. Hyatt, 13 Pet. 294, 298, 10 L. Ed. 168.

61. Estates of cotenants.—Beebe v. United States, 161 U. S. 104, 109, 40 L. Ed. 632. See the title JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.

Partnership property.—McCarty v. Emlen, 2 Dall. 277, 278, 1 L. Ed. 380; Clagett v. Kilbourne, 1 Black 346, 349, 17 L. Ed. 213. See the title PARTNERSHIP.

62. Property of decedents.—The execution should be levied upon the assets in the hands of the executor, when no devastavit is averred and proved, unless it appear that no such assets can be found; in which event, the rule is, that, if so ordered, the execution may be levied upon the executor's own goods. Smith v. Chapman, 93 U. S. 41, 43, 23 L. Ed. 795. See the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

63. By statute—In Missouri.—But a sale thereof cannot be made until after the expiration of eighteen months from the date of the letters of administration. Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 15 L. Ed. 307.

Under the Pennsylvania practice, on a judgment obtained against a personal representative, lands of the decedent are subject to execution, although there has been a bona fide conveyance thereof by the heir for valuable consideration. Morris v. Smith, 4 Dall. 119, 1 L. Ed. 766.

64. In Mississippi.—Williams v. Benedict, 8 How. 107, 12 L. Ed. 1007.

65. Property alienated before judgment.—Heryford v. Davis, 102 U. S. 235, 243, 26 L. Ed. 160.

Where there was a judgment which had been recorded under the laws of Louisiana, and thus made equivalent to a mortgage upon the property of the debtor, and the plaintiff assigned this judgment, and was then himself sued and had an execution issued against him, his rights under the recorded judgment could not be sold under this execution, because he had previously transferred all those rights. Stockton v. Ford, 11 How. 232, 13 L. Ed. 676.

Where, by an agreement between the parties, certain property should become absolutely and unconditionally the property of the purchaser upon the property being counted and piled, such property is not subject to execution by the creditors of the vendor. Hatch v. Oil Co., 100 U. S. 124, 25 L. Ed. 554.

In 1883, the petitioner who then and for about twenty-five years prior thereto, had resided upon and worked a large farm, made a contract with his son, under which it was agreed that the latter should undertake the management of the farm, farm implements and live stock, make all repairs, pay taxes and other expenses, replace all implements as they were worn out, keep up all live stock, and have as his own the net profits. It was further stipulated that each party should be at liberty to terminate the arrangement at any time, and that the son should turn back to his father the farm with its implements, stock and other personalty, of the same kind and amount as was on the farm when the father retired, and in as good condition as when he took them. Held, that the farm property remained in the ownership of the father and was not subject to execution by creditors of the son. Arnold v. Hatch, 177 U. S. 276, 277, 44 L. Ed. 769.

66. Property conveyed after judgment.—A plaintiff may proceed and sell land aliened after judgment without a scire facias against the alienee. Tayloe v. Thomson, 5 Pet. 358, 369, 8 L. Ed. 154.

Under judicial sale.—The judgment creditor is not permitted to treat a convey-prior execution on the same judgment;[67] or property conveyed to defraud creditors,[68] but property conveyed or assigned to secure creditors is not subject to execution.[69]

K. Property in Custody of Law.—Property in the custody of the law is not subject to execution.[70] Property is considered in the custody of the law when in the hands of receivers,[71] sequestrators,[72] executors and administrators,[73] execution debtors to whom property has been redelivered on giving forthcoming bond,[74]

ance from the defendant in the judgment made by authentic act, or in pursuance of a judicial sale, as null and void, and to seize and sell the property which had thus passed to the vendee. Ford v. Douglas, 5 How. 143, 166, 12 L. Ed. 89.

By the laws of Louisiana, where there has been a judicial sale of the succession by a probate judge, a creditor of the estate, who obtains a judgment, cannot levy an execution upon the property so transferred, upon the ground, that the sale was fraudulent and void. He should first bring an action to set the sale aside. Ford v. Douglas, 5 How. 143, 12 L. Ed. 89. See the title JUDICIAL SALES.

67. Real property sold on credit under an execution may be levied on by another execution in the same judgment in the hands of such gratuitous donee, and such execution may be levied on the property of the donee's sureties as well as on that of their principal. Evans v. Pike, 118 U. S. 241, 247, 30 L. Ed. 234.

68. Property fraudulently conveyed.—The well-known rule is that property fraudulently conveyed may be levied upon under an execution and sold. And the proceeds of a fraudulent assignment may be levied upon. Ford v. Douglas, 5 How. 143, 12 L. Ed. 89.

Property fraudulently conveyed may be sold under Indiana statute. Hyatt v. Vincennes Nat. Bank, 113 U. S. 408, 413, 28 L. Ed. 1009. See the title FRAUDULENT AND VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES.

69. Conveyed to secure creditors.—Morsell v. First Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 357, 23 L. Ed. 436.

70. Property in custody of law.—Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 15 L. Ed. 1028; Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. Ed. 470; Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334, 18 L. Ed. 257; Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52, 14 L. Ed. 322; Marks v. Dickson, 20 How. 501, 503, 15 L. Ed. 1002; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 28 L. Ed. 390; Freeman v. Howe, 24 How. 450, 16 L. Ed. 749. See post, "Grounds for Relief," VII, C, 2.

71. In hands of receivers.—Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52, 14 L. Ed. 322; Peale v. Phipps, 14 How. 368, 375, 14 L. Ed. 459; Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 129, 26 L. Ed. 672.

It is competent, and might, in some cases, be proper for the court, where the property in dispute is ample, and the litigation protracted, to permit the execution to issue, and compel the prosecuting creditor to pay off the judgment. But it is manifest that these proceedings should be under the control of and subject to the discretion of the court. Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52, 67, 14 L. Ed. 322. See the title RECEIVERS.

72. Sequestrators.—Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52, 53, 68, 14 L. Ed. 322.

73. Executors and administrators.—Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 15 L. Ed. 307. See the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

A nonresident creditor cannot recover judgment in a federal court and have execution issued thereon against the property of a decedent in the custody of a state probate court subject to the equal rights of all creditors. Yonley v. Lavender, 21 Wall. 276, 22 L. Ed. 536. See, also, Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 615, 37 L. Ed. 867.

74. Custody of claimant substitute for that of officer.—The custody of the claimant is substituted for the custody of the sheriff. The property is not withdrawn from the custody of the law. In the hands of the claimant, under the bond for its delivery to the sheriff, the property is as free from the reach of the other processes, as it would have been in the hands of the sheriff. Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 404, 9 L. Ed. 470. See the title ADMIRALTY, vol. 1, p. 172.

Executions issuing from different jurisdictions—Sheriff and marshal.—If previous to the levy by a marshal, property has been levied on by a sheriff, and been delivered to the plaintiff on his making oath and giving bond, as required by the statute, and the proceedings on said claims are still pending and undetermined in the circuit court, the property is considered as in the custody of the law, and consequently not subject to be levied on by the marshal. Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 401, 9 L. Ed. 470.

"Had the property remained in the possession of the sheriff, under the first levy, it is clear the marshal could not have taken it in execution; for the property could not be subject to two jurisdictions at the same time. The first levy, whether it were made under the federal or state authority, withdraws the property from the reach of the process of the other. Under the state jurisdiction, a sheriff having execution in his hands, may levy on the same goods; and where there is no priority on the sale of the goods, the proceeds should be applied in proportion to the sums named in the executions. And where a sheriff has made a levy, and afterwards in the registry of admiralty,[75] or which has been levied upon by another officer under judicial process.[76] Especially is this true, in the last instance, where the previous levy has been made by an officer of a court of another jurisdiction as, for example, a marshal under process of a United States court seeking to levy upon property which has previously been levied upon by an officer of a state court, or vice versa.[77] Property negligently suffered to remain in the hands of the execution debtor after the levy for a long time is subject to execution;[78] so is property which has been distrained for rent and replevied.[79]

L. Property in Possession of Third Persons.—Goods in the possession of a third person cannot be seized under execution against the defendant.[80]

M. Property Subject to Homestead.—Land in fee can be sold under execution, subject to a homestead right, and the purchaser has the absolute title when the homestead right ceases.[81]

N. Property Held by Particular Persons.—For treatment of this subject, see other titles.[82] receives executions against the same defendant, he may appropriate any surplus that shall remain, after satisfying the first levy, by the order of the court. But the same rule does not govern, where the executions, as in the present case, issue from different jurisdictions. The marshal may apply moneys, collected under several executions, the same as the sheriff; but this cannot be done as between the marshal and the sheriff." Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 403, 9 L. Ed. 470. See the title COURTS, vol. 4, pp. 1173, 1175.

75. In registry of admiralty.—A creditor by judgment in a state court, of the owners of the vessel, even though he have a decree in personam also in the admiralty against them, cannot seize, on execution, proceeds of the vessel in the registry of the admiralty. The Lottawanna, 20 Wall. 201, 22 L. Ed. 259. See the title ADMIRALTY, vol. 1, p. 172.

76. Property levied upon.—Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334, 344, 18 L. Ed. 257; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 182, 28 L. Ed. 390; Pulliam v. Osborne, 17 How. 471, 475, 15 L. Ed. 154; Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. Ed. 470.

77. Where personal property is levied on by the marshal, by virtue of mesne process out of a federal court, it cannot be taken out of his possession by a sheriff, under process from a state court. "A most injurious conflict of jurisdiction would be likely, often, to arise between the federal and the state courts, if the final process of the one could be levied on property which had been taken by the process of the other. The marshal or the sheriff, as the case may be, by a levy, acquires a special property in the goods, and may maintain an action for them. But if the same goods may be taken in execution, at the same time, by the marshal and the sheriff, does this special property vest in the one, or the other, or both of them? No such case can exist; property once levied on remains in the custody of the law, and it is not liable to be taken by another execution, in the hands of a different officer; and especially, by an officer acting under a different jurisdiction." Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 403, 9 L. Ed. 470, quoted in Pulliam v. Osborne, 17 How. 471, 476, 15 L. Ed. 154. See the title COURTS, vol. 4, pp. 1173, 1175.

78. Property remaining with debtor.—Property consisting of household furniture, which has been suffered to remain in the possession of the execution debtor for more than a year after the levy was made, is liable to levy under a subsequent execution. United States v. Conyngham, 4 Dall. 358, 1 L. Ed. 865.

79. Property distrained and replevied.—The goods are subject to execution on a judgment against the tenant, as soon as they have been replevied and redelivered. Frey v. Leeper, 2 Dall. 131, 1 L. Ed. 319. See the title REPLEVIN.

A. Congressional Regulation.—Congress possesses the uncontrolled power to legislate with respect to the form of writs of execution in the courts of the United States.[85]

B. Conformity to Forms in State Courts.—The act of congress directing that executions in the United States courts should conform to those of the state courts was passed with consideration to convenience and practice.[86] The conformity to the process in the state courts is adopted under such guards and checks as might be necessary to insure the due exercise of the powers of the courts of the United States, and such courts have the power to add to and alter their process.[87] The acts of congress of May 8, 1792, adopted the forms of writs as then existing in the different states;[88] subject to such alterations as the courts of the United States might make, but not subject to alterations since made by state laws,[89]

85. Power of congress to prescribe.—Such power necessarily results, by implication, from the power given congress to ordain and establish such courts. "But it does not rest altogether upon such implication; for express authority is given to congress to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof. The right of congress, therefore, to regulate the proceedings on executions, and direct the mode and manner, and out of what property of the debtor satisfaction may be obtained, is not to be questioned, and the only inquiry is, how far this power has been exercised." Writs of execution issuing from the courts of the United States are not controlled or controllable by any collateral regulations which the state laws have imposed upon the state courts to govern them in the actual use, suspension or superseding of them; such regulations and restrictions are exclusively addressed to the state tribunals, and have no efficacy in the courts of the United States, unless adopted by them. Boyle v. Zacharie, 6 Pet. 648, 8 L. Ed. 532, citing Palmer v. Allen, 7 Cranch 550, 564, 3 L. Ed. 436; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 253, and Bank v. Halstead, 10 Wheat. 51, 6 L. Ed. 264.

At the time of the passage of the act of May 8, 1792, entitled "an act to regulate process in the courts of the United States," congress had in mind the forms and effect of executions as they then existed in the different states; but, as it could be anticipated that convenience would necessitate certain changes, it was left to the discretion of the United States courts to follow such changes as would be made by the state courts, rather than adopt in anticipation all changes which may be made by such courts. unless adopted by express rules of court.[90]

C. Title and Direction.—Under the Indiana code, executions must issue in the name of the state, and be directed to the sheriff of the county.[91]

D. Command of Writ.—The mandate of a writ of fieri facias, as originally formed, is that the officer have the money in court on the return day, there to be paid to the creditor.[92]

E. Conformity to Judgment.—An execution must conform to the judgment on which issued;[93] but an execution at variance with the judgment on which issued may be amended to conform thereto.[94]

F. Teste and Seal.—Executions are to be attested by a judge, and to be under the seal of the court from which they issue.[95] Where so required by statute, an

90. Adoption by rule of court.—A state law regulating executions, enacted subsequently to September, 1789, is not applicable to executions issuing on judgments rendered by the courts of the United States, unless expressly adopted by the regulations and rules of those courts. Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 253. See the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 1128.

The circuit court of Virginia never adopted any rule, regulating executions, and the execution law of Virginia in 1789, adopted by the process acts, is in force. How adopted.—No rule, under the third section of the act of 1828, which authorizes the courts of the United States to alter final process, so far as to conform it to any changes which may be adopted by state legislation and state adjudications, made by a district judge, will be recognized by the supreme court as binding, except those made by the district courts exercising circuit court powers. "An ordinary execution upon a judgment at law commands the officer to whom it is addressed to perform a series of acts—to levy on goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the judgment debtor, and, if on the latter, to appraise their value, to advertise the same for sale, to make sale of the same at the time and place and in the manner prescribed by law, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the judgment—and these are to be performed successively. There is no incongruity in such a writ. It would not be complete or effective without it embraced all the particulars which, in law, are essential to the full duty contemplated by it, the performance of which is necessary to secure its benefits to the party who sues it out." Labette County Comm'rs v. Moulton, 112 U. S. 217, 223, 28 L. Ed. 698.

93. Where original judgment omitted interest.—The rule in some states is that a levy for an amount exceeding the amount of the judgment, or the amount actually due upon the judgment with interest and costs, is void. Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 334, 341, 40 L. Ed. 721; Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. 303, 311, 10 L. Ed. 973.

The original judgment having omitted to name interest, and the federal supreme court having affirmed the judgment as it stood, it was proper for the court below to issue an execution for the amount of the judgment and costs, leaving out interest. Early v. Rogers, 16 How. 599, 14 L. Ed. 1074.

But where the judgment was affirmed upon writ of error, the execution may include the interest, from the date of the original judgment. Respublica v. Nicholson, 2 Dall. 256, 1 L. Ed. 371.

On death of party to record.—In case of a judgment against two defendants, and the death of one, the writ must be in form against both, to correspond with the record; but, on making a suggestion of the death upon the record, the writ could be against the survivor alone. execution issued without a seal is void.[96] A seal may be supplied by amendment under the Wisconsin practice.[97]

V. Issuance of Writ.

A. What Amounts to Issuance.—An execution is not issued until it is placed beyond the control of the clerk. So long as it remains with him, or under his control, it is like any other paper in his office.[98]

B. Election of Writs.—A plaintiff having a right to issue an execution against either the body or the property of a defendant, may elect to proceed against either, but his election of one does not preclude him from resorting to the other, if satisfaction of the debt is not obtained by the first execution.[99]

C. Jurisdiction—1. In General.—The right of a court to issue execution depends upon its own powers and organization. Its judgments may be complete and perfect, and have full effect, independent of the right to issue execution.[1] The general rule is that the power to issue an execution is a necessary consequence to the power to render judgment;[2] but the courts of the United States have no inherent authority in such case, except as has been conferred upon them by congress.[3] Congress has power to control the issuance of executions in the United States courts, resulting from the power to ordain and establish such courts.[4] The

By statute in Virginia "all persons who have recovered, or shall hereafter recover, any debt, damages or costs, in any court of record, may, at their election, prosecute writs of fieri facias, elegit and capias ad satisfaciendum, within the year, for taking the goods, lands and body of the debtor." By the construction put by the circuit court on this section, the party who had sued out a fieri facias could not resort to an elegit, until the remedy on the fieri facias was shown by the return to be exhausted. This court, according to its uniform course, adopts that construction of the act which is made by the highest court of the state. United States v. Morrison, 4 Pet. 124, 136, 7 L. Ed. 804.

power to issue executions was granted to the United States courts by the judiciary act of 1789.[5] This gives the United States courts the same power as had been possessed by the state courts,[6] and such courts have power to adopt the changes made by state laws.[7] The United States courts in the states admitted to the Union subsequent to 1789, possessed the same powers in regard to executions as the courts in states previously admitted.[8] The rendition of judgment does not exhaust jurisdiction, but jurisdiction continues until satisfaction for judgment.[9] An execution may issue out of a superior court without a remittitur on affirmance of a judgment from a justice's court on certiorari.[10]

2. CONFLICTING AND CONCURRENT.—In cases of conflicting executions, issued out of the federal and state courts, a priority is given to that under which there is first an actual seizure of the property.[11]

D. Who May Issue Writ.—The act of issuing an execution is merely ministerial,[12] and may be performed by the clerk of the court, who may be compelled to issue the writ by mandamus,[13] and who is entitled to compensation for his services.[14]

E. Who May Have Writ Issued.—By the act of parliament of 5 Geo. II 7, lands in the colonies were subject to execution as chattels, in favor of British merchants. Although this statute extends in terms only to executions in favor of British merchants, it has long received an equitable construction, applying it to all judgment creditors.[15] An execution may issue upon the application of an as-

5. The fourteenth section of the act of September 24, 1789, c. 20, commonly known as the judiciary act, provided that the courts of the United States should have "power to issue writs of scire facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs not specially provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, and agreeable to the principles and usages of law;" and this was held to embrace executions upon judgments. Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 253; Fink v. O'Neil, 106 U. S. 272, 277, 27 L. Ed. 196.

9. Jurisdiction not exhausted by rendition of judgment.—Express determination of the federal supreme court is that the jurisdiction of a court is not exhausted by the rendition of the judgment, but continues until that judgment shall be satisfied. Process subsequent to judgment is as essential to jurisdiction as process antecedent to judgment, else the judicial power would be incomplete and entirely inadequate to the purposes for which it was conferred by the constitution. signee of the judgment,[16] an attorney,[17] or a libelant in admiralty.[18]

F. Against Whom Writ May Issue.—After appeal and security given, a justice of the peace cannot issue an execution against the original defendant, but must proceed against the bail upon the recognizance.[19]

G. Into What County Writs May Issue.—Under the practice in Pennsylvania, before an execution can issue into a county other than that in which the venue is laid, a fi. fa. must issue and be returned nulla bona in the latter. An execution issued before such return must be quashed. It is also necessary that a term of court must intervene.[20]

H. Judgments on Which Writ May Issue—1. NECESSITY FOR JUDGMENT.—No execution can issue except upon a valid judgment.[21] It cannot issue upon a mere order of a court.[22]

2. NATURE OF JUDGMENT—a. In General.—The Indiana code provides that an execution may issue a judgment which requires the payment of money, or the delivery of real or personal property.[23]

b. Judgment on Confession.—An execution may issue on a judgment on the confession of a defendant,[24] or his attorney.[25]

c. Dormant Judgment.—An execution issued on a dormant judgment is voidable but not void.[26]

An assignee who acquired a judgment in good faith acquires the same rights in regard to an execution thereon as his assignor; but a collusive agreement between the assignor and one of the codefendants of the judgment by which such codefendant was to be exempted from the levy of the execution, is not valid in law and does not prevent a levy by the assignee upon the property of the defendant. Selz v. Unna, 6 Wall. 327, 18 L. Ed. 799.

17. Attorney.—An attorney at law, by virtue of his general authority as such, is entitled to take out execution upon a judgment recovered by him for his client, and to procure a satisfaction thereof by a levy on lands or otherwise, and to receive the money due on the execution. Erwin v. Blake, 8 Pet. 18, 26, 8 L. Ed. 852; Union Bank v. Geary, 5 Pet. 99, 8 L. Ed. 60; Rogers v. The Marshall, 1 Wall. 644, 651, 17 L. Ed. 714. Judgment need not have been formally entered. Clements v. Berry, 11 How. 398, 410, 13 L. Ed. 745.

22. Cannot issue upon order.—In Kansas, an order of a court in a proceeding in aid of execution directing a garnishee to pay to the judgment creditor money which he owes to the judgment debtor is not a judgment, and does not determine finally the liability of the garnishee. Therefore, in such a proceeding, an order of the circuit court of the United States, sitting in that state, awarding execution against a garnishee, is erroneous. Atlantic, etc., R. under it, until the judgment is reversed, for an erroneous judgment is the act of the court.[27]

e. Void Judgment.—If a judgment is void, an execution founded thereon is also void.[28]

f. Foreign Judgment.—The constitution did not make the judgments of other states domestic judgments to all intents and purposes, but only gave a general validity, faith and credit to them, as evidence. No execution can issue upon such judgments without a new suit in the tribunals of the state in which issuance is sought.[29]

g. Judgment Sought to Be Set Aside.—An execution may issue upon a judgment, to set aside which, an application has been made to the court, and a continuance of the application until the next term granted without prejudice to either party.[30]

h. Judgment without Service of Process.—An execution issued on a judgment, void for want of service of process, is of no validity.[31]

i. Judgment upon Mandate of Appellate Court.—When the mandate of the federal supreme court goes to the court below, it is necessary that that court, with a view to execution, should enter a further judgment in accordance with the mandate.[32]

j. On Judgment for Injuries Growing Out of the Civil War.—The constitutional provision of a state that no execution should issue on any judgment rendered because of any act done according to civilized warfare during the Civil War, does not contravene the United States constitution by impairment of the obligation of contract.[33]

k. Judgment Appealed from.—"We are by no means prepared to say that a complainant, after having appealed from a decree in his favor, can be permitted, pending the appeal, to carry into execution the decree which he is seeking to reverse in the appellate court, in order to obtain a decree for a larger sum."[34]

27. Erroneous judgment.—The defendants in an execution paid to the agents of the plaintiff the amount of the debt, and gave a verbal notice that it was their intention to sue out a writ of error to reverse the judgment; this was afterwards done, and the judgment was reversed; the agents of the plaintiff paid over to him forthwith the amount received, and the defendants instituted a suit against the agent, to recover the sum paid to them. Held, that they could not recover; for "whatever * * * was done under the execution, towards enforcing payment of the judgment, was done under authority of law. Had the marshal * * * gone with the execution, and received the money, or coerced payment, he would have been fully justified by authority of the execution. * * * Suppose, it had become necessary for the marshal to sell some of the property of the bank, to satisfy the execution, the purchaser would have acquired a good title under such sale." 30. Judgment sought to be set aside.—"The judgments were duly recovered. The filing of application to set them aside did not affect the validity of the judgments, nor suspend the right to take out executions thereon. The continuance of those applications to the next term, 'without prejudice to either party,' left both parties in statu quo, the applications of the judgment debtor to set aside the judgments undetermined, and the right of the judgment creditor to enforce the judgments unaffected." l. Judgment against Wrong Person.—If a judgment be rendered against one, as executor, who is not executor, it does not bind the estate of the testator; and an execution upon such a judgment cannot legally be levied upon such estate.[35]

J. Decrees on Which Execution May Issue.—On a decree other than for a specified sum of money, no execution can issue,[37] except for costs.[37a]

K. Time within Which Execution May Issue—1. In General.—An execution cannot issue before the judgment is rendered,[38] after expiration of judgment lien,[39] nor later than a year at common law,[40] but this has been the subject of statutory regulation in the different states.[41] It cannot issue within ten days after rendition of judgment, where a writ of error may operate as a supersedeas.[42] But there is nothing to prevent the preparation by the clerk of an execution before the expiration of the ten days.[43] The issuance of an execution during the time agreed upon for stay is presumed regular.[44] The premature issuance of an execution is

Ed. 875; Griffith v. Bogert, 18 How. 158, 162, 15 L. Ed. 307; United States v. Morrison, 4 Pet. 124, 136, 7 L. Ed. 804.

41. Under statute.—Under the laws of Colorado an execution may issue within a year from the judgment. Gottlieb v. Thatcher, 151 U. S. 271, 38 L. Ed. 157.

Under the Virginia act of 1792, where an execution has been issued and not returned, other executions and proceedings may be had, within the ten years; but not afterwards. If this, then, be a limitation law, it is a rule of property; and under the 34th section of the judiciary act, it is a rule of decision for the courts of the United States. Ross v. Duval, 13 Pet. 45, 60, 10 L. Ed. 51.

A judgment was obtained in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Virginia, in December, 1821, and a writ of fieri facias was issued on this judgment, in January, 1822, which was not returned; and no other execution was issued, until August, 1836, when a capias ad satisfaciendum was issued against the defendant. Held, that this execution issued illegally, in consequence of the lapse of time between the rendition of the judgment, and the issuing of execution in 1836. Ross v. Duval, 13 Pet. 45, 10 L. Ed. 51.

42. Where writ of error operates as supersedeas.—Section 1007 of the Revised Statutes, which, as amended by the act of February 18, 1875 (18 Stat., part 3, p. 316), provides that, where a writ of error may operate as a supersedeas, execution shall not issue until the expiration of ten days after the rendition of the judgment, has reference only to the judgments of the courts of the United States. Doyle v. Wisconsin, 94 U. S. 50, 24 L. Ed. 64.

43. Board of Commissioners v. Gorman, 19 Wall. 661, 665, 22 L. Ed. 226.

44. During time agreed for stay.—Where the following memoranda appeared on the judgment records: "By consent execution stayed until the 25th day of March, A. D 1877," and executions were issued before the expiration of that time, the presumption is, nothing appearing to the contrary, that they were rightly issued, and that either the agreement lacked consideration, or was not authorized, or had been by mutual assent annulled, or that the terms of the agreement had not been complied with by defendants. Beebe v. United States, 161 U. S. 104, 112, 40 L. Ed. 632.

But where a defendant executed a bond, with warrant of attorney to confess judgment an execution cannot be issued on such judgment until time of maturity of an irregularity merely,[45] and the same is true of the tardy issuance thereof.[46] In computing the time within which an execution may issue, the period of a stay is not counted.[47]

2. After Death of Party—a. In General.—The general rule is that the death of a party to a suit after judgment but before execution is tested, abates the suit and the writ thereafter issued is void, unless issued upon scire facias or the statutory substitute therefor by notice.[48] the bond, although there was no provision for a stay of execution inserted in the warrant of attorney. Shoemaker v. Shirtliffe, 1 Dall. 127, 1 L. Ed. 66.

45. Effect of premature issuance.—Although prematurely issued, an execution is not absolutely void. It is merely erroneous and must be respected and may be enforced until it is vacated in some manner prescribed by law; no one but the defendant can complain of it, and even he cannot do so in any collateral proceeding. Beebe v. United States, 161 U. S. 104, 113, 40 L. Ed. 632; The Charles Carter, 4 Cranch 328, 333, 2 L. Ed. 636.

Premature issuance is not collusive.—An execution issued by consent on a judgment in favor of a mortgagee against an insolvent corporation is not collusive merely because consented to and issued hastily. Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 190, 44 L. Ed. 423.

46. Effect of tardy issuance.—"An execution issued after a year and a day is voidable but not void; even the defendant cannot attack it collaterally; and a levy and sale, made under it, are sufficient to transfer his title." Beebe v. United States, 161 U. S. 104, 113, 40 L. Ed. 632.

47. Computation of time.—The time during which a supersedeas is in force is not counted as a part of the year. Gottlieb v. Thatcher, 151 U. S. 271, 38 L. Ed. 157.

48. After death of party.—Insley v. United States, 150 U. S. 512, 516, 37 L. Ed. 1163; Ransom v. Williams, 2 Wall. 313, 317, 17 L. Ed. 803; Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 76, 11 L. Ed. 875; Mitchell v. St. Maxent, 4 Wall. 237, 18 L. Ed. 326.

When a defendant dies after judgment, and execution is subsequently issued without notice as required by statute being given to the representatives of the defendant, or the judgment being revived by scire facias, the execution is a nullity, and all proceedings under it are void. But the execution is good, if it is tested before the death occurred. The law in such cases, however, acts upon the theory that the defendant is interested in the case, and, therefore, upon his death his personal representatives should be called in. In this case, however, the judgment has been satisfied by the sale of the land, and there are no proceedings existing in which the estate is interested. Insley v. United States, 150 U. S. 512, 516, 37 L. Ed. 1163; Ransom v. Williams, 2 Wall. 313, 317, 17 L. Ed. 803.

Such is the settled law where there is but one defendant. Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 11 L. Ed. 875.

Judgment entered after death.—"If a judgment is entered in vacation against a defendant who died the preceding term, an execution tested on a day in the said term prior to the defendant's death may be sued out without a scire facias; for, as the judgment signed in vacation relates to and is considered as a judgment of the first day of the preceding term, and as the execution relates to the judgment, it may, in point of form, be considered as having commenced before the death of the defendant, on account of the date or teste, and, of course, upon the ground above stated, being an entire thing, be completed afterwards." Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 75, 76, 11 L. Ed. 875.

"The writ is regarded as having been issued in the lifetime of the defendant himself, and, inasmuch as he had not taken any steps to arrest it before his death, no good reason could be given for the interposition of his representatives. They, upon the view taken, were not new parties, nor parties at all to the proceedings, as the last step in the appropriation of the goods to the satisfaction of the judgment had been taken in the lifetime of their intestate." Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 76, 11 L. Ed. 875; Taylor v. Doe, 13 How. 287, 294, 14 L. Ed. 149.

Writ against king's debtors.—"It is otherwise as respects the writ of extent issued against the king's debtor; for, as that cannot be antedated, but must bear teste on the day it issues, it can only be issued against the lands and goods in the lifetime of the defendant." Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 76, 11 L. Ed. 875.

Where property has been attached.—The same rule applies where the proceedings are commenced by seizing property under a writ of attachment, under the laws of Florida, as at the common law. In Florida the service of the writ of attachment binds the property, and retains it in custody of the law, for the benefit of the attaching creditor, if he obtains a judgment and execution, and the property is to be disposed of as in other cases of property levied upon and taken in execution. Mitchell v. St. Maxent, 4 Wall. 237, 243, 18 L. Ed. 326.

Elegit at common law.—The same rules applied to a writ of elegit sued out under the statute of 13 Edward I. Ransom v. Williams, 2 Wall. 313, 317, 17 L. Ed. 803;

b. On Scire Facias—(1) In General.—"Where a new person who was not a party to the judgment or recognizance derives a benefit or becomes chargeable to the execution, there must be a scire facias to make him a party to the judgment or recognizance."[49]

(2) Where There Is Sole Defendant.—The death of a defendant, before the teste of an execution, compels the plaintiff to sue out a writ of scire facias, for the alteration of the person alters the process.[50]

(3) Where There Are Several Defendants—(a) Personal Property.—In case of a judgment against two defendants, and the death of one, execution may be taken out against the personal representative within the year without a scire facias.[51]

(b) Real Property.—Where there are two or more defendants, some of whom have died, the judgment cannot be enforced by execution against the real estate of the survivors alone; and, as it has to issue against the real estate of all, the estate of those deceased is protected by the same law which would govern the case if there had been a sole defendant.[52]

c. On Notice under Statute.—By statute in some of the states, execution may issue against the lands and tenants of a deceased judgment debtor, provided the plaintiffs in execution shall have given to the executor or administrator of such deceased debtor notice in writing of the existence of said judgment.[53]

Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 76, 11 L. Ed. 875.

The act of 29 Car. II, which has been re-enacted in most of the states, took away this relation as respected the rights of bona fide purchasers, and confined its binding effect upon the goods as to them to the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff; but as between the parties, it remained as it stood at common law. Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 75, 11 L. Ed. 875.

Effect of relation back.—In consequence of this relation back, if the execution was regularly tested in the lifetime of a deceased defendant, it may be taken out and executed against his goods and chattels after his death, the same as if that event had not intervened. Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 85, 11 L. Ed. 875.

"It is regarded in the same light as if delivered into the hands of the sheriff and the goods bound in the lifetime of the defendant, for the reason the officer being entitled to seize them at any time after the teste, the death of the party could not alter the right; and, therefore, though the execution came to the sheriff after, still if tested before, his death, the goods may be seized, in whose hands soever they may be found." Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 75, 11 L. Ed. 875.

49. On scire facias.—Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 77, 11 L. Ed. 875; Taylor v. Savage, 1 How. 282, 285, 11 L. Ed. 132.

50. Sole defendant.—Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 11 L. Ed. 875; Browne v. Chavez, 181 U. S. 68, 45 L. Ed. 752.

The heirs, devisees, and terre tenants of the deceased must have notice before an execution can regularly issue, for they are the parties in interest, and should have an opportunity to interpose a defense, if any they have, to the enforcement of the judgment. Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 11 L. Ed. 875, is an authority in point, and it is unnecessary to refer to any other. But it is contended that the doctrines of that case have been overturned by the decision of Taylor v. Doe, 13 How. 287, 14 L. Ed. 149. This is an erroneous view of that decision. The court held, in that case, that it is not necessary to revive a judgment by scire facias, where an execution regularly issued during the life of the defendant had been levied on land, but that the officer who had made the levy could proceed to sell, under a venditioni exponas. That writ was regarded as a completion of the previous execution, by which the property had been appropriated, and not as an original or independent proceeding. Mitchell v. St. Maxent, 4 Wall. 237, 242, 18 L. Ed. 326.

51. Several defendants—Personalty.—Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 77, 78, 11 L. Ed. 875; United States v. Price, 9 How. 83, 96, 13 L. Ed. 56.

Before and since the Statute of Westminster 2d, a judgment against two defendants survives against the personal estate of the survivor, and execution could be taken out against him, within a year, without a scire facias. Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 11 L. Ed. 875.

52. Realty.—Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 11 L. Ed. 875.

Before the real estate of the deceased can be subjected to execution, the judgment, which does not survive as to the real estate, must be revived by scire facias against the surviving defendants, and against the heirs, devisees, and terre tenants of the deceased. The interest of new parties would otherwise be liable to be suddenly divested without notice. Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 11 L. Ed. 875.

53. Notice under statute.—Ransom v.

L. Alias and Plures Writs.—The remedies of an execution creditor are cumulative and successive, and he may pursue them until he reaches that point of which the law declares his debt satisfied;[54] he may elect between an alias writ and a writ of venditioni exponas.[55] These writs relate back to the issuance and levy of the originals,[56] which are presumed to have been regularly issued.[57] The clerk is entitled to his fee for issuing alias writs,[58] and may include cost of issuing the original.[59]

M. Presumptions.—Proceedings of a court, having jurisdiction to render judgment, in carrying it into effect are presumed regular.[60]

VI. Amendments.

An execution at variance with a judgment on which issued may be so amended so as to conform thereto,[61] and a variance between the writ and præcipe may be cured by amendment.[62] The amendment relates back to the date of the writ.[63]

VII. Staying, Quashing and Vacating Writ.

A. Stay—1. JURISDICTION.—The inherent power to prevent abuse, oppression and injustice is possessed equally by courts of law and equity over their process,[64] and the eighteenth section of the judiciary act of 1789, ch. 20, empowers a federal

A statute of Illinois authorizes execution to issue against the lands of a deceased debtor, provided that the plaintiff in the execution shall give notice to the executor or administrator, if there be any, of the decedent—a sale without either such notice or scire facias, as at common law, is void. Ransom v. Williams, 2 Wall. 313, 17 L. Ed. 803.

Although, by the law of Alabama, where an execution has issued during the lifetime of a defendant, but has not been actually levied, an alias or plures may go after his death, and the personal estate of the deceased levied upon and sold to satisfy the judgment, yet this is not so with respect to the real estate. Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. 58, 75, 11 L. Ed. 875.

55. Election.—It rests within the election of the plaintiff in execution to take out an alias execution, or a writ of venditioni exponas. If merely a sale of the property on which a levy has been made is desired and not of other property, or the acquisition of a lien on other property, a venditioni exponas is the proper writ. The propriety of such an order cannot be tested upon the application of the clerk for his fee for entering it." United States v. Payne, 147 U. S. 687, 689, 37 L. Ed. 332.

court to suspend execution, in order to give time for granting a new trial.[65]

2. Time Allowed for Stay.—A supersedeas, in order to stay proceedings on an execution, must come before there is a levy made under the execution; for if it come afterwards, the sheriff is at liberty to proceed, upon a writ of venditioni exponas, to sell the goods.[66]

3. Grounds for Stay—a. Matters of Defense at Trial.—Matter of defense to the action, by way of set-off, which was not pleaded at the trial, is not ground for stay of execution.[67]

b. Matters Arising Prior to Judgment.—A rule to show cause why execution should not be stayed upon a judgment, until it should be determined in another action whether or not such judgment was rendered upon a usurious contract, was properly refused.[68]

c. Discharge from Bankruptcy.—A discharge from bankruptcy may be set up in a state court to stay an execution, though judgment on which issued was recovered after commencement of bankruptcy proceedings but before discharge, and a stay of execution need not have been asked for before judgment.[69]

d. Appeal or Writ of Error.—The suing out of a writ of error, giving bond and citation of parties, operate as a stay of execution.[70]

4. Bond for Stay.—Under the act of the assembly of Pennsylvania of December 23, 1784, providing for a stay of execution, upon bond given by defendant, the date expressed in the bond cannot be contradicted by evidence aliunde.[71]

A convention of the state of Virginia passed an ordinance of secession, on the 18th of April, 1861, and, on the 30th of that month, a law entitled, "An ordinance to provide against the sacrifice of property and to suspend proceedings in certain cases." This ordinance declared that thereafter no execution should be issued, without the consent of the parties interested, until otherwise provided by law; and that where executions were in the hands of the officer, whether levied or not, if the debtors should offer bond and security for the payment of the debt, interest, and costs, when the operation of the ordinance should cease, the property should be restored and the bond should be returned, as in the case of a forthcoming bond, and should be alien on the realty of the obligors. One against whom an execution was issued in March of the same year took advantage of the above ordinance by giving the prescribed bond and security, and allowed the judgment against him to remain unpaid. After this ordinance had ceased to operate, action was brought upon the bond. Held, that the obligors were estopped from raising the invalidity of the ordinance. Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 416, 26 L. Ed. 187.

B. Quashing—1. Nature of Relief—Discretion of Court.—Motions to quash executions are addressed to the sound discretion of the court and are a summary relief, which the court is not compellable to allow. The party is deprived of no right by the refusal; and he is at full liberty to redress the grievance by writ of error, or audita querela, or other remedy known to the common law.[73]

2. Time Allowed for Quashing.—The party seeking to have an execution quashed must be free from laches and unreasonable delay in making a motion to quash.[74]

3. Grounds for Quashing—a. Issuance of Executions after Supersedeas.—An execution, issued in the court below, after a writ of error has been sued out, a bond given, and a citation issued, all in due time, may be quashed either in the court below or in the appellate court—these things operating as a stay of execution.[75] But the court will not quash an execution, issued by the court below, to enforce its decree, pending the writ of error, if the writ of error be not a supersedeas to the decree.[76]

b. Different Judgment in Another State.—The fact that a judgment exists in another state different from the one in this state is no ground for quashing execution issued on the latter.[77]

c. Satisfaction of Execution.—A motion to quash a second fieri facias, on the ground that the execution is satisfied, will be denied, where the pretended satisfaction consists in the officer's unauthorized acceptance of bank notes.[78]

d. Garnishment Proceedings.—Whether a court will quash an execution on account of proceedings against the debtor, as the garnishee of the creditor, is a question appealing to the discretion of the lower court, and a court of error cannot revise its decision thereon.[79]

e. Not Authorized by Judgment.—If an execution should be issued not authorized by the judgment, the court, on motion, would set it aside or quash it.[80]

f. Dormancy of Judgment.—The issuing of an execution on a judgment after a year and a day without reviving the judgment may be sufficient ground for setting aside the execution.[81]

4. Appeal.—A judgment or order, quashing or, refusing to quash, an execution is not a final judgment to which a writ of error will lie.[82]

C. Injunction against Execution—1. Nature of Proceedings.—An injunction against an execution is a proceeding in due process of law.[83] Strictly speaking, at the common law, an injunction in equity does not operate as a supersedeas; although it may furnish a proper ground for the court of law, in which the judgment is rendered, to interfere by summary order to quash or stay the proceedings on the execution. If the injunction is disobeyed, a court of equity has its own mode of administering suitable redress. But a court of law is under no obligation to enforce it as a matter of right or duty.[84]

2. Grounds for Relief.—In ordinary cases of wrongful levy of an execution on property not subject thereto, the proper relief is by motion to have the levy discharged,[85] but in some cases there may be circumstances upon which equity may maintain jurisdiction and grant an equitable remedy,[86] as where there is no legal remedy,[87] the proceedings under the execution are contrary to equity and justice,[88] irreparable injury would result from the proceedings under the execution,[89] or where the judgment was wrongfully obtained,[90] the property is in custody of the law,[91] belongs to a public corporation,[92] is that of a third person,[93] or where stay or supersedeas has been granted,[94] or where proceedings are under Louisiana statute.[95] Where a judgment was confessed on

89. Irreparable injury.—Hence where a creditor of A. levied on goods, a miscellaneous stock in retail trade, suitable for the then current season, and intended to be paid for out of the sales—in the possession of B., a young man recently established in trade and doing a profitable business, alleging that they had been conveyed to B. by A. to defeat his creditors—the court, upon being satisfied that they had not been so conveyed, held that the execution had been rightly enjoined; that as at law the measure of damages, if the property were not sold, could not extend beyond the injury done to it, or, if sold, to the value of it, when taken, with interest from the time of the taking down to the trial—loss of trade, destruction of credit, and failure of business prospects—commercial ruin, in short—collateral or consequential damages, which might nevertheless ensue, would not be compensated for at law, but were properly prevented in equity. 93. Property belongs to third person.—Where a complainant filed a bill on the equity side of the circuit court, for an injunction to prevent the sale of slaves which had been taken in execution as the property of another person, the evidence shows that they were the property of the complainant, and the circuit court was directed to make the injunction perpetual. Amis v. Myers, 16 How. 492, 14 L. Ed. 1029.

A court has no jurisdiction to enjoin sale of a boat owned by a third person under execution against defendant. Plaintiff should resort to his legal remedy of trespass or replevin. Van Norden v. Morton, 99 U. S. 378, 380, 25 L. Ed. 453.

94. Supersedeas granted.—United States v. Dashiel, 3 Wall. 688, 702, 18 L. Ed. 268.

95. Proceedings under Louisiana statute.—Although the code of Louisiana provides for the issuance of an injunction, such provision is applicable to state courts agreement and such agreement violated, the issuance of an execution thereon may be enjoined.[96]

3. Who Entitled to Relief.—A person having no interest or title in land has no standing in a court of equity to ask that the levy and sale under execution be enjoined.[97] An injunction will not be granted to one of several co-defendants in pursuance to a secret agreement between such defendant and the plaintiff by which the property of such defendant was not to be subjected to the levy of the execution.[98]

4. Vacating Injunction.—A purchaser under a judicial sale having filed a bill and obtained an injunction upon the creditor to stay an execution, it was an irregular mode of raising the question of fraud for the creditor to file an answer setting it forth, and alleging the sale to be void upon that ground.[99]

VIII. Levy of Writ.

A. Statutory Provision.—The 34th section of the judiciary act of 1789, ch. 20, has no application to the practice of the court, or to the conduct of its officer, in the service of an execution. The 17th section would seem, both from the context and from the particular words which have been cited as applicable to this question, to be confined to business actually transacted in court, and not to contemplate proceedings out of court.[1]

B. Who May Make Levy.—The sheriff of the county, who has levied an execution upon a certain tract of land, has power to complete the process by sale of such land, although by subdivision of his county such land has been annexed to and become a part of another county.[2] If an execution should come to the hands of a sheriff to be executed, and his term of office expire before he executes it, he is bound nevertheless to complete the execution; and the same rule applies to a marshal.[3]

C. Mode and Sufficiency of Levy.—The modes of levying an execution must vary according to the property levied upon.[4] Lands cannot be seized as movable chattels may.[5] Actual manucaption cannot be taken of stocks and credits.

only and not to the United States courts. Van Norden v. Morton, 99 U. S. 378, 25 L. Ed. 453; New Orleans v. Louisiana Const. Co., 129 U. S. 45, 46, 32 L. Ed. 607.

99. Vacating injunction.—He should have filed a cross bill. Exceptions to the answer upon this account were properly sustained by the court below. Ford v. Douglas, 5 How. 143, 12 L. Ed. 89.

But if the court below should perpetuate the injunction, upon the defendants' refusal to answer further, the injunction should be free from doubt, in leaving the creditor to pursue other property under his judgment, and also at liberty to file a cross bill. If the injunction does not clearly reserve these rights to the creditor, it goes too far, and the judgment of the court below must be reversed. Ford v. Douglas, 5 How. 143, 12 L. Ed. 89.

1. Statutory provision.—Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 24, 6 L. Ed. 253.

"This act, so far as respects the writ, is plainly confined to form. But form, in this particular, it has been argued, has much of substance in it, because it consists of the language of the writ, which specifies precisely what the officer is to do. His duty is prescribed in the writ, and he has only to obey its mandate. This is certainly true, so far as respects the object to be accomplished, but not as respects the manner of accomplishing it. In a fi. fa., for example, the officer is commanded to make of the goods and chattels of A. B., the sum of money specified in the writ; and this sum must, of course, be made by a sale. But the time and manner of the sale, and the particular goods and chattels which are liable to the execution, unless, indeed, all are liable, are not prescribed." Cotenant's estate in land.—"The authorities are not entirely in harmony, as to whether a levy upon the interest of a cotenant in a specific part, designated by

Seizure may be either actual or constructive. It does not always involve taking into manual possession. Even in case of chattels movable, taking part of the goods in a house, under a fi. fa., in the name of the whole, is a good seizure of all. An assertion of control, with a present power and intent to exercise it, is sufficient.[6]

D. Time of Making Levy.—Property which has been seized under a fi. fa. before the return day thereof, may be sold afterwards.[7] By the common law, the writ of fieri facias had relation back of its teste, and if the execution was tested during the lifetime of a deceased defendant, it might be taken out and levied upon his goods and chattels after his death.[8]

E. Custody of Property—1. ACTUAL CUSTODY OF OFFICER.—After levying upon a leasehold interest it is not necessary for the officer to keep actual custody thereof to preserve the lien of the execution.[9]

2. CUSTODY OF DEFENDANT—a. In General.—It cannot be implied that a levy is incomplete, on account of the property having been left where it was when the levy was made, where it had been kept by one while he continued to be a receiver.[10] The act of permitting goods to remain in the custody of the defendant after levy of an execution, creates no presumption of fraud, and such levy has priority over another subsequent in time; but, if goods were so left with fraudulent intent, a subsequent levy takes priority.[11]

b. Under Forthcoming Bond.—This subject is treated elsewhere.[12]

3. CUSTODY OF THIRD PERSON.—"After a levy has been made with a fi. fa. upon goods and chattels, the officer may confide them to another person for safe-keeping, until there has been a settlement of the judgment and payment of all costs."[13]

F. Operation and Effect—1. ON PROPERTY.—The levy of fieri facias sequestrates the property to answer the exigencies of the writ,[14] takes it out of metes and bounds, of a certain larger quantity of land, is valid. In view of the other manifest irregularities, we do not feel called upon to express an opinion upon this point." Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 334, 342, 40 L. Ed. 721.

The lessee's interest in the fixtures arises out of the agreement contained in the lease, and of the manner and purpose of their annexation to the land, from which they could not be separated and removed without much labor and expense. It was not necessary that the officer should retain actual possession in order to keep alive a levy upon such property." Freeman v. Dawson, 110 U. S. 264, 271, 28 L. Ed. 141.

But the seizure of the goods of a third person, on the execution, does not change the title or make them the goods of the defendant on the execution. The only effect is, if after this the sheriff returns the execution nulla bona, the burden is thrown upon him in a suit for a false return to show that the goods were not the defendant's, and therefore not liable to the execution. Chapman v. Smith, 16 How. 114, 134, 14 L. Ed. 868.

the possession of the defendant,[15] and brings the plaintiff into privity therewith.[16]

2. On Judgment.—The general doctrine is that the levy of an execution upon personal property, sufficient to satisfy the execution, operates per se as an extinguishment of the judgment, but to this doctrine there are numerous exceptions,[17] as where the levy is upon real property,[18] or as where the levy has been abandoned at the request of the defendant.[19]

3. On Subsequent Proceedings.—All proceedings under an execution date from the levy thereof,[20] and the levy takes effect from the time it is made by seizure of the property,[21] and all subsequent proceedings in the due course and completion of the levy, for collecting the debt out of the property, have relation back to the time of the seizure.[22]

G. Duty and Liability of Officer.—This subject is treated elsewhere.[23]

IX. Return of Writ.

A. Indorsement.—A marshal may be authorized to make the indorsement,

16. And such plaintiff is then in position to attack the validity of a mortgage given by the debtor on such property. People's Savings Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 562, 30 L. Ed. 754.

17. Effect of levy on judgment.—There are many qualifications to the general rule as applied to the levy of an execution upon the goods of the judgment debtor, as might be illustrated and enforced by numerous decided cases. "Where the goods seized are taken out of the possession of the debtor, and they are sufficient to satisfy the execution, it is doubtless true, that if the marshal or sheriff wastes the goods, or they are lost or destroyed by the negligence or fault of the officer, or if he misapplies the proceeds of the sale, or retains the goods and does not return the execution, the debtor is discharged; but if the levy is overreached by a prior lien, or is abandoned at the request of the debtor or for his benefit, or is defeated by his misconduct, the levy is not a satisfaction of the judgment. Rightly understood, the presumption is only a prima facie one in any case, and the whole extent of the rule is that the judgment is satisfied when the execution has been so used as to change the title of the goods, or in some way to deprive the debtor of his property." Unted States v. Dashiel, 3 Wall. 688, 698, 18 L. Ed. 268.

18. "None of those cases, however, afford any support to the theory that any such effect will flow from the issuing of an execution, and the levying of the same upon land. On the contrary, the rule is well settled that in the latter case no such presumption arises, because the judgment debtor sustains no loss by the mere levy of the execution, and the creditor gains nothing beyond what he already had by the lien of his judgment. Reason given for the distinction is that the land in the case supposed remains in the possession of the defendant, and he continues to receive and enjoy the rents and profits." United States v. Dashiel, 3 Wall. 688, 698, 18 L. Ed. 268.

19. Levy of an execution, even if made on personal property sufficient to satisfy the execution, is not satisfaction of the judgment, and, accordingly, therefore, does not extinguish it if the levy have been abandoned at the request of the debtor and for his advantage. United States v. Dashiel, 3 Wall. 688, 18 L. Ed. 268.

If the writ of fi. fa. was levied by the marshal, upon the property in question, before the return day of the writ, it was lawful for him to sell the same, under and by virtue of said writ, and the facts respecting the said sale might be proved by parol. Wheaton v. Sexton, 4 Wheat. 503, 504, 4 L. Ed. 626.

"Whether the marshal sells, before or after the return, whether he makes a correct return, or any return at all, to the writ, is immaterial to the purchaser, provided the writ was duly issued, and the levy made before the return." Wheaton v. Sexton, 4 Wheat. 503, 506, 4 L. Ed. 626.

Proceedings in an execution relate back to the judgment for their force and effect. Evans v. Pike, 118 U. S. 241, 247, 30 L. Ed. 234.

When a levy is actually made on the land affected by the lien, the title of the creditor generally relates back to the time of the judgment, so as to cut out intermediate encumbrances. 23. Duty and liability of officer.—See after the regular return term, in cases when a sale was made afterwards.[24]

B. How Construed.—A return is to be considered as a whole.[25]

C. Conclusiveness.—The return is conclusive evidence of the question whether the proceeding by execution has proved an effectual remedy.[26] It cannot be questioned by the sureties on an appeal bond which operates as a supersedeas.[27] But where a sheriff's return to a fieri facias alleges that under a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage the sheriff seized the mortgaged premises, but does not purport to be signed by the sheriff, the return is traversable, and if the law requires an actual seizure, it may be shown that none was made.[28]

D. Remedy Where Return False.—If the return be false, the law furnishes to the injured party ample remedy.[29]

X. Control of Officer by Court.

This subject is treated elsewhere.[30]

XI. Lien and Priorities.

A. Lien—1. EFFECT OF STATE LAWS IN FEDERAL COURTS.—The lien of an execution in the federal courts arises under the state laws.[31]

2. COMMENCEMENT AND DURATION OF LIEN.—No specific lien arises by virtue of the execution alone.[32] But one case holds that executions are liens, both before and after the property is seized and taken into custody of the law by its officer.[33] In some states, the lien commences from the issuance and deliverance;[34]

The return shows whether or not the remedy by execution has proved effectual, and from the embarrassments which would attend any other rule, the return is held conclusive. Jones v. Green, 1 Wall. 330, 332, 17 L. Ed. 553.

The court will not entertain inquiries as to the diligence of the officer in endeavoring to find property upon which to levy. Jones v. Green, 1 Wall. 330, 332, 17 L. Ed. 553.

27. In making the return, the officer acts under a heavy official responsibility. "If false, he is liable to plaintiff and to defendant for any damages resulting from it. He must, therefore, be at liberty to make his own return, subject to that responsibility. Nor do we think his return can be questioned by the sureties. It is declared by the laws to be the appropriate evidence of the right to proceed against them. It is an official act. If they had desired him to exercise it otherwise than he did, they might, by showing him property, have possibly rendered him liable for a false return, and, by paying the debt, avail themselves of this liability. But we do not think that either the spirit of the statute or justice of the case permits an inquiry into the truth of the officer's return in the subsequent proceeding against the sureties. It is analogous to the return of nulla bona as the foundation of creditor's bill in chancery, which cannot be questioned." Smith v. Gaines, 93 U. S. 341, 343, 23 L. Ed. 901.

31. Lien—Arises from state law.—"The lien may be considered as a rule of property, and a rule of decision under the thirty-fourth section of the judiciary act of 1789. But the preparatory steps, by which the judgment is obtained and the lien established, depend upon the practice of the court; and that practice is settled by the federal courts, and not by the courts of the state." 34. But an execution returned is no lien on any property not levied on; and no new lien can be acquired, until a new execution is put into the hands of the sheriff. Any delay, then, by the assignee, enables the debtor to alien his property, in the interval, between judgment and the execution reaching the sheriff, as well as between the return of one and the lien acquired by a new execution. Bank v. Tyler, 4 Pet. 366, 7 L. Ed. 888.

in others, from the levy, of the execution.[35] By a fiction of law, the lien may commence prior to the actual rendition of judgment, in states where the judgment and the execution lien relate back to the first day of the term.[36] Upon equitable interests subject to execution, the lien dates from the filing of the bill.[37]

B. Priorities—1. BETWEEN EXECUTIONS—a. In General.—It is the execution first begun to be executed, unless otherwise regulated by statute, which is entitled to priority.[38] The filing of the bill, in cases of equitable execution, is the beginning of executing it.[39]

b. Issuing from Federal and State Courts.—No provision is made by the statutes of the state or United States for the determination of the priorities between the creditors of the respective courts, state and federal. They merely provide for the settlement of the priorities between creditors prosecuting their claims in the same jurisdiction.[40] In such a case the rule is, that whichever officer, the sheriff or the marshal, acquires possession of the property first by the levy of the execution, obtains a prior right, and a purchaser at a judicial sale will take the property free from all liens of the same description.[41]

2. BETWEEN EXECUTIONS AND OTHER LIENS.—A landlord having a lien for rent upon property brought on the premises, has priority over execution creditors, levying on such property thereafter, so long as the goods remain on the premises.[42] A mortgagee of a mortgage, given prior to the levy of an execu-

In Kentucky, the creditor obtains a lien upon the property of his debtor by the delivery of a fi. fa. to the sheriff; and this lien is as absolute before the levy as it is afterwards. Therefore, a creditor is not deprived of this lien by an act of bankruptcy on the part of the debtor committed before the levy is made, but after the execution is in the hands of the sheriff. Savage v. Best, 3 How. 111, 120, 11 L. Ed. 518; Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 612, 620, 12 L. Ed. 841.

36. It is said to be a legal absurdity to suppose that the lien of the execution can attach prior to the judgment. But the judgments entered on the last day of the term, by the law of Tennessee, have relation to the first day of the term, so as to place all the judgments entered at the term on an equality in regard to liens. This it is said is proper to do equal justice to creditors, whose judgments were necessarily entered on different days of the term, from the arrangement of the causes on the docket. But it is said, that a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration would limit the lien of the judgment and execution to the time the judgment was rendered. Clements v. Berry, 11 How. 398, 410, 13 L. Ed. 745.

If the first of three judgment creditors had levied a fi. fa. on the goods and chattels of the defendant, the second taken his body on a ca. sa., and the third laid his elegit on his land, having elected different remedies, each would be entitled to a precedence in that which he has elected. Although, by the state law, a lien upon property accrues from the delivery of the execution to the sheriff or marshal, and the rights of creditors claiming under the same jurisdiction are adjudged accordingly, yet the same rule does not apply where a controversy arises between executions issued by a court of the United States and a state court. tion, has priority over the execution creditor;[43] but not where the mortgage was not recorded, in states where recordation is required by statute.[44]

Loss of Priority.—The priority of another creditor over an execution creditor may be lost by laches.[45]

XII. Satisfaction and Discharge of Lien.

A. In General.—An execution is never completed until the money is made and paid over to the plaintiff, if it be practicable to make it.[46]

B. Sale on Credit.—An execution is not satisfied by a sale of land on credit.[47]

C. Payment—1. In Gold and Silver.—A marshal is not authorized by law to receive anything, in discharge of an execution, but gold and silver.[48] A plaintiff has no right to direct an officer to receive a certain description of money in satisfaction of an execution.[49]

2. In Depreciated Currency—Bank Notes—a. In General.—To permit either the debtor or the officer to impose upon the creditor the receipt of depreciated paper in payment, would be to permit not merely a repeal of the judgment, but a violation, a virtual abrogation indeed, of the contract on which it was founded.[50]

b. Authorization or Acceptance by Plaintiff.—If the plaintiff authorizes the marshal to take bank notes, of any description, in payment of the execution, a payment by the defendant to the marshal in such bank notes is a satisfaction of

Where specie contracted for.—An express contract, payable in gold or silver dollars, can only be satisfied by the payment of coined dollars, and cannot be discharged by notes of the United States declared to be a legal tender in payment of debts. Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. 687, 695, 20 L. Ed. 460. See, also, Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 71, 19 L. Ed. 101; Butler v. Horwitz, 7 Wall. 258, 19 L. Ed. 149.

50. Depreciated currency—Bank notes.—"None can fail to perceive the thousand devices for profit or favor which the toleration of such a practice would naturally call into action to defeat the rights of creditors. The courts of justice might thus be made to subserve only the purposes of dishonesty, and be transformed into engines of monstrous wrong." Griffin v. Thompson, 2 How. 244, 256, 11 L. Ed. 253.

The statutes of Kentucky concerning executions, which require the plaintiff to indorse on the execution, that bank notes of the Bank of Kentucky, or notes of the Bank of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, will be received in payment, and, on his refusal, authorize the defendant to give a replevin bond for the debt, payable in two years, are not applicable to executions issuing on judgments rendered by the courts of the United States. Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 253.

the execution;[51] for the creditor may receive either bank notes or blank paper in satisfaction of his debt, for the reason that his power over that debt is supreme, and he may release it without payment of any kind, if he think proper.[52]

c. In Action against Officer.—A marshal who receives bank notes in satisfaction of an execution, when the return has not been set aside at the instance of the plaintiff, or amended by the marshal himself, must account to the plaintiff in gold or silver; the constitution of the United States recognizing only gold and silver as a legal tender.[53]

D. Discharge.—An attorney has the power to accept payment and discharge an execution.[54]

XIII. Supplementary Proceedings.

A. Effect of State Law in Federal Courts.—A plaintiff who recovers a judgment in a common law cause in the United States court sitting in the state of New York is entitled to the remedy provided in that state as a proceeding supplementary to execution.[55]

B. Statutory Provision.—The New York act of June 1, 1872, ch. 255, was held to apply to proceedings supplementary to execution, to examine the judgment debtor in regard to his property, under a judgment rendered in a common law cause.[56]

C. Proceedings at Law.—The right of an execution creditor to proceed by action at law, against any person who interferes with the goods of his debtor so as to prevent a levy or sale thereon, is well recognized at common law.[57] The proceedings in garnishment in aid of execution, in the different states, have been adopted by act of congress as remedies for judgment creditors in the federal courts.[58]

The plaintiff's sanction may be either express or implied. Buckhannan v. Tinnin, 2 How. 258, 11 L. Ed. 259.

An interval of more than two years was permitted to elapse between the return and the motion to quash it. This fact alone, unassociated with and unexplained by any other, will of itself imply, at least on the part of the plaintiff, laches and negligence in the prosecution of his interests, if not an assent by him to the acts of the officer. Buckhannan v. Tinnin, 2 How. 258, 261, 11 L. Ed. 259.

There are two points of difference between this and the case of Thompson v. Griffin, et al. These two points arise, first, upon the time intervening between the return of the marshal and the plaintiff's motion, as tending to show an acquiescence by the plaintiff; and, secondly, upon the additional evidence in this case amounting to proof of approbation or sanction by the plaintiff, express or implied, of the conduct of the marshal. "The proceeding in aid of execution, in its present form in New York, as well as that in which it was administered under the Revised Statutes by the court of chancery, was a statutory process, and did not form any part of that jurisdiction in equity which, vested in the courts of the United States by the constitution, is assumed to be inalienable." of the jurisdiction in equity is merely to aid the legal right by removing obstacles in the way of its enforcement at law.[59]

2. Want of Legal Remedy.—Courts of equity will entertain suits in aid of executions at law only in cases where there is no remedy in the law courts.[60]

3. Appointment of Receiver.—Where there is a judgment at law, under which property was sold in execution, a court of equity has power to cause possession to be taken thereof, to appoint a receiver to collect the profits and pay them into court, to the end of discharging the judgment at law.[61]

XIV. Sale.

This subject is to be treated elsewhere.[62]

XV. Claims of Third Persons.

The equitable rights of persons, whose names do not appear in the execution, ought to be preserved;[63] and, if the statutes of the different states contain provisions regulating trials of the right of property in such cases, it is convenient to make them a part of the practice of the court as contemplated by §§ 914, 915, 916, of the Revised Statutes.[64]

60. Want of legal remedy.—Knox v. Smith, 4 How. 298, 11 L. Ed. 983.

"It follows, then, that although at one time courts of equity would entertain bills of discovery, in aid of executions at law, because courts of law were not armed with adequate powers to execute their own process, yet the moment those powers were sufficiently enlarged, by competent authority, to accomplish the same beneficial result, the jurisdiction in equity, if it did not cease as unwarranted, would, at least, become inoperative and obsolete." Nature of proceeding.—"The proceeding for the appointment of a receiver was not a new and independent suit. It was not in the strictest sense of the term a creditor's bill. It did not purport to be for the benefit of all creditors, but simply a proceeding to enable the plaintiff in the judgment to obtain satisfaction thereof, satisfaction by execution at law having been shown to be impossible by the return of nulla bona. It is what is known as a supplementary proceeding, one known to the jurisprudence of many states, and one whose validity in those states has been recognized by this court." Executive duties.—"Stress is laid upon the words executive duties, as though the approval of the evidence of settlement and improvement (by the register and receiver under the pre-emption laws) was not an executive duty but a purely judicial act. This is a mistake. True, it involves the weighing of testimony and the exercise of judgment, but equally so do many administrative acts. * * * Any determination of a ministerial officer may by statute be declared final and conclusive, but such finality does not change its character and transform it from an executive to a judicial act. The approval of the evidence offered in respect to settlement and improvement is only quasijudicial. It is as much an administrative as a judicial act. * * * It is only one step in the procedure by which, through an executive department, the title to public land is obtained by an individual." I. Definition and Status of Personal Representatives.

An executor is one appointed by a testator to carry out the directions and requests in his will, and to dispose of the property according to his testamentary provision after his decease. An administrator, in the most usual sense of the word, is a person to whom letters of administration, that is, an authority to administer the estate of a deceased person, having been granted by the proper court. He resembles an executor, but, being appointed by the court, and not by the deceased, he has to give security for the due administration of the estate, by entering into a bond with sureties, called the administrator's bond.[1] The primary and ordinary meaning of the words "representatives," or "legal representatives," or "personal representatives," when there is nothing in the context to control their meaning, is "executors or administrators," they being the representatives constituted by the proper court.[2] An administrator appointed by a state court is an officer of that court.[3] An executor or administrator is in equity a trustee for heirs, legatees and creditors.[4] The executor is no more than the testator's representative in all things lawful in the will.[5] In the theory of the law the executor continues the persona of the testator, and therefore is a different person from the natural man who fills the office.[6]

II. Jurisdiction over Administration Generally.

In this country, there are special courts established in some of the states, having jurisdiction over estates of deceased persons, called probate courts, orphans' courts, or surrogate courts, possessing, with respect to personal assets, nearly all the powers formerly exercised by the court of chancery and the ecclesiastical courts in England. They are authorized to collect the assets of the deceased, to allow claims, to direct their payment and the distribution of the property to legatees or other parties entitled, and generally to do everything essential to the final settlement of the affairs of the deceased, and the claims of creditors against his estate.[7] The several states of the Union necessarily have full control over the estates of deceased persons within their respective limits.[8] The federal courts have no original jurisdiction in respect to the administration of an estate of a deceased person, and they cannot by entertaining jurisdiction of a suit against the administrator draw to themselves the full possession of the estate, or the power of determining all claims against or to it.[9]

III. Necessity for Administration.

It is not within the power of the testator to defeat the provisions and the policy of the testamentary law of the state, by bequeathing personal property to a trustee, without the intervention of an executor.[10] The general rule is that any act done by an executor by way of disposing of the property are invalid, unless he takes out letters testamentary, or is appointed executor by an order of the court of probate, equivalent to the issue of such letters.[11] And it is within the power of creditors to compel an administration to be taken upon an estate, by application to a court of probate.[12] The laws of some states have provided that the heirs of a decedent become seized and possessed of his whole estate, both real and personal, immediately upon his death, subject only to their right to renounce said succession, or to the right of creditors to require an administration thereof in case of nonaction by the heirs. Such renunciation is not presumed, but must be made by formal act before a notary, but such acceptance may be evidenced by any act of the heirs indicating their intention to exercise ownership over the ancestor's property, and is always presumed unless the contrary appear. After an acceptance by the heirs or any of them of the succession of their ancestor, no administrator can lawfully be appointed to administer thereon.[13]

IV. Appointment and Tenure of Office.

A. Appointment—1. JURISDICTION TO GRANT ADMINISTRATION—a. General Consideration.—In this country the general rule is that administration may be granted in any state or territory where unadministered personal property of a deceased person is found,[14] or real property subject to the claim of any creditor of the deceased;[15] that the proper place for the principal administration is the domicile of such deceased.[16] To give jurisdiction, a case, in which, by law, letters of administration may issue, must appear.[17]

If a testator were to appoint no executor, or direct that the estate should go immediately into the hands of legatees or of one or more trustees for particular purposes, such direction would be nugatory and void."

17. In Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch 9, 23, 3 L. Ed. 471, the court said: "To give the ordinary jurisdiction, a case, in which, by law, letters of administration may issue, must be brought before him. In the common case of intestacy, it is clear that letters of administration must be granted to some person by the ordinary; and though they should be granted to one not entitled by law, still the act is binding, until annulled by the competent authority; because he had power to grant letters of administration in the case. But suppose administration to be granted on the estate of a person not really dead. The act, all will admit, is totally void. Yet, the ordinary must always inquire and decide whether the person whose estate is to be committed to the care of others, be dead or in life. It is a branch of every cause in which letters of administration issue. Yet the decision of the ordinary that the

b. Death as a Jurisdictional Prerequisite.—The absolute nullity of administration granted upon the estate of a living person has been directly adjudged or distinctly recognized in many courts.[18]

c. Administration on Estates of Absentees.—The right to regulate concerning the estate or property of absentees is an attribute, which, in its very essence, must belong to all governments, to the end that they may be able to perform the purposes for which government exists.[19] But if a state law, in providing for the administration of the estate of an absentee, contains no adequate safeguards concerning property, and amounts therefore simply to authorizing the person on whose estate he acts is dead, if the fact be otherwise, does not invest the person he may appoint with the character or powers of an administrator. The case, in truth, was not one within his jurisdiction; it was not one in which he had a right to deliberate; it was not committed to him by the law. And although one of the points occurs, in all cases proper for his tribunal, yet that point cannot bring the subject within his jurisdiction. The case of letters of administration granted on the estate of a person in full life, is not the only one which may serve for illustration; suppose, administration to be granted on the estate of a deceased person, whose executor is present, in the constant performance of his executorial duties. Is such an appointment void, or is it only voidable? In the opinion of the court, it would be an absolute nullity." Quoted in Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 40, 38 L. Ed. 896, which cited Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 238, 243, 23 L. Ed. 314. See post, "Death as Jurisdictional Prerequisite," IV, A, 1, b; "Validity of Letters as Affected by Existence of Executor," IV, A, 1, d.

18. Death as a jurisdictional prerequisite.—Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 43, 38 L. Ed. 896; Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 267, 40 L. Ed. 691; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch 9, 23, 3 L. Ed. 471; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 47 L. Ed. 366; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 319, 339, 11 L. Ed. 283. Dissenting opinion of Brewer and Peckham, JJ., in United States v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 276, 49 L. Ed. 1040. See post, "Administration on Estates of Absentees," IV, A, 1, c.

"The estate of a person supposed to be dead is not seized or taken into the custody of the court of probate upon the filing of a petition for administration; but only after and under the order granting that petition; and the adjudication of that court is not upon the question whether he is living or dead, but only upon the question whether and to whom letters of administration shall issue." Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 47, 38 L. Ed. 896, citing Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 238, 243, 23 L. Ed. 314.

19. Right to regulate concerning estates of absentees.—Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 469, 49 L. Ed. 1125.

There is a distinction between the want of power in a state to administer the property of a person who is alive, under its general authority to provide for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and the power of the state to provide for the administration of the estates of persons who are absent for an unreasonable time, and to enact reasonable regulations on that subject. Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 475, 49 L. Ed. 1125.

In the case of Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. Ed. 896, a probate court in the state of Washington had issued letters of administration upon the estate of a person who had disappeared, and proceeded to administer his estate as that of a dead person upon the presumption of death, which the court assumed had arisen from his absence. There was no statute of the state of Washington providing for an administration of the estate of an absentee as such, and creating rights and safeguards applicable to that situation, as distinct from the general law of the state, conferring upon courts of probate power to administer the estates of deceased persons. Referring to the presumption under the law of England of death arising from absence, it was held that such presumption was not conclusive, and was absolutely rebutted by proof that the person who was presumed from the fact of absence to be dead, was in fact, alive. Having established this proposition, it was then held, as death was essential to confer jurisdiction on a probate court to administer an estate as such, the fact of life at the time the administration was initiated conclusively rebutted the presumption and caused the court to be wholly without jurisdiction to administer the estate of a person who was alive. Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 472, 49 L. Ed. 1125. See, also, dissenting opinion in United States v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 276, 49 L. Ed. 1040.

"The opinion, however, in Scott v. McNeal, was not intended to and did not imply that the states were wholly devoid of power to endow their courts with jurisdiction under proper conditions to administer upon the estates of absentees, even though they might be alive, by special and appropriate proceedings applicable to that condition as distinct from the general power to administer the es-transfer of the property of the absentee to others, such a law would be repugnant to the fourteenth amendment.[20]

d. Validity of Letters as Affected by Existence of Executor.—Where there is an executor, not disqualified by law, or who has not been excluded from acting, in conformity to law, a grant of administration is void.[21] But, in the case of an absent executor who has not yet made probate of the will and qualified, those letters testamentary which are indispensable to his character as executor, and which, during their existence, leave the ordinary without any further power over the subject, are not yet granted. The executor has as yet no evidence that he is executor; he is not yet able to act as one. He may never be able to act; for he may never take out letters testamentary; he may renounce the executorship. The ordinary, then, is not yet deprived of that power which he possesses to appoint a person to represent a dead man who has no representative. His jurisdiction over the subject remains, until he parts with it, by issuing letters testamentary.[22]

e. Where Administrator First Appointed Refuses to Act.—The question as to the appointment of a second administrator upon the resignation of the one first appointed, will be found treated elsewhere under this title.[23]

tates of deceased persons." Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 473, 49 L. Ed. 1125.

20. Requisites of laws relative to estates of absentees.—Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 477, 49 L. Ed. 1125.

Thus, a state law which did not provide adequate notice as prerequisite to the proceedings for the administration of the estate of an absentee, would also be repugnant to the fourteenth amendment. Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 477, 49 L. Ed. 1125.

Likewise the creation by a state law of an arbitrary and unreasonable presumption of death resulting from absence for a brief period, would be a want of due process of law, and therefore repugnant to the fourteenth amendment. Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 476, 49 L. Ed. 1125.

In substance the Pennsylvania statute of 1885, Public Laws, 155, is a special proceeding for the administration of the estates of absentees distinct from the general law of that state providing for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and as by the express terms of the statute jurisdiction was conferred upon the proper court to grant the administration, and the period of absence provided by the statute cannot be said to be unreasonable, and the notices which it directs to be issued were reasonable, it follows that it does not deprive absentees of due process of law within the intendment of the fourteenth amendment even though it should prove that the absentee in a particular case is alive and not dead. Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458, 476, 49 L. Ed. 1125.

21. Validity as affected by existence of executor.—Kane v. Paul, 14 Pet. 33, 40, 10 L. Ed. 341; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch 9, 3 L. Ed. 471.

In Kane v. Paul, 14 Pet. 33, 39, 10 L. Ed. 341, the court said: "In Com. Dig. Adm. B. 1, it is said, if there be an executor, and administration be granted before probate and refusal, it shall be void, on the will being afterwards proved; although the will were suppressed, or its existence were unknown, or it were dubious who was executor, or he were concealed or abroad, at the time of granting the administration. So, in Com. Dig. B. 2, B. 10, if there be two executors, one of whom proves the will and the other refuses, and he who proves the will dies, and administration is granted, before the refusal of the survivor, subsequently to the death of his coexecutor, or if granted before the refusal of the executor, although he afterwards refuse, such administration shall be void. In all these cases, the administration is a mere nullity."

"The cases in which administration has been granted, notwithstanding the existence of a will, appear to be cases in which it is not apparent that there is any person possessing right in the chattels of the testator, or cases in which that person is legally disqualified from acting. Where administration is granted, pending a dispute respecting a will, it is not certain that there is an executor, or that there is a will. If it be granted during the minority of an executor, it is because the executor is legally disqualified from acting, and indeed, has not taken upon himself, and could not take upon himself, the trust reposed in him. He may, when of age, reject all the rights and powers conferred by the will; and consequently, the interest is not yet a vested interest. The rights and powers of the ordinary remain, until those of the executor commence." Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cranch 9, 25, 3 L. Ed. 471.

23. Where administrator first appointed refuses to act.—See post, "Administrators

f. Limited Administration.—As to limited or special administration, see post, "Limited and Special Executors or Administrators," X.

g. Situs of Assets.—The general rule of law is well settled, that for the purpose of founding administration all simple contract debts are assets at the domicile of the debtor;[24] and that the locality of such a debt for this purpose is not affected by a bill of exchange or promissory note having been given for it, because the bill or note does not alter the nature of the debt, but is merely evidence of it, and therefore the debt is assets where the debtor lives without regard to the place where the instrument is found or payable.[25] But the debts due from the government of the United States have no locality at the seat of government. The United States, in their sovereign capacity, have no particular place of domicile, but possess, in contemplation of law, an ubiquity throughout the Union; and the debts due by them are not to be treated like the debts of a private debtor, which constitute local assets in his own domicile. On the contrary, the administrator of a creditor of the government, duly appointed in the state where he was domiciled at the time of his death, has full authority to receive payment and give a full discharge of the debt due to his intestate, in any place where the government may choose to pay it, whether it be at the seat of government or at any other place where the public funds are deposited; and the moneys so received constitute assets under that administration, for which he was accountable to the proper tribunals of the state where he was appointed.[26] However, debts cannot be assets at the domicile of the debtor if their locality is fixed at the domicile of the creditor.[28]

2. Notice of Proceedings to Obtain Letters.—Certain notices may be, and usually are, required to be given of the proceedings to obtain letters.[28]

3. Time of Granting Administration.—Where there is no statutory limitation of the period within which an original administration may be granted, a grant of administration, although made after the lapse of a number of years, must be considered as valid.[29] Under a statute which permits the appointment of an administrator to be made only after an inventory of the estate is ordered, the statute is complied with where the court directs an inventory and appoints an administrator in the same order, though the inventory be filed on the following day.[30]

24. Situs for purpose of administration.—Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. Ed. 1068; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 43 L. Ed. 1144; New England Mut. Life Ins. Ed. 639; United States v. Borcherling, 185 U. S. 223, 46 L. Ed. 884.

The general rule is that simple contract debts, such as a policy of insurance not under seal, are, for the purpose of founding administration, assets where the debtor resides, without regard to the place where the policy is found. New England Mut. Life Ins. Co v. Woodworth, 111 U. S. 138, 145, 28 L. Ed. 379, citing Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 654, 27 L. Ed. 1068.

Where a foreign insurance company was doing business in another state, and had an attorney there for service of process, it was held that the corporation had a domicile in that state, in the sense of the rule that a debt on a policy was assets at its domicile, so as to uphold the grant of letters of administration. New England Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Woodworth, 111 U. S. 138, 145, 28 L. Ed. 379.

27. Where debts are fixed at domicile of creditor.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 714, 43 L. Ed. 1144, in which case the court said: "If the policy of the state of the debtor can protect home creditors through administration proceedings, the same policy can protect home creditors through attachment proceedings."

4. Who May Be Executor or Administrator.—Different states have different provisions as to who may be executor or administrator, excluding some persons and preferring others, in the order and manner in their statutes specified. Thus persons convicted of infamous crime are excluded from this office, and persons of notoriously evil lives may be passed by in the discretion of the probate court. Sons or daughters or widows are entitled to take in preference to others; unmarried women are entitled in preference to married women.[31] If the next of kin decline the office, it is competent for the court to appoint any other suitable person.[32] Statutes provide that the husband has a right to administration on the property of his wife, if she had property in the state.[33] Some states do not permit nonresidents to take out letters of administration of the effect of deceased person within the state.[34] In some jurisdictions a public administrator is provided for and to him the administration of the estates of nonresident intestates must be granted.[35]

5. Effect of Appointment.—The letters issued to an executor or an administrator by a probate court are, as a general rule, evidence only of their own existence. They prove, that is to say, that the authority incident to that office or duty has been devolved upon the person therein named, that he has been appointed, and that he is executor or administrator of the party therein assumed to have departed this life, and the letters are the evidence that the proceedings have been regularly taken, and that the person or persons therein named are those by law entitled to the office. Upon these points the court has adjudicated. No proof to the contrary can be admitted, in an action brought by the executor as such. Parties wishing to contest that point must do it before the probate court at the time application is made for the letters, or upon subsequent application, as the case may require.[36] The bare appointment of an executor or ad-

36. Effect of appointment.—Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 238, 243, 23 L. Ed. 314.

An order granting letters of administration is a judicial determination of the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 451, 34 L. Ed. 1054.

A decision as to the proper persons to whom letters of administration should be granted, however irregular, cannot be impeached collaterally. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 452, 34 L. Ed. 1054, citing Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 403, 18 L. Ed. 34; McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 352, 363, 21 L. Ed. 341.

An order of a court of probate, appointing an executor, may not be subject to be impeached collaterally, by showing that he did not in fact qualify. Wall v. Bissell, 125 U. S. 382, 390, 31 L. Ed. 772.

A grant of letters of administration by a court having sole and exclusive power of granting them, and which by statute is obliged to grant them "to the relatives of the deceased, who would be entitled to succeed to his personal estate," is conclusive in other courts on a question of legitimacy; the grant having been made on an issue raised on the question of legitimacy alone, and there having been no question of minority, bad habits, alienage, or other disqualification simply personal. Held, accordingly, after a grant under such circumstances, that the legitimacy could not be gone into by the complainants on a bill for distribution by the persons who had opposed the grant of letters, against the person to whom they had been granted; but on the contrary, that the complainants were estopped on that subject. Caujolle v. Ferrie, 13 Wall. 465, 20 L. Ed. 507.

Where a statute of Illinois enacted that "in all cases where an intestate shall have been a nonresident or without a widow, etc., but having property in the state, administration should be granted to the public administrator of the proper county, and to no one else;" held, that where a person to whom letters of administration ministrator cannot be held on principle or authority, to foreclose inquiry into the fact of the domicile of the decedent in the courts of another sovereignty.[37] An appointment as executor of a will does not cancel a debt due from the testator.[38] Though an appointment as executor does not cancel a debt due from the testator, the executor is precluded from bringing an action at law for the same, as he would be plaintiff in his own right and defendant as executor of the will.[39] Where one gave a receipt before an administrator had been appointed and was afterwards himself appointed administrator, it was held that such receipt would not preclude him from recovering as administrator.[40] If the creditor appoints the debtor his executor, in some cases, it operates as a release; this, however, is not the case, as against creditors, the release is good against devisees, when the debt due has not been specifically bequeathed.[41]

B. Termination of Office—1. Appearance of Executor.—The appearance of an executor, with proof of the will and letters testamentary, subsequently to the grant of letters of administration, in a case where it was supposed there was no will, is of itself a revocation of the latter.[42]

2. By Arrival of Infant Executor at Majority.—Where an administrator holds during the minority of an executor, the powers of such administrator are determined when the executor has attained his full age.[43]

3. By Appointment of Military Governor.—Where the president, at the close of hostilities, appointed a military governor of one of the states, the people whereof had been at war against the United States, it was held, that such appointment did not change the general laws of the state then in force for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, nor remove from office those who were at the time charged by law with public duties in that behalf.[44]

4. Resignation.—Where an administrator had been appointed, and after giving the required bonds informed the court that he was unable to act, and resigned the appointment, not having taken possession of the property of the intestate, or attempted to exercise any control over it, it was competent for the court to accept the resignation, and to appoint a new administrator. The power to accept the resignation and to make the second appointment, under these circumstances, were incidents of the power to make the first.[45]

5. Jurisdiction to Recall or Annul Letters.—Letters testamentary, when once granted, are not revocable by the ordinary. He cannot annul them, or transfer the legal interest of the executor to any other person. His rights and his duties are beyond the reach of the ordinary.[46] Nor will a court of equity entertain jurisdiction to set aside the granting of letters of administration, on the ground of fraud, mistake or forgery.[47] But it is held that courts of probate may for cause recall or annull testamentary letters.[48]

6. Parties to Procedure for Removal.—Where an executor has employed counsel to oppose the application for his removal and the counsel appears for him, such executor is a party to the proceedings for removal.[49]

7. Effect of Removal.—By removal from office the executor is completely separated from the business of the estate.[50]

V. Assets.

A. General Rule as to What Constitutes.—Whatever property or money is lawfully received by an executor or administrator, after the death of his testator or intestate, in virtue of his representative character, he holds as assets of the estate.[51]

B. Character of Assets—1. Legal or Equitable.—In some jurisdictions moneys arising from the sale of personal property are designated as legal assets, in the hands of the executor or administrator; and such as arise from the sale of real property are denominated equitable assets.[52] And the funds realized from a sale, in equity, partake of the same character and are subject to the same rule as the property which they represent.[53]

2. Where Property Is to Be Converted.—See the title Conversion and Reconversion, vol. 4, p. 599.

C. Power of Appointment.—Where a person has a general power of appointment, either by deed or by will, and executes this power, the property appointed is deemed, in equity, part of his assets, and subject to the demands of his creditors in preference to the claims of his voluntary appointees or legatees.[54]

D. Effect of Mingling Assets of Estate with Funds of Representative.—When assets have been turned into money by an executor or administrator and the money mingled with his own, the assets have ceased to exist as assets or estate of the decedent.[55]

E. Rights under Contracts.—The rights under a contract made by a deceased with a railroad company for construction work along the line of the railroad become assets of the estate,[56] and this is true where others have taken possession of the contract and made themselves in law trustees of the profits they have realized by its performance. As such trustees they must account to the personal representative of the estate and not to the heirs.[57]

F. Interest in Insurance Policy.—As to the interest in insurance policies as constituting assets, see the title Insurance.

54. Power of appointment.—Brandies v. Cochrane, 112 U. S. 344, 352, 28 L. Ed. 760, wherein it is said: "This rule is stated by Mr. Justice Gray in Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200, to have had its origin, perhaps, in a decree of Lord Somers, affirmed by the House of Lords, in a case in which the person executing the power had, in effect, reserved the power to himself in granting away the estate. Thompson v. Towne, Prec. Ch. 52; S. C., 2 Vern. 319. But it was frequently afterwards applied to cases of the execution of a general power of appointment by will, of property of which the donee had never any ownership or control during his life. and one of the obligees died, it was held that, at law, the surviving obligee was entitled to the joint securities, and for the interposition of a court of equity a ground must be laid.[58]

I. Rights in Funds Arising from Treaties.—Where a treaty has been made recognizing a right to compensation to certain aggrieved parties, if a party injured has died before or after the treaty was made; and compensation has been subsequently decreed, it would be assets, and distributable as such, in the hands of his executors and administrators.[59]

J. Donation by Government for Services of Deceased.—A gift or donation by the government to the heirs as a reward for voluntary services rendered by the deceased, will not constitute assets in their hands for the payment of creditors.[60]

K. Payment by Government for Property Seized.—But where the manifest purpose of the government is not to confer a bounty or gratuity upon any one; but to provide for the ascertainment and payment of a debt due from it to a loyal citizen for property of his, taken by the government and to enable his executor to recover, as part of his estate, proceeds received by the government from the sale of that property; the fund recoverable does constitute assets of the estate.[61]

L. Reversions.—All the authorities, ancient and modern, agree that reversion after an estate for life is assets, or, as some of the books express it, quasi assets, in the hands of the heir, in regard to the bond of the ancestor, binding heirs.[62]

M. Goods of Principal Sold in Name of Factor.—In the case of a factor who sells the goods of his principal in his own name, upon a credit, and dies before the money is received, if it is afterwards paid to the administrator, in his representative character, the creditor would be entitled to consider it as assets in his hands; and to charge him in the same character in which he received it.[63]

N. Money Recovered on Administration Bonds.—As to money recovered on an administration bond as constituting assets of the estate, see post, "Payment into Court of Money Recovered on Bond," VII, J.

O. Situs of Assets.—The discussion of the situs of assets will be found elsewhere in this article.[64]

P. General Rule as to Real Property Interests.—The general rule is that the real estate of intestates stands chargeable with the payment of their debts, upon a deficiency of assets.[65]

59. Rights in funds arising from treaties.—Comegys v. Vasse, 1 Pet. 193, 217, 7 L. Ed. 108.

60. Donation of government for services of deceased.—In Emerson v. Hall, 13 Pet. 408, 409, 10 L. Ed. 223, money paid by the United States to the heirs at law, as "the legal representatives of William Emerson," under the act of March 3, 1831, c. 102, 6 Stat. 464, was held not to be assets in their hands for the payment of his creditors, the act, in its title, was expressed to be "for the relief of the heirs of William Emerson, deceased;" and it granted the money as a reward for services, meritorious indeed, but voluntarily rendered by Emerson, not under any law or contract, and imposing no obligation, legal or equitable, upon the government to compensate him therefor; and the money was therefore held to have been received by his heirs as a gift or pure donation. Briggs v. Walker, 171 U. S. 466, 472, 43 L. Ed. 243. See, also, Price v. Forrest, 173 U. S. 410, 429, 43 L. Ed. 749.

S. Property under Contract for Sale.—Where the executor only gives bonds for a deed, title not to be given until the purchase money is all paid, and that is not done and no title conveyed, the land yet remains subject to be applied to the payment of debts.[67]

T. Term of Years.—See post, "Terms of Years," VI, C, 4.

U. Property Mortgaged.—Where property is encumbered by a mortgage, upon the death of the mortgagee, the debts secured by the mortgage will be assets in the hands of his executor, and although the technical legal estate may descend to his heir, it must be used only for the purpose of obtaining satisfaction of the debt, the heir being merely a trustee for the executor.[67a]

VI. Rights, Duties and Liabilities.

A. Derivation of Powers.—An administrator derives his power over the estate of his intestate from the grant of the administration;[68] while the executor derives his power from the will of his testator.[69]

On the hearing of the case of Boyce v. Grundy, at January term, 1830, on appeal from the decree of the circuit court of West Tennessee, 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. Ed. 655, the decree of the circuit court was affirmed; by which, after decreeing a rescission of a contract made between Felix Grundy and James Boyce, the intestate, for the purchase, by the former from the latter, of a tract of land lying in the state of Mississippi, the court also decreed, that Robert Boyce, the administrator of James Boyce, of the goods, etc., of James Boyce, deceased, do pay the sum of $2,065.21, to be levied on the goods of the said James Boyce, in his hands to be administered; and execution issue therefor as at law; in this decree, nothing was said as to any allowance of damages or interest. A mandate was issued in the usual form, to the circuit court, to carry the same into effect; on filing the mandate in the circuit court, in 1830, the cause was referred to the clerk, as master, to take an account of the assets of James Boyce, in the hands of the administrator; who reported, that no assets appeared in the hands of the administrator, but that Robert Boyce had, under an agreement with the appellee, received for rents of the land in Mississippi, before the 1st of January, 1824, $2,100, which, with interest thereon, $1,120, to the 1st of September, 1830, would amount to $3,220; and that the land in Mississippi was devised by James Boyce, to his son, Robert Boyce. The report was confirmed, except as to the $1,120 interest; the circuit court decreed that the plaintiff recover of Robert Boyce $2,100, with interest from the decree; to be levied on his proper goods and chattels; and for the balance due the plaintiff, $496.46, with interest, in case the same was not paid by him; the plaintiff had for the whole amount of the decree, a lien on the lands in the state of Mississippi; and that the same should be sold to satisfy the same, by the clerk of the court, acting as a commissioner. Held, that the sum of $2,100, the rents of the lands in Mississippi, came into the hands of Robert Boyce, as assets of the estate of James Boyce. Boyce v. Grundy, 9 Pet. 275, 9 L. Ed. 127.

B. Extent of Authority Generally.[70]—The responsibilities of personal representatives as to the manner of settling the estate which they represent, depend upon the law of the state.[71] The administrator coming into such possession by succession to the intestate, and encumbered with the duty to pay his debts, is considered in law as in privacy with him.[72] Yet his representation of his intestate is a qualified one, and extends not beyond the assets of which the court granting the administration has jurisdiction.[73] The executor can do no valid act beyond his authority as conferred by the terms of the will.[74] But courts, in carrying out the wishes of testators, are much inclined, especially in equity, to vest all the power or interest in executors which are necessary to effectuate those wishes, if the language can fairly admit it.[75] They are inclined, also, when considering it a trust, or a power coupled with an interest, to have its duration and quantity commensurate with the object to be accomplished.[76] Where the will contains express directions what the executors are to do, an executor who proves the will must do all which he is directed to do as executor, and he cannot say that though executor he is not clothed with any of those trusts. Proving the will is an acceptance of the trust. Where a trust is created by a will and no trustee appointed, the executor is bound to act as such trustee.[77]

C. Title and Possession—1. General Rules as to Extent of Interest.—The interest of an executor in the testator's estate is what the testator gives him; that of an administrator, only that which the law of his appointment enjoins.[78] The general rule is that the appointment of an executor vests the whole personal estate in the person so appointed. He holds as trustee for the purposes of the will, but he holds the legal title in all the chattels of the testator. He is, for the purpose of administering them, as much the legal proprietor of those chattels as was the testator himself while alive.[79] He has not, ordinarily, any power over the real estate.[80] An original administrator with letters taken out at the place of the domicile, is invested with title to all personal property of the deceased for the purpose of collecting the effects of the estate, paying the debts, and making distribution of the residue according to the law of the place, or directions of the will, as the case may be.[81] As a general rule the administrator has no estate in the land, but a power to sell.[82] But by statute in some jurisdictions the administrator is given control over the real estate as well as the personal property.[83] The title of coexecutors, coadministrators, administrators de bonis non and foreign executors and administrators will be found treated elsewhere in this article.[84] The interest of a personal representative in the estate is that of a trustee,[85] unaffected by any disposition which a single creditor may make of

As said by Mr. Chief Justice Shaw, delivering the opinion of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts: "It is an established rule of law, that all the personal property of the testator vests in the executors for some purposes, before probate of the will; but to all intents and purposes, upon its probate. This they take not merely as donees, by force of the gift, as inter vivos, but by operation of the rules of law controlling, regulating and giving effect to wills." Wall v. Bissell, 125 U. It was provided in the Louisiana civil code that a testator may give the seisin of the whole or of a part of his estate to his executor, accordingly as he may express himself. The seisin usually continues for a year and a day, but may be prolonged by an act of the court, and may be terminated whenever the heirs shall deliver to the executor a sum sufficient to pay the movable legacies. The seisin of the executor is distinct from and paramount to the seisin which the law vested in the heir immediately on the death of his ancestor, and the heir can only deprive the executor of it by providing security for the performance of his obligations. The executor represented the reception, in so far as respects creditors and legatee. Flowers v. Foreman, 23 How. 132, 148, 16 L. Ed. 405.

There attaches by operation of law to any executor, a trust to pay the debts of the estate and then to deliver over the re-his debt against the estate, or the sale or other disposition which an individual devisee may make of his individual interest in the estate.[86]

2. Time of Vesting.—The title of an executor in the personal property of his testator, being derived from the will, doubtless vests in him from the moment of the testator's death. At common law, he might, before proving the will in the probate court, not only take possession of the property, but sell or dispose of it, pay debts of the estate, receive or release debts owing to it, bring actions for property which was in the testator's actual possession, and do almost any other acts incident to his office, except that he could not maintain any other actions without producing a copy of the probate and letters testamentary at the trial.[87] And it has been said that the title of an administrator, though it does not exist until the grant of administration, relates back to the time of the death of the intestate; and that he may recover against a wrongdoer who has seized or converted the goods of the intestate after his death, in an action of trespass or trover.[88]

3. Effect of Marriage of Executor to Devisee.—Where a testator devises certain property to his infant daughter, to be delivered over to her when she should arrive at a stated age, and the daughter, before attaining that age marries the executor who has the principal management of the estate, and possession of the property devised, he must be considered as holding it as executor, and not as husband.[89]

4. Terms of Years.—Terms of years belonging to a testator or intestate vest in his executor or administrator without an entry, for the reason that in contemplation of law such interests are chattels.[90]

5. Devise in Trust.—A devise in trust for a term vests the legal title in the executors until a division is made in one form or another.[91]

86. Effect of disposition of interests by individuals.—Allen v. Gillette, 127 U. S. 589, 595, 32 L. Ed. 271, wherein the court said: "Respecting these creditors or devisees in their separate and individual capacity, he is not the representative or guardian of their person or property, and can exercise no legal control over either. The disposition which a single creditor may make of his debt against the estate, or the sale or other disposition which an individual devisee may make of his individual interest in said estate, cannot interfere with the executor's control of the estate for the payment of the debts of the creditors, on the one hand, or for its ultimate partition among the devisees, on the other; and both are, therefore, matters entirely outside of his trust and his office."

6. Divesting of Title.—The executor's title cannot be divested or impaired by the unauthorized acts of the executor,[92] or by decree of any other court.[93] The legal title in the real estate, which has once vested in the executors cannot be divested without a conveyance, or a decree of a court of chancery, or an appointment by the court of probate of new executors and trustees in accordance with the will.[94] The administrator's possession being the possession of the court, it is a possession which cannot be disturbed by any other court.[95]

D. Degree of Care Required.—The personal representative is chargeable with the utmost good faith in dealing with the estate entrusted to him.[96] As a general rule the personal representative, in the management of the estate must do, what, under the circumstances and situation, prudent men, managing their own estates, would do.[97] A public administrator by the mere acceptance of his office does not place himself in any fiduciary relation to the holders of notes which were prescribed by lapse of time sixteen months before he was appointed, and where the record shows an erased mortgage, he is under no official duty to inquire whether the erasure is a proper one or not.[98]

E. Discretionary Powers.—The executor who takes charge of the affairs of a man in trade must, necessarily, on the winding up of his affairs be allowed a reasonable latitude of discretion; and in general, where there is manifest fidelity, diligence and ordinary judgment displayed, the courts will always, with some reluctance, enforce the rigid rules which courts have been obliged, for the protection of estates, to impose upon the conduct of executors.[99]

F. Delegation of Powers.—Letters of administration are a trust. They are granted by the probate court or ordinary because of confidence reposed in the grantee. They require him to take exclusive charge of the personal property of his intestate and to bring to its administration his own personal attention and judgment. He has no right to allow others to control it or to share in its administration. If he does, he exposes it to unnecessary hazards and subjects it to the disposition of persons in whom the officer of the law has reposed no confidence.[1]

Held, that the executors took the legal title in fee, to hold until final division; and that the trusts were imposed upon them as executors. McArthur v. Scott, 133 U. S. 340, 377, 28 L. Ed. 1015. Where notes belonging to decedent had never been inventoried as part of the decedent's estate, but it was shown that they were the property of the decedent at the time of his death, and by operation of law, in pursuance of his will, they passed by his executors, it was held, that the executors could sue on the notes. An agreement was entered into between P. and S. which provided, on the part of P., that he should devote his time and best judgment to the selection and purchase of land, to an amount not exceeding five thousand dollars, in certain designated states and territories, or in such of them as he might find most advantageous to the interest of S.; that the purchases should be made during the then existing year, and that the contracts of purchase should be made, and the conveyance taken in the name of S.; and on the part of S., that he should furnish the five thousand dollars; that the lands purchased should be sold within five years afterwards, and that of the profits made by such purchase and sale, one-half should be paid to P., and be in full for his services and expenses. Under this agreement, lands having been purchased by P. and the title taken in the name of S., held, that the principle of equitable conversion being applied to the case, and that land which was to be converted into money, being regarded and treated in equity as money, the personal representative of P. was the proper person to maintain a suit for recovery of P.'s portion of the profits and it was not necessary that his heirs at law should be parties. 3. Accepting Depreciated Currency.—For debts payable in lawful money, the depreciated currency of the country where they were contracted and the executor resides can be used at its face value in payment of legacies, and, therefore, may be accepted by the executor in payment of claims of the estate, without a breach of trust.[9]

4. Receipts.—A receipt given by a person as attorney for money paid by himself as administrator to himself as attorney is good.[10]

J. Compromise and Composition.—An administrator has general power to compound a debt, if it is for the benefit of the trust estate. And, even when statutes exist providing for compromises with debtors with the approval of a probate court, it is held that the right to compromise which before existed is not taken away, but may be exercised subject to the burden of showing that the compromise was beneficial to the estate.[11] The authority given to an administrator by statute, to commence and prosecute actions, fairly includes the power to make such reasonable contracts in regard to compensation and the compro-

9. Accepting depreciated currency in payment.—In Washington v. Opie, 145 U. S. 214, 221, 36 L. Ed. 580, the court said: "The present case in some of its features is not unlike that of Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 334, 29 L. Ed. 901. The facts in that case were these: Lipse's executors having authority to dispose of the real property of the testator, who died in Virginia, sold certain lands in that state to Spears in 1860. One of the payments fell due in October, 1861, another in October, 1862. The bonds were paid in a check on a Virginia bank, which was deposited in that bank by the resident executor who received it. Against that deposit the executor drew his checks, which were paid in Confederate notes. The principal question in the case was whether the debtor was discharged from liability to pay his bonds in lawful money of the United States. This court, after referring to the doctrine declared by the court of appeals of Virginia (Patteson v. Bondurant, 30 Gratt. 94), that a debtor who pays to an executor in depreciated currency a debt payable in gold or its equivalent, knowing at the time that the currency is not needed for the payment of debts or legacies, or other uses of the estate, and that the safety of the debt does not require its collection, may also be charged as a participant in the devastavit, said: 'The present case does not come under the doctrine. It falls within the class where, for debts payable in lawful money, the depreciated currency of the country where they were contracted and the executor resides can be used at its face value in payment of legacies, and, therefore, may be accepted by him without a breach of trust. The notes received had in October, 1862, to a great extent, superseded the use of coin, and became the principal currency of the confederate states. All business transactions there were had with reference to them. They were a standard of value, according to which contracts were made and discharged. Having, therefore, an exchangeable value, they were sought for by residents within the confederacy.' In reference to the issue as to whether the legatees were estopped to question the action of the executor, the court said: 'The resident executor there, however, hesitated to accept them (Confederate notes) in payment of the last bond of Spears, which, being made in October, 1860, must be considered as payable in lawful money, and he consulted the wishes of legatees in Virginia, among whom the greater part of the money was to be distributed. They desired him to take the notes, and received them in discharge of their distributive shares. So far as those legatees are concerned their approval of his action was shown by their expressed wishes, and their acceptance of the notes. They, at least, are estopped from questioning the propriety of his conduct.'" See post, "Personal Liability of Executor or Administrator," VI, X. And see, generally, the title PAYMENT.

K. Continuing Business.—A treatment of the question as to the rights, duties and liabilities of personal representatives in allowing the surviving partner of their testator or intestate to continue in control of the partnership business, will be found in title PARTNERSHIP.

L. Pledge or Mortgage.—Unless restrained by statute an executor can dispose of the personal assets of his testator by pledge for all purposes connected with the discharge of his duties under the will.[13] Parties who deal with an executor, exercising his power of disposition of the personal assets of the estate in his hands, to raise money, not for the estate or the settlement of its affairs, but for the business of a commercial firm, are bound to look into his authority, and are held to a knowledge of all the limitations which the will, as well as the law, puts thereon.[14] Where the pledge is made for other purposes than those connected with the discharge of his executor's duties under the will, of which the pledgee has no knowledge or notice, but takes the property in good faith, the transaction will be sustained; for the pledgee is not bound to see to the disposition of the proceeds received.[15] But the case is otherwise where the pledgee has knowledge of the perversion of the property to other purposes of the estate, or the intended perversion of the proceeds, and the funds can be followed and recovered.[16]

M. Releases.—An executor may release the maker of a note from his liability to the estate of the testator arising from endorsements made by the testator, if the transaction is bona fide and for sufficient consideration, and there is no evidence to disprove either.[17] A release made in good faith by a surviving creditor who is also executor is valid and binding, notwithstanding the fact that letters testamentary have not been issued at the time of making such release.[18]

At the time of his death A. held in his name an interest in a commercial firm which he had acquired by funds belonging one-third to himself, one-third to the children of a deceased brother, and one-third to a sister. In his will, of which B., his brother, was appointed executor, A. made a request that the whole of such interest should be retained in the firm, under the control of B., so long as the latter should deem it profitable. His own interest he bequeathed to B., in trust for the latter and certain nephews and nieces, in equal proportions, to be held and controlled by B. so long as he should deem it advisable. One of the members of the firm having withdrawn therefrom, B. purchased his interest, whereupon the firm name was changed. Subsequently, to raise funds wherewith to pay loans made to the firm, B. pledged to C. certain notes which had come into his possession as executor. Held, that his use of the notes to raise funds for the firm being a misappropriation of them, and that C., having knowledge of the directions of the testator, could hold them against the claim of his representatives. The release, therefore, notwithstanding the superfluous description of the releasor as executor, was, by reason of his being surviving creditor, binding upon the interests of the representatives of the deceased creditor, as well as upon his own; and upon this ground the decree is affirmed."

The two characters of executor and of surviving creditor being united in one person, if such person had executed the release in his own name merely, without describing himself as acting in either capacity, the court would presume that he acted in the character which would make the release valid and effectual. Wall v. Bissell, 125 U. S. 382, 393, 31 L. Ed. 772, citing Yeaton v. Lynn, 5 Pet. 224, 229, 8 L. Ed. 105.

N. Where Representative Absents Himself from State.—An executor who, after taking out letters testamentary, absents himself from the state, is still capable of performing, and he is still bound to perform, all the duties of an executor.[19]

O. Where Grant of Administration Is Void.—If a court purporting to grant administration has no jurisdiction in the case, then the grant of administration is void ab initio, and all the acts of the grantee are void.[20]

P. Rights and Duties of Coexecutors and Coadministrators.—Coadministrators have the same legal title to the assets; and on the death of either the sole surviving administrator is vested with the exclusive title and the right to the immediate possession of the assets of the estate.[21] And each administrator is severally liable to pay the debts of the deceased out of the assets committed to him, and therein they resemble joint and several co-obligors in a bond.[22] Where there are two executors in a will, it is clear that each has a right to receive the debts due to the estate, and all other assets which shall come into his hands; and he is answerable for the assets he receives; this responsibility results from the right to receive, and the nature of the trust. A payment of the sums received by him to his coexecutor will not discharge him from his liability to the estate; he is bound to account for all assets which come into his hands, and to appropriate them according to the directions of the will.[23] It is a well-settled rule that one executor is not responsible for the devastavit of his coexecutor any further than he is shown to have been knowing and assenting at the time to such devastavit or misapplication of the assets; merely permitting his co-executor to possess the assets, without going further, and concurring in the application of them, does not render him answerable for the receipts of his coexecutor. Each executor is liable only for his own acts, and what he receives and applies, unless he join in the direction and misapplication of the assets.[24] However many executors the testator may appoint, all of them have the same privity with each other and to the testator.[25] Executors are not liable to each other; but each is liable to the cestui que trust and devisees, to the full extent of the funds received by him.[26] And where the several executors prove the will and take out letters testamentary in different states, such an arrangement, however convenient, cannot affect the duty of either of the executors or the court to see that the trust is carried out according to the testator's intention.[27] Where certain powers are given to the several executors, and a provision is made that the testator's wife shall have a voice as executrix, her participation in the decisions are indispensable to their validity.[28] When within the same political jurisdiction, however many executors the testator may appoint, all of them may be sued as one executor for the debts of the testator, and they may unite in a suit to recover debts due to their testator, or to recover property out of possession. All of them, then, having the same privity with each other and to the testator, and the same responsibility to creditors, though they may have been qualified as executors in different sovereignties, an action for a debt due by the testator, against any one of them in that sovereignty where he undertook to act as executor, places all of them in one relation concerning it, and as to the remedies for its recovery; what one may plead to bar a recovery against any of them, applies to all of them.[29] Where three executors were named in a will but only one of them proved the will and received the letters, the others took no step in that direction. It was held that the executor who qualified could maintain suit without joining the others where there was a provision in case some of the executors did not act.[30] As to survivorship of power of sale in executors, see post, "Who May Execute Power," VI, T, 3.

R. Powers in Regard to Patent Rights.—As to the powers of the personal representative over the patent rights owned by the estate, see the title PATENTS.

S. Liability for Assets Received.—Whatever property or money is lawfully recovered by an executor or administrator, after the death of his testator or intestate, in virtue of his representative character, he holds as assets of the estate; and he is liable therefor, in such representative character, to the party who has a good title thereto.[31] The want of knowledge, or the possession of knowledge, on the part of the administrator, as to the rights and claims of other persons, upon the money thus received, cannot alter the rights of the party to whom it ultimately belongs.[32]

T. Sales—1. POWERS GENERALLY.—An administrator has general power to dispose of the personal effects of his intestate.[33] And unless restrained by statute an executor can dispose of the personal assets of his testator by sale for all purposes connected with the discharge of his duties under the will.[34] It is well settled, that executors have power to sell the real estate, where such power is given to them, or necessarily to be implied from the produce having to pass through their hands in the execution of their office;[35] but they have no authority to sell real estate, unless the power to sell, and the purpose of the sale, are expressed in the will.[36] Therefore, the court cannot infer, from a power expressly granted to sell the estate for one purpose, a power to sell it for another purpose not granted.[37] The administrator, in virtue of his general authority, has no right to meddle with the real estate.[38] He has no estate in the land, but a power to sell, under the authority of the court. This is not an independent power, to be exercised at discretion, when the exigency, in his opinion, may require it; but is conferred by the court, in a state of things prescribed by the law.[39]

2. POWER MUST BE STRICTLY PURSUED.—Authority given to executors and administrators to sell is a personal trust, and must be strictly pursued; and if they transcend their authority, in any essential particular, their act is void.[40]

3. WHO MAY EXECUTE POWER.—A naked power to sell may be exercised or not by the executors, and is discretionary; while an imperative direction to sell and dispose of the proceeds in a certain way, as in this case, is a power coupled with a trust;[41] and though the executors may not be expressly named as the persons who are to sell the land, yet, the power may be vested in them by necessary implication.[42] A power to sell, coupled either with an interest or trust,

In Lane v. Vick, 3 How. 464, 480, 11 L. Ed. 681, it was held that the only authority given by the will to sell the town lots, was for the payment of debts; and there the power of the executors to sell any portion of the estate terminated. When they had sold as many of the lots as were necessary to pay the debts, the remainder fell into the general devise of all the lands of the testator to his sons; and the purposes of the testator, in relation to his real estate, were accomplished, according to his plain intention, when all the provisions of the will were taken together.

In Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. 532, 565, 9 L. Ed. 522, affirmed in Bank v. Beverly, 1 How. 134, 147, 11 L. Ed. 75, the court said: "Although the clause in the will now under consideration does not name the executors as the persons who are to sell the land, yet it is a power vested in them, by necessary implication. The land is to be sold for the purpose of paying the debts, which is a duty devolving upon the executors; and it follows, as a matter of course, that the testator intended his executors should make the sale, to enable them to discharge the duty and trust of paying the debts. Mr. Sugden, in his Treatise on Powers, page 167, on the authority of a case cited from the Year Books, lays it down as a general rule, that when a testator directs his land to be sold, for certain purposes, without declaring by whom the sale shall be made, if the fund is to be distributed by the executors, they shall have, by implication, the power to sell. And this is the doctrine of Chancellor Kent, in the case of Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 254. The will, in that case, as in this, directed the real estate to be sold, for certain purposes therein specified, but did not direct expressly by whom the sale should be made; and he held, as Lord Hardwick did, in a case somewhat similar (1 Atk. 420), that it was a reasonable construction, that the power was given to the executors; that it was almost impossible to mistake the testator's meaning on that point. So, in the present case, it is impossible to draw any other conclusion, than that it was the testator's intention, that the sale should be made by his executors. McDonald v. Hewitt, 15 Johns. 349, is a case very much in point, on both questions; that the power in this case, is coupled with an interest, and survives, and that by implication, it is to be survives to the surviving executor. So, also, if all the trustees or executors in such a case decline to act, except one.[43]

4. Order or License from Court—a. Necessity for Order.—The general executed by the executor. The testator, say the court, in that case, directed, that in case of a deficiency of his personal estate to pay his debts, some of his real estate should be sold, without naming by whom; and one of the executors only undertook the execution of the will, and sold the land; and the court held, that this was a power coupled with an interest, and might be executed by one of the executors, it being a power to sell for the payment of debts."

Though the distinctions between these different powers are not always well preserved, no doubt exists that a power coupled with an interest may be inferred by obvious implication from the whole will, as the fee not being at once vested elsewhere, and it being necessary to have it in the executors to effect the general design as well as from the usual course, which is by an express devise to the executors. Nor is it of any consequence how small the interest be. It is enough if only to distribute the proceeds, or to take the rents or use for the benefit of others. The interest, too, may be equitable or legal. And it is an interest not required to yield a profit or gain, but any title in the estate itself, the thing to be sold. Being given by the will, when it is a power coupled with an interest, and the conveyance under it being by and through the will, it is of course for the use of the person designated in the will, as if it was a devise over to him. And if the whole scope and design of the will could not otherwise be accomplished, therefore be unjustifiable in a court of equity. Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 233, 268, 12 L. Ed. 130.

43. Survivorship of power.—Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 233, 12 L. Ed. 130.

If the executors have another duty to perform after the sale under the will, with the proceeds, it is a power coupled with a trust or an interest, and survives. Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 233, 268, 12 L. Ed. 130; Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. 532, 567, 9 L. Ed. 522, affirmed in Bank v. Beverly, 1 How. 134, 11 L. Ed. 75.

In Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. 532, 564, 9 L. Ed. 522, affirmed in Bank v. Beverly, 1 How. 134, 147, 11 L. Ed. 75, the court said: "The general principle of the common law, as laid down by Lord Coke (Co. Litt. 112b), and sanctioned by many judicial decisions, is, that when the power given to several persons, is a mere naked power to sell, not coupled with an interest, it must be executed by all, and does not survive; but when the power is coupled with an interest, it may be executed by the survivor. 14 Johns. 553; 2 Johns. Ch. 19. But the difficulty arises in the application of the rule to particular cases. It may, perhaps, be considered as the better conclusion to be drawn from the English cases on this question, that a mere direction, in a will, to the executors, to sell land, without any words vesting in them an interest in the land, or creating a trust, will be only a naked power, which does not survive. In such case, there is no one who has a right to enforce an execution of the power. But when anything is directed to be done, in which third persons are interested, and who have a right to call on the executors to execute the power, such power survives. This becomes necessary for the purpose of effecting the object of the power. It is not a power coupled with an interest, in executors, because they may derive a personal benefit from the devise; for a trust will survive, though no way beneficial to the trustee. It is the possession of the legal estate, or a right in the subject over which the power is to be exercised, that makes the interest in question. And when an executor, guardian or other trustee is invested with the rents and profits of land, for the sale or use of another, it is still an authority coupled with an interest, and survives. 1 Caines Cas. 16; 2 P. Wms. 102. In the American cases, there seems to be less confusion and nicety on this point; and the courts have generally applied to the construction of such powers, the great and leading principle which applies to the construction of other parts of the will—to ascertain and carry into execution the intention of the testator. When the power is given to executors, to be executed in their official capacity of executors, and there are no words in the will, warranting the conclusion, that the testator intended, for safety or some other object, a joint execution of the power; as the office survives, the power ought also to be construed as surviving. And courts of equity will lend their aid to uphold the power, for the purpose of carrying into execution the intention of the testator, and preventing, the consequences that might result from an extinction of the power; and where there is a trust, charged upon the executors, in the direction given to them in the disposition of the proceeds, it is the settled doctrine of courts of chancery, that the trust does not become extinct by the death of one of the trustees. It will be continued in the survivors, and not be permitted, in any event, to fail, for want of a trustee. This is the doctrine of Chancellor Kent, in the case of Franklin v. Osgood, 2 Johns. Ch. 19, and cases there cited; and is in accordance with numerous decisions in the English courts. 3 Atk. 714; 2 P. Wms. 102. And is rule is that order of the court is a prerequisite, indispensable to the very existence of the power of the representative to sell the real estate,[44] and in some jurisdictions such an order is necessary for the sale of either species of property.[45]

b. Power to Sell—(1) Jurisdictional Prerequisites.—On a sale of land for the payment of debts of an intestate, the requisites to the jurisdiction of the court are the death of the intestate,[46] the insufficiency of his personal estate to pay his debts,[47] and a representation thereof to the court making these facts appear.[48]

(2) Jurisdiction to Sell Not Necessarily Included in General Jurisdiction.—"Jurisdiction of all probate and testamentary matters" given by a statute may be completely exercised, without possessing the power to order the sale of the lands of an intestate. Such jurisdiction does not appear to be identical with that power, or to comprehend it.[49]

(3) Extraterritorial Operation of Decree.—A sale of real estate in one state by a representative under a decree or license granted by a court of another state is void; and a deed executed by him is proprio vigore, inoperative to pass any title of the estate to any lands described therein.[50]

(4) Effect of Repeal of Law Granting Power.—If the law which authorized the court to make the order be repealed, the power to sell can never come into adopted and sanctioned by the court of errors in New York, on appeal, in the case of Franklin v. Osgood. And Mr. Justice Platt, in that case, refers to a class of cases in the English courts, where it is held, that although, from the terms made use of in creating the power, detached from other parts of the will, it might be considered a mere naked power to sell; yet, if, from its connection with other provisions in the will, it clearly appears to have been the intention of the testator, that the land should be sold to execute the trusts in the will, and such sale is necessary for the purpose of executing such trusts, it will be construed as creating a power coupled with an interest, and will survive. This doctrine is fully recognized by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, in the case of the Lessee of Zebach v. Smith, 3 Binn. 69. The court there considered it as a settled point, that if the authority to sell is given to executors, virtute officii, a surviving executor may sell; and that the authority given by the will, in that case, to the executors, to sell, was to them in their character of executors, and for the purpose of paying debts, an object which is highly favored in the law."

Where executors had a power under a will to sell property, which was a power coupled with a trust, and one of the executors sold the land, it was held not to be such an informal or illegal sale as not to make the executor liable to the cestui que trusts for the purchase price. Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 233, 272, 12 L. Ed. 130.

There was a devise that after the death of the testator's wife, certain lands should be sold, and the money divided among the children, but the will did not declare by whom the sale should be made. The land was sold by the survivor of two executors. The court held it to be a valid sale. Lloyd v. Taylor, 2 Dall. 223, 1 L. Ed. 357.

A petition of the administrator, setting forth that the personal property of the deceased is insufficient to pay the debts, and praying the court for an order of sale, brings the case fully within the jurisdiction of the court. It becomes a case of judicial cognizance. The court has power over the subject matter and the parties. Florentine v. Barton, 2 Wall. 210, 216, 17 L. Ed. 783.

existence. The repeal of such a law divests no vested estate, but is the exercise of a legislative power which every legislature possesses, for the mode of subjecting the property of a debtor to the demands of a creditor, must always depend on the wisdom of the legislature.[51]

(5) Effect of Statute Granting Additional Power to Chancellor.—A statute giving the chancellor full power and authority to sell lands of a decedent descending to minors and lunatics and pay his debts, if personalty be insufficient, upon application of any creditor of decedent, does not confer a personal power on the chancellor, but an extension of the jurisdiction of the court.[52]

(6) As Granted by Private Act of Legislature.—A state legislature may, constitutionally, pass a private act authorizing a court to decree, on the petition of an administrator, private sale of the real estate of an intestate to pay his debts, even though the act should not require notice to heirs or to any one, and although the same general subject is regulated by general statute much more full and provident in its nature. In making the order of sale under such private act, the court is presumed to have adjudged every question necessary to justify such order or decree, viz: The death of the owners; that the petitioners were his administrators; that the personal estate was insufficient to pay the debts of deceased; that the private acts of assembly, as to the manner of sale, were within the constitutional power of the legislature, and that all the provisions of the law as to notices which are directory to the administrators have been complied with. Nor need it enter upon the record the evidence on which any fact is decided. Especially does all this apply after long lapse of time.[53]

(7) Jurisdiction as Affected by Errors and Irregularities.—Informalities as to notices, advertisements, etc., in the subsequent proceedings of the court cannot oust jurisdiction which has already attached.[54]

c. Nature of Proceeding to Sell.—The proceeding for the sale of the real property of an intestate, though had in the general course of administration, is a distinct and independent proceeding authorized by statute only in certain specially designated cases;[55] it is a judicial proceeding.[56] In a proceeding to sell the real estate of an indebted intestate, there are no adversary parties; the proceeding is in rem.[57] The administrator represents the land; the only question of jurisdiction is the power of the court over the subject matter before them, without regard to the persons who may have an interest in it; all the world are parties. In all courts who have power to sell the estates of intestates, their action operates on the estate, not on the heirs of the intestate.[58]

d. Preliminaries—(1) The Petition.—The petition by an administrator, for the sale of realty, need not follow exactly the language of the statute. If the substance of what was necessary to be stated, is contained in the petition, it will be sufficient.[59] Where the description of land contained in a petition was so defective that its terms were equally applicable to another tract in the same county, it was held that a correct description in the schedule attached to the

Under the statute of Illinois authorizing the sale of the real estate of a decedent, and directing the executor or administrator to make out a petition to the county court "stating therein what real estate the said testator or intestate may have died seized of," a statement of the real estate which he died "leaving" is a sufficient compliance with the statute. McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 352, 21 L. Ed. 341.

notice of application to the court was sufficient to cure the defective description.[60] Under the statute of Maryland, passed in 1785, the chancellor could decree a sale of land upon the application of only a part of the heirs interested.[61]

(2) Audit of Estate.—The necessity of an order for the sale of real property to pay debts being clear, the court may direct an ascertainment of the whole amount of the testator's liabilities when the sale is confirmed. It is not indispensable that such ascertainment have been made before the sale was ordered.[62] But under the Maryland statute providing for sale of decedent's lands in case of personalty insufficient to pay debts, a decree, which was entered for the sale of lands without having the estate audited, and which did not postpone the sale until the claims should be exhibited before the auditor, was held to be erroneous.[63]

(3) Bond to Account for Proceeds of Sale.—In some jurisdictions a sale is invalid as against the heir, if the administrator fails to give bond to account for the proceeds of the sale.[64]

(4) Probate and Recording of Will.—The due probate of the will of the testator, before the proper court, is an indispensable preliminary to any sale of the property in that state.[65] But when a sale is made under a will, the omission to record the will does not vitiate the sale, unless recording is made necessary by a local statute.[66]

(5) Notice of Sale.—Statutory provisions require, with certain exceptions where the estate is small,[67] that notice be given of a sale under order of court.[68] Where the word "recorded" was used in a notice for the sale of decedent's lands, it was held to be evidently a mistake for "situated," or it might be regarded as surplusage.[69]

e. The Hearing—(1) Determination as to Necessity and Propriety of Sale.—The necessity and propriety of the sale solicited, are matters to be considered at the hearing upon the order to show cause why the license should not be granted.[70]

(2) Parties.—In a proceeding to sell real estate of a decedent to pay his debts, there are no adversary parties, the proceeding being in the nature of a proceeding in rem, to which all claiming under the decedent are parties.[71]

(3) Decree Omitting Provision for Approval of Sale by Court.—Under the Maryland statute of 1785 providing for the sale of land descending to minors, it was held to be a fatal error in a decree which directed a conveyance to be made on the payment of the purchase money, without directing that the sale first be notified to, and approved by the court.[72]

5. Duration of Power to Sell.—So long as an administration legally subsists, or may be legally granted, this power over the land may be exercised, if the land remain in possession of the heirs; and it is not defeated, simply by an alienation or disseisin of the heirs;[73] but when the right of entry to the land is gone, or the estate is gone, by an adverse possession from those who held as heirs or devisees, the whole interest in the land, the power of the administrator to make sale of the land for payment of debts, is gone also.[74] A power to sell the estate for payment of debts, being created by the law, ought not to be so construed as to work mischiefs against the intent of the law. It ought to be exercised within a reasonable time after the death of the intestate; and gross neglect or delay on the part of the creditors, for an unreasonable time, ought to be held to be a waiver or extinguishment of it.[75] And what is a reasonable time within which the power must be exercised, is to be fixed by analogy to the statute of limitations in force.[76] Where the power given by statute to executors to make sale of real estate terminates at the end of a year from their appointment, unless there be an order of court to sell, a sale made after the expiration of the year, in a case where no order of court is shown, and where the will itself gives no power of sale, is a nullity.[77] In case the statute vesting the courts with power to grant an order for the sale of an estate is repealed before the sale is made, the power of the administrators to sell terminates with the repeal of the law.[78]

6. Power to Sell Property Held in Trust.—Where a person who holds land as trustee directs by his will that the whole of the property that he may die seized and possessed of, or may be in any wise belonging to him, should be sold, the executors will have power to sell the land held in trust, as well as that belonging to the testator in his own right.[79]

7. Character of Sale.—A personal representative can sell only at public auction,[80] except where private sale is directed by the will of the testator.[81]

9. Medium of Payment of Purchase Money.—Where the executors sell property, taking security for the purchase money, the debt being payable only in lawful money of the United States, they have no right to take anything in payment but such money or its equivalent.[83]

10. Confirmation of Sale.—The power of a state legislature in relation to the confirmation of sales of a personal representative is greater than the strict judicial power.[84] A probate court cannot by subsequent order give validity to sales of real estate made by executors, which were void by the laws of the state where made.[85]

11. Injunction against Sale.—Creditors may, for cause, enjoin the executor from selling; or, upon his application to sell, in a case where the intervention of a court of equity is asked to permit or direct a sale, creditors may be allowed to make themselves parties.[86]

12. Rights, Duties and Liabilities of Purchasers—a. Nature of Title Acquired.—In all the courts which have power to sell the estates of decedents, their action operates on the estate, not on the heirs of the intestate. A purchaser claims not their title, but one paramount. The estate passes by operation of law.[87]

b. Effect of Irregularities in Sale by Personal Representative.—Executors and administrators, in making sales of property, must comply strictly with the requisites of all statutory provisions on the subject;[88] and unless every essential direction of the law is complied with, all whose interests are affected by the authority to sell are not concluded by the sale, unless, from a long acquiescence, a foundation is laid for a fair and reasonable presumption, that the requisites of the law had been complied with;[89] and no such presumption can

Confirmation by legislature.—Cynthia Jenks, on a petition to the general assembly of Rhode Island, represented that she was the executrix of the last will and testament of Jonathan Jenks, late of Winchester, in the state of New Hamshire, deceased, and that the personal property being insufficient to pay the debts of the estate, she obtained authority from the judge of probate to make sale of so much of the real estate of the deceased as should be necessary to pay the debts; and that under this authority she sold and conveyed certain lands in the state of Rhode Island, as belonging to the estate, and received a part of the consideration money, and the balance was to be paid when the deed executed by the petitioners should be ratified by the general assembly; the residue of the purchase money was represented to be absolutely necessary to pay the debts of the estate, and a ratification of the deed, etc., was prayed. In the lower house, June 1792, "it was voted and resolved, that the said petition be received, and that the said deed and the same is hereby ratified and confirmed, so far as respects the conveyance of any right or interest in said estate, mentioned in said deed, which belonged to the said Jonathan Jenks, at the time of his decease;" and in the upper house, this resolve was read the same day, and concurred in. The purchasers, under the deed sanctioned, received all the interest in the premises which had been vested in Jonathan Jenks, and which, on his death, vested in his heirs or devisees; the act of the legislature and the deed are unconditional, and neither the heirs of Cynthia Jenks, nor any other persons can impeach the deed, by evidence of facts prior to the act of confirmation. The power of the legislature of Rhode Island in relation to the confirmation of such sales of real estate, is greater than the strict judicial power; they may sanction past transactions, where vested rights are not disturbed; while the court can only authorize a title to be made in future. c. Right to Rely upon Validity of Sale.—The law appears to be settled in the states that courts will go far to sustain bona fide titles acquired under sales made by statutes regulating sales made by order of the courts. When there has been a fair sale the purchaser will not be bound to look beyond the decree, if the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction appear on the face of the proceedings.[92] But if there be a total want of jurisdiction, the proceedings are

Where one purchased from an executor in good faith what he supposed was a legal title, but the executor had no right to sell, it was held that the purchaser could acquire a good title only by prescription and therefore where prescription was not shown, the purchaser could not claim against the heir of the estate. In Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 454, 34 L. Ed. 1054, it was said: "Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 319, 337, 340, 341, 11 L. Ed. 283, was, like this, a case of a sale by an administrator. The court, in its opinion, said: 'The whole merits of the controversy depend on one single question: Had the county court of Brown County jurisdiction of the subject on which they acted? * * * Nor is it necessary that a full or perfect account should appear in the records of the contents of papers on file, or the judgment of the court on matters preliminary to a final order; it is enough that there be something of record which shows the subject matter before the court, and their action upon it, that their judicial power arose and was exercised by a definitive order, sentence or decree. * * * The granting the license to sell is an adjudication upon all the facts necessary to give jurisdiction, and whether they existed or not is wholly immaterial, if no appeal is taken; the rule is the same whether the law gives an appeal or not; if none is given from the final decree, it is conclusive on all whom it concerns. * * * The court having power to make the decree, it can be impeached only by fraud in the party who obtains it. 6 Pet. 729. A purchaser under it is not bound to look beyond the decree; if there is error in it, of the most palpable kind, if the court which rendered it have, in the exercise of jurisdiction, disregarded, misconstrued or disobeyed the plain provisions of the law which gave them the power to hear and determine the case before them, the title of a purchaser is as much protected as if the adjudication would stand the test of a writ of error.' The following authorities are strong in support of the general proposition under consideration: Thompson v. Tolmie, 2 Pet. 157, 7 L. Ed. 381; Mohr v. Manierre, 101 U. S. 417, 25 L. Ed. 1052; Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 18 L. Ed. 34; Florentine v. Barton, 2 Wall. 210, 17 L. Ed. 783; Thaw v. Ritchie, 136 U. S. 519, 34 L. Ed. 531." And see Davis v. Gaines, 104 U. S. 386, 392, 26 L. Ed. 757; McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 352, 366, 21 L. Ed. 341.

"A title under a license to the administrator to sell real estate, 'is good against the heirs of the intestate, although the license was granted upon the certificate of the judge of probate, not warranted by the circumstance of the case.'" Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 319, 343, 11 L. Ed. 283.

A purchaser at judicial sale by an administrator, does not depend upon a return by the administrator making the sale, of what he has done. If the preliminary proceedings are correct, and he has the order of sale and the deed, this is sufficient for him. McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 352, 21 L. Ed. 341.

Where a petition for the seizure and sale of the mortgaged property of a deceased person was filed, in the circuit court of the United States for Louisiana, against the executor of that deceased person, which petition alleged the plaintiff to be a citizen of Tennessee, and the defendant to be a citizen of Louisiana, and the proceedings went on to a sale without any objection to the jurisdiction of the court being made by the executor upon the ground of residence of parties, it is too void and a mere nullity, and confer no right, and afford no justification, and may be rejected, when collaterally drawn in question.[93]

d. Effect of Discovery of Later Will.—A sale of land, duly made by order of the court having jurisdiction, and a conveyance thereof by the executor of a will duly admitted to probate while its functions are in full force, to a bona fide purchaser for value, vests the purchaser with a good title, which will not be affected by the discovery of a later will and its admission to probate and record.[94] But a purchaser of property from an executor of a will of one date, who has at the time strong reasons to believe, and had recently declared solemnly that he did believe that a later will with different executors and different dispositions of property had been made, is not protected from liability to the parties interested under such later will, if established and received to probate, by the fact that the executor of the first will made the sale under order of court having jurisdiction of such things. He purchases at the risk of the later will being found, or proved and established. If the later will is found, it relates back as against such a purchaser, and affects him with notice of its existence and contents as of the time when he purchased.[95] On suit brought by a real and paramount heir claiming under a will of one date to recover possession, it is no defense by a party in possession under sales made by the executors or alleged instituted heir under an earlier and annulled will, that the estate of the testator was insolvent.[96]

e. Fraudulent Sales—(1) Purchase by Executor or Administrator.—Executors and administrators are not permitted to derive a personal benefit from the manner in which they transact the business or manage the assets of the estates intrusted to them; but whatever advantage is derived by them from a purchase at an undervalue is for the common benefit of the estate.[97] And the receipts or acquittances given by the complainants to the executors do not affect the rights of the latter where they are obviously given without full knowledge of all the circumstances connected with the disposal and management of the es-late for a curator, appointed in the place of the executor, to raise the objection in a state court against a purchaser at the sale, and attempt to prove that the circuit court had no jurisdiction over the case, because the executor was not a citizen of Louisiana. Evidence dehors the record cannot be introduced to disprove it. Erwin v. Lowry, 7 How. 172, 12 L. Ed. 655.

As to the general rule that mere errors in the exercise of jurisdiction will not render a judgment liable to collateral attack, see the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

The validity of an administrator's sale will not be affected by an irregularity in the appointment of an administrator. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 452, 34 L. Ed. 1054, citing Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 403, 18 L. Ed. 34; McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 352, 363, 21 L. Ed. 341.

Where property was sold under an administrator's sale, the presumption is in favor of its correctness; and after a long possession under it, the burden of proof is upon the party who impeaches the sale. Moore v. Greene, 19 How. 69, 15 L. Ed. 533.

Where there were irregularities in a public sale made by a public officer by authority of the order of the probate court, and a deed was given by the executor, the statute of limitations of Louisiana would cure the defects of the sale. Davis v. Gaines, 104 U. S. 386, 402, 26 L. Ed. 757.

In Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503, 557, 11 L. Ed. 1076, the court said: "We are aware that cases may be found, in the reports of some of the chancery courts in the United States, in which it has been held that an executor may purchase, if it be without fraud, any property, of his testators, at open and public sale, for a fair price, and that such purchase is only voidable, and not void, as we hold it to be. But with all due respect for the learned judges who have so decided, we say that an executor or administrator is, in equity, a trustee for the next of kin, legatees, and creditors, and that we have been unable to find any one well-considered decision, with other cases, or any one case in the books, to sustain the right of an executor to become the purchaser of the property which he represents, or any tate.[98] Where an administrator suffers land to be sold, through the agency of another, with the view of securing the title to himself, the proceeding is fraudulent and void.[99]

(2) Second Sale as Evidence of Fraud.—A second license to an administrator to sell property already sold by him, and a second purchase of it by the same party who had already bought it before, is not evidence of fraud in the first sale.[1]

(3) Inadequacy of Price.—Where the price is so grossly inadequate as to show a fraudulent sale, such sale is void.[2] But where witnesses testify as to the intrinsic value of property, to hold and to use in reference to the future, and not the actual market value of the property at the time to be sold for cash, and an executor sells at less than what it is worth if held, it is not a void sale on the ground of fraud.[3]

f. Purchaser Must Be Bona Fide and without Notice.—The purchaser to hold portion of it, though he has done so for a fair price, without fraud, at a public sale. Why should the rule be relaxed in the case of persons most frequently exposed to the temptations of self-interest, who may yield to it more readily than any others, with a larger impunity, if the day of equitable retribution shall ever come for those who have been defrauded? Is it not better that the cause of the evil shall be prohibited, than that courts of equity shall be relied upon to apply the remedy in particular cases, by inquiring into all the circumstances of a case, whether there has or has not been fraud in fact? Is the rule to be relaxed, in the case of executions, in respect to all persons interested in the estate, or only to such of them as are sui juris? And if only to those who are sui juris, why in case of an executor as to such persons, when the rule has never been relaxed by any court of equity to permit purchases by any other trustee or agent of one who is sui juris? Shall it be relaxed in cases of those who are interested in the estate, and who are not sui juris or minors? Then other remedies must be devised to protect their interests than that which experience has shown to be alone efficacious. It is, that when a trustee for one not sui juris sees that it is absolutely necessary that the estate must be sold, and he is ready to give more for it than any one else, that a bill should be filed, and he should apply to the court by motion, to let him be a purchaser. This is the only way he can protect himself. There are cases in which the court will permit it." See, also, the title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

An execution creditor purchased land, but did not have any intention of holding the property, which he told the administrator sometime before the sale took place, and he never paid any consideration. After four years the administrator paid off the judgment and received a deed from the execution creditor. It was held that the execution creditor was not such bone fide purchaser as would give the administrator a valid title against other coheirs. Swayze v. Burke, 12 Pet. 11, 25, 9 L. Ed. 980.

1. Second sale as evidence of fraud.—Comstock v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 396, 18 L. Ed. 34.

2. Inadequacy of price.—At the time of his decease, O. J. M. was the owner of a large estate in Louisiana, valued at nearly a million dollars, consisting mostly of lands, abundantly sufficient, if honestly applied, to pay all his debts; but a sale was made under an order of the probate court of the Parish of Carroll (where the lands were situated) on application of B., as guardian of his daughter, and of the executor, O. T. M. The petition was signed by the other defendants as attorneys, and untruly represented that the lands were unproductive, and that it was necessary to sell them all to pay the debts of the estate. A simultaneous order was made, on the application of O. T. M. as executor of the will of J. M. (adverse to and irreconcilable with his duties and trust as executor of O. J. M.), for the sale of three-fourths of the same land as belonging to the estate of J. M., a daughter of O. J. M., and the sale was made under both orders. Before the sale, the confederates procured a false and fraudulent appraisement of the lands to be made at $2.75 per acre, reducing the whole value thereof $43,205.25, instead of $947,155.80, at which they had been appraised in the inventory. At the sale, B. became the purchaser of 9,171 acres of the lands at $3 per acre; M'y of 5,040 acres, and G., of 1,500 acres, at the same price. Held, that the sale was a sheer fraud as against general purchasers of the estate. Johnson v. Waters, 111 U. S. 640, 28 L. Ed. 547, affirmed in Mellen v. Buckner, 139 U. S. 388, 35 L. Ed. 199.

a good title must be bona fide and without notice of any defects or irregularities.[4] And property acquired from a personal representative by third parties with knowledge of his trust and his disregard of its obligations, can be followed and recovered. The law exacts the most perfect good faith from all parties dealing with a trustee respecting trust property. Whoever takes it for an object other than the general purposes of the trust, or such as may reasonably be supposed to be within its scope, must look to the authority of the trustee, or he will act at his peril.[5]

g. Duty to See to Application of Proceeds.—Where the sale is made for other purposes than those connected with the discharge of the executor's duties under the will, of which the purchaser has no knowledge or notice, but takes the property in good faith, the transaction will be sustained; for the purchaser is not bound to see to the disposition of the proceeds received.[6]

h. Effect of Failure to Include Property in Inventory.—A purchaser of land at a probate sale, under the order of a court of competent jurisdiction, directing the sale of all of the property of succession, is not affected by the failure of the executor to have such land placed on the inventory.[7]

i. Effect of Excess of Proceeds over Amount of Debts.—The title of a purchaser at an administrator's sale is not affected by the fact that the proceeds of the sale exceeded the amount of the alleged debts of the decedent, for the payment of which such sale was ordered.[8]

j. Effect of Failure of Administrator to Account for Proceeds.—Where an

An administrator suffered an excess of land to be sold for the payment of a debt. It was bid in by the creditor who did not pay any purchase price, but simply held it as security. The administrator then paid the debt and took a deed for the land. It was held that the administrator could not be considered a bona fide purchaser. Swayze v. Burke, 12 Pet. 11, 25, 9 L. Ed. 980.

Where one buys land at an illegal sale by an executor, he cannot substitute himself for the creditors of the estate, and use them as a means to get protection. Gaines v. New Orleans, 6 Wall. 642, 713, 18 L. Ed. 950.

The executor of an officer in the Virginia line on the continental establishment, obtained a certificate from the executive council of Virginia, as executor, for 4,000 acres of land in the Virginia reserve, in the state of Ohio, and afterwards sold and assigned the same; entries were made, and warrants issued in favor of the assignees, and a survey was made under one of the warrants, in favor of one of the assignees, a bona fide purchaser, who obtained a patent from the United States for the land. It appeared that the executor had no right, under the will, to sell the land to which the testator was entitled. The patent was granted in 1818, and the patentee had been in possession of the land from 1808. The heirs of the officer entitled to the land for military services, in 1839, some of them being minors, filed a bill to compel the patentee to convey the land held by him to them. Held, that the patentee was a purchaser with notice of the prior title of the heirs, and that he was bound to make the conveyance asked from him. Brush v. Ware, 15 Pet. 93, 10 L. Ed. 672.

"A sale of slaves, authorized by an executrix to be made in Louisiana, must be presumed to be intended to be made in the manner required by the laws of that state to give it validity. And the purchaser, equally with the seller, is bound, under such circumstances, to know what these laws are, and to be governed thereby. The law will never presume that parties intend to violate its precepts." Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. 607, 628, 9 L. Ed. 246.

A bona fide purchaser, who pays the purchase money to a person authorized to sell, is not bound to look to its application, whether in the case of lands charged in the hands of an heir or devisee with the payment of debts, or lands devised to a trustee for the payment of debts. But if the money be misapplied by the devisee or trustee, with the co-operation of the purchaser, he remains liable to the creditors for the sum so misapplied. administrator sells property which had been conveyed to him for the purpose of securing a debt due to his intestate's estate, his failure to account for the proceeds does not entitle the heirs to claim the property from a purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration. Nor can the heirs, in such a case, claim land which has been taken up by the administrator as vacant land, and for which he obtained a patent from the United States, although such land was included in the conveyance to him.[9]

k. Effect of Informalities in Deed.—Where an executrix had sold lands but did not say in the conveyance that the consideration passed to her in her representative character, it was held that the deed would not be upset.[10]

l. Effect of Failure to File and Record Report of Sale.—The fact that the report of a sale by an administrator was not properly filed, approved or recorded was held immaterial to the title of a purchaser at such sale.[11]

m. Effect of Additional Sale by Heirs.—The land being in fact sold by the executor, claiming a right to do so under the will, and the purchase money being received by him, he is responsible to the cestui que trusts for the money thus received. The reception of an additional sum, as purchase money, by them, with the reservation of the right to sue the executor, is not an avoidance of the first sale by the executor.[12]

n. Priorities between Rights of Purchaser and Judgment Lien.—Where one bought land, at a sale by the orphans' court, upon which there was a lien of a judgment obtained against the intestate during his lifetime, it was held that such a purchaser held the lands discharged from such lien.[13]

o. Setting Aside Sale[14]—(1) Setting Aside in Federal Courts.—The jurisdiction of the federal courts to set aside sales of estates will be found treated elsewhere.[15]

(2) Laches.—Where there had been an unreasonable delay in seeking to set aside the sale, equity will not rescind the sale.[16]

(3) Limitation of Actions.—When fraud is alleged as a ground to set aside a title, the statute does not begin to run until the fraud is discovered, and in such a case, the bill must be specific in stating the facts and circumstances which constitute the fraud, and also as to the time it was discovered.[17] The statute of California which provides that no action for the recovery of real estate sold by order of a probate court "shall be maintained by any heir or other person claiming under the intestate," unless brought within three years after such sale, applies to the administrator who made the sale as well as to the heirs. When by lapse of time the action is barred against him, it is also barred against them, because the right of possession is, by the law of California, in him, and he represents their interests.[18] By the Code of Mississippi of 1871 it was provided that no action could be brought to recover property sold by an administrator, by order of the probate court, on the ground of invalidity of the sale, unless such action be brought within one year "if such sale shall have been made in good faith, and the purchase money paid." It was held, that this statute did not apply where one bought in at an administrator's sale but, being a creditor of the estate, gave a receipt for that amount.[19]

(4) Parties.—The fact that the creditor of an estate may have been a party to a confirmation proceeding will not preclude him from suing in equity to set aside the sale for fraud, he being ignorant of such fraud.[20]

(5) Repayment of Purchase Money.—A bought real estate on credit, giving a mortgage on the land for the purchase price. A then died, and his land was sold by the probate court and the money obtained used to pay off the mortgage. It was then found that the sale was void, so the heirs claimed the property. It was held, that where no repayment or tender of payment of purchase price was made to the purchaser at the sale, there could be no recovery of the land by the heirs.[21]

(6) Purchasers Considered as Holding in Trust.—Where a deed was sought to be set aside by charging fraud against the executors and a notice of the fraud to the purchasers, they must be considered, though the sales had the forms of law, as holding the property in trust. The powers of a court of chancery are required to do complete justice between the parties.[22]

p. Liability of Purchasers to Contribution.—Where one died intestate, but did not have sufficient personal estate to pay his debts and the court ordered a sale of part of real estate to be applied to payment of debts, and there was a division of the remainder among the children, and the eldest son sold his share to a bona fide purchaser, and it was then discovered that all the debts had not been paid, it was held, that the bona fide purchaser from the eldest son was bound to contribute to the other heirs whose lands had not been sold.[23]

U. Payment of Debts—1. What Law Governs.—The effects of an intestate, in the hands of the administrator, are to be distributed among his creditors according to the laws of the situs of the property.[24]

2. Time of Payment.—The duty of the administrator arises to pay the debts when their existence is discovered.[25]

3. Presentment of Claim.—Unless some satisfactory excuse be given, the failure of the creditor to present his claim, in the mode and time prescribed by law, will cause the rejection of such claim.[26] Where one has a debt against an estate, he may claim the same in a state where there is ancillary administration of the estate, though he be not a resident there, or he may look to such assets as he can find in the state of primary administration whether originally found there or brought from the state of ancillary administration.[27]

Ed. 532, in deciding which point the court said: "The administration of the estate of Gordon, in California, under the orders of the probate court of San Francisco, was merely ancillary; the primary administration was that of the testator's domicile, Minnesota. Chapman was not a citizen of California, nor resident there; he was no party to the administration proceedings; he was not bound to make himself such. If he had chosen he could have proved his claim there and obtained payment, but he had the right to await the result of the settlement of that administration, and look to such assets of Gordon as he could subsequently find in Minnesota, whether originally found there or brought there from California by the executors or legatees of Gordon's estate. The assets in California finally distributed there, and brought into Minnesota by the executor or by any legatee, remained assets in Minnesota for the payment of any unpaid creditors choosing that forum. Such assets were impressed with a trust

4. Effect of Allowance.—A claim admitted by the administrator, and allowed and classified by the probate court, has the dignity and effect of a judgment.[28]

5. What Constitute Debts of the Estate—a. Claims Satisfied by Will.—A debt of the decedent which has been satisfied by the terms of his will cannot be set up by the heirs to defeat the rights of the creditors.[29]

b. Trust Funds Invested by Decedent.—The estate will be held liable for the amount of trust funds held by the decedent and not accounted for, together with interest, less any amounts advanced to the legatees.[30]

c. Profits Wrongfully Withheld by Testator.—Mesne profits of an estate wrongfully held by the testator constitute a claim against the estate.[31]

d. Claims Based upon Unperformed Covenants.—Where there was no evidence that the condition precedent of a covenant made with a testator had been complied with, either in the lifetime of the testator or since his death, a claim based upon such covenant was properly rejected.[32] On a covenant to pay rent, reserved by a deed granting real estate, subject to the rent, the personal representatives of the covenantor are liable for the nonpayment of the rent, after an assignment, although there may also be a good remedy against the assignee.[33]

e. Interest and Discounts on Negotiable Paper.—Interest and discounts on notes made by the decedent constitute claims against the estate.[34]

It is upon the ground of such a trust that the jurisdiction of courts of equity primarily rests in administration suits, and in creditors' bills brought against executors or administrators, or after distribution against legatees, for the purpose of charging them with a liability to apply the assets of the decedent to the payments of his debts."

29. O. J. M., who owned large estates in Louisiana, died in 1860, leaving the minor children of his deceased daughter J M., and a miror grandson of his deceased daughter A. M., as his heirs. His wife had died in 1844, and a large portion of the property was community property in which she was entitled to a half interest. Before the death of his daughter J. M. by an act of sale and donation, O. J. M. transferred or attempted to transfer to his said daughter J. M. three-fourths of all his property and to the minor grandson of his deceased daughter A. M. one-fourth of the property intended thus to be in lieu of their interests in the community property of his deceased wife and the portion that he desired them to have in his own estate. And later, seemingly under an apprehension that the previous donation might not be valid, he made a will which contained substantially the same provisions. The representatives and heirs of O. J. M. went into, or continued in, possession of his property in accordance with his will. In 1869, however, a sale was made by the executor of all the lands at the instance of a creditor, which on the application of other creditors was set aside as a fraudulent and sham sale in Johnson v. Waters, 111 U. S. 640, 28 L. Ed. 547, and remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings that all creditors of the estate might come in and prove their debts. In these proceedings the claims of the said heirs to the community property and for improvements were set up as debts against the estate. It was held that any debt which may have been due from O. J. M. to his heirs was more than satisfied by their receiving that portion of the property which was intended by him as a satisfaction and by the rents and revenues they received after his death; and that in place of said supposed claims the said heirs were entitled to have and retain a certain portion of said O. J. M.'s estate free from the claims of his creditors, which portion was designated, the remaining portion to the subject to the payment and satisfaction of the debts due the other creditors. Where A held property of a testator and turned over a certain amount to the guardian of the legatees under the will but the remainder was not accounted for, A having died, his estate was held liable for the amount which was not accounted for with interest, less the amount paid by A to B, one of the legatees. f. Mortgages.—A mortgage given by the decedent constitutes a debt of the estate.[35]

g. Improvements.—Where a bill was filed claiming specific performance of an alleged contract to convey a house and lot for the benefit of the wife of the complainant, the latter having expended a large sum of money in improving the property, in the expectation that it would be conveyed as required by the bill; the court not considering that sufficient evidence of an agreement to convey the property was given, ordered that it should be sold, and out of the proceeds, that the advances made by the complainant should be repaid; the property sold for a sum far less than the amount expended; it was held, that the balance unpaid, after the sale, was not a debt due by the estate of the father of the wife, and could not be claimed of his representatives.[36]

h. Damages for Torts.—As to whether causes of action founded upon torts constitute a claim against the estate, see the title ABATEMENT, REVIVAL AND SURVIVAL, vol. 1, p. 22.

i. Taxes.—Where a nonresident invests personal property in a state, the investment being secured by bonds and mortgages, the taxes are a claim that may be proven against decedent's estates subject to the statute of limitations in the state taxing.[37]

6. ORDER OF PAYMENT—a. What Law Governs.—In the administration of the estate of a deceased person, the assets are always distributed according to the dignity of the debt, as regulated by the law of the country where the representative of the deceased acts, and from which he derives his powers; not by the law of the country where the contract was made.[38]

b. Power of Executor to Grant Preference.—The executors have an unquestionable right, generally speaking, to give a preference to any creditor of the same degree.[39]

c. Claims by Executor or Administrator.—If the executor has a claim on the estate of the deceased, it stands on an equal footing with other claims of the same nature.[40] The executor or administrator cannot discharge his own debt, in preference to others of superior dignity; though he may give the preference to his own over others of equal degree. In some of the states, this rule would not apply, as there is no difference made in the payment of debts between a bond and simple contract.[41] By extinguishing his right of action, the receipt of assets by an executor extinguishes a debt due from the estate to him.[42] That an administrator or executor may retain the amount of his debt, out of the assets in his

This doctrine is sanctioned in all the cases referred to, and is believed to be nowhere controverted. But this right of retainer must be exercised, under certain restrictions. The executor or administrator cannot discharge his own debt, in preference to others of superior dignity; though he may give the preference to his own over others of equal degree."

hands, is a principle which grew out of the necessity of the case. If such a right did not exist, the executor or administrator would be, in many cases, without remedy. The principle was intended for his benefit, and not to mislead or entrap him. It is a right which he may postpone, if, in doing so, he does no injury to the estate; and such a question can only be made by the devisees or their heirs. If he shall pay debts, not on interest, and permit his own to run on interest, it may become a question whether he be entitled to interest. But his right to pay himself, so long as assets shall remain in his hands, is clear.[43]

d. Foreign Judgments.—In the payment of the debts of a testator, or intestate, the judgment of another state, whatever may have been the subject matter of the suit, cannot be put upon the footing of judgments rendered in the state of the principal administration; it can only rank as a simple contract debt, in the appropriation of the assets of the estate of a deceased person to the payment of debts.[44]

7. PAYMENT BY REPRESENTATIVE WITH PERSONAL FUNDS.—If the personal representative has paid the debt of the estate from his own funds, he becomes a creditor of the estate and may resort to the trust fund to satisfy the debt.[46]

8. RENEWAL OF NOTES.—Where notes of the decedent are retired by the substitution of notes by the executor, such substitution is only by way of renewal and cannot be construed as an extinguishment of the debt, unless there be such clear and satisfactory evidence as to leave no reasonable doubt that such was the intention of the parties.[47]

9. BENEFIT OF INVENTORY.—In Louisiana the benefit of inventory is the privilege which the heir obtains of being liable for the charges and debts of the succession only to the value of the effects. The heir is bound only to the amount the estate was worth at his ancestor's death; of course he is bound to that extent.[48]

10. RIGHTS OF HEIR AB INTESTATO UNDER PORTO RICAN PRACTICE.—By the law of Porto Rico an heir of an intestate may claim against one designated heir ab intestato, any time within five years after designation, but where the heir designated, within five years after designation, collects money due the estate, the payment being made in good faith and without knowledge of other heirs and under order of the court, it will discharge the debtor, even though there be other heirs; but if the debtor have legal notice from the court of others not originally designated applying for recognition as heir ab intestato, then payment to the heir already designated would not discharge the debtor but he would be liable to the one applying for recognition if designated, for his proportionate share; and if the debtor made payment before the debt is due, to the heir originally designated, but after another has applied for recognition, it should be left for the jury to determine whether or not the debtor had notice of the others rights.[49]

12. Enforcement of Claims—a. Conditional Rights.—Where a husband agrees in his marriage settlement to give his wife a sum equal to that which she would obtain by devise from her father, this cannot be enforced against the husband's estate until the amount is ascertained, an appraisal or valuation not being sufficient.[50]

b. Proceedings against Heirs, Devisees or Legatees.—A proceeding will lie against devisees or legatees, if the executor has no assets.[51] If the personalty be insufficient to discharge the debts, and it be necessary to resort to the realty of the deceased for that purpose, a proceeding against the heir must be instituted In that event, whatever has been done by the administrator is without effect, as to the property sought to be charged. A judgment against the administrator is not evidence against the heir. The demand must be proved in all respects as if there had been no prior proceeding to effect its collection, and the statute of limitations may be pleaded with the same effect as if there had been no prior recovery against the personal representative.[52]

c. Form of Judgment.—Under the code of practice in Louisiana, a suit may be brought and distinct judgments rendered against a defendant, as administratrix of her deceased husband, as a widow in community, and as tutrix of his minor heirs.[53]

The mortgage law of Porto Rico, which provides that "property acquired through inheritance or legacy cannot be cleared until five years have elapsed from the date of their record in the registry," does not require that the collection of debts shall be delayed for five years or that they shall be paid to the legally declared heir or heirs, upon pain of being required to respond to others who may within the limitation permitted establish a right to the property; and the effect of the proceedings under §§ 1000, 1001, of the Porto Rico code to appoint the heirs ab intestato, is to permit the heirs appointed, to receive and collect the estate. 55. Suit in equity.—"That a single creditor may maintain a bill against an administrator of a deceased debtor, for a discovery of assets and the payment of his debt, there can be no doubt. That, in some cases, he may join with the administrator a third person, who is in possession of property which is amenable to the payment of the debt, is also clear. The instances in which it has been actually held that such third person might be joined, are chiefly cases of collusion between the administrator and the third person possessed of assets, insolvency of the administrator, and where the third person was the surviving partner of the deceased. Utterson v. Mair, 2 Ves. 95; Alsager v. Rowley, 6 Ves. 748; Burroughs v. Elton, 11 Ves. 29; Gedge v. Traill, 1 Russ. & M. 281; Long v. Majectre, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) Ch. 306. But it will be found that the equitable right of the creditor to join a third person, and have a discovery and an appropriation of assets held by him, has never been limited to these particular cases." Hagan v. Walker, 14 How. 29, 33, 14 L. Ed. 312.

"The authorities are abundant and well settled that a creditor of a deceased person has a right to go into a court of equity for a discovery of assets and the payment of his debt. When there, he will not be turned back to a court of law to estabnot exercise its jurisdiction to reach the property of a debtor applicable to the payment of his debts, unless the debt be clear and undisputed, and there exists some special circumstances requiring the interposition of the court to obtain possession of, and apply the property. This rule should be insisted upon with rigor whenever the property sought to be reached constitutes assets of a deceased debtor, which have already been subjected to administration and distribution; and some satisfactory excuse should be given for the failure of the creditor to pre-lish the validity of his claim. The court being in rightful possession of the cause for a discovery and account, will proceed to a final decree upon all the merits." Kennedy v. Creswell, 101 U. S. 641, 645, 25 L. Ed. 1075.

"In the court of chancery, executors and administrators are considered as trustees, and that court exercises original jurisdiction over them, in favor of creditors, legatees, and heirs, in reference to the proper execution of their trust. A single creditor has been allowed to sue for his demand in equity, and obtain a decree for payment out of the personal estate without taking a general account of the testator's debts." Green v. Creighton, 23 How. 90, 106, 16 L. Ed. 419, citing Hagan v. Walker, 14 How. 29, 14 L. Ed. 312.

"A court of equity will sustain a bill against executors, because they are considered as trustees for the creditors and representatives of the deceased, and are liable to account; especially, where they are executors of several copartners; and because the court may compel an equitable distribution." Telfair v. Stead, 2 Cranch 407, 416, 2 L. Ed. 320.

"If an executor shall have distributed the estate of his testator, the creditor has an action at law against him, and he has his remedy against the legatees; the creditor has no action at law against the legatees. Yet it has never been understood, that the creditor is compelled to resort to his legal remedy. He may bring the executor and legatees both before a court of chancery, which court will decree immediate payment from those who are ultimately bound. If the executor and his sureties should be insolvent, so that a suit at law must be unproductive, the creditor would have no other remedy than in equity, and his right to the aid of that court could not be questioned. If doubts of his right to sue in chancery could be entertained, while the executor was solvent, none can exist, after he had become insolvent. Yet the creditor would have no legal claim on the legatees, and could maintain no action at law against them. The right of the executor, however, may, in a court of equity, be asserted by the creditor, and, as the legatees would be ultimately responsible for his debt, equity will make them immediately responsible." No doubt when an executor or administrator colludes with a fraudulent claimant against a decedent's estate, and refuses to take steps to resist the claim, any person interested in the estate may maintain an action against such fraudulent claimant and the executor or administrator for the purpose of contesting the claim. Bank v. Cooper, 20 Wall. 171, 174, 22 L. Ed. 273.

The courts of the United States, as courts of equity, have jurisdiction over executors and administrators, where the parties to the suit are citizens of different states, and this jurisdiction is not barred by subsequent proceedings in insolvency in the probate court of a state. In such a case, the courts may interpose in favor of a foreign creditor, to arrest the distribution of any surplus of the estate of a decedent among the heirs. Green v. Creighton, 23 How. 90, 16 L. Ed. 419.

"Thus it will be seen that under the decisions of this court, a foreign creditor may establish his debt in the courts of the United States against the representatives of a decedent, notwithstanding the local laws relative to the administration and settlement of insolvent estates, and that the court will interpose to arrest the distribution of any surplus among the heirs." Where there has been a fraudulent conveyance by an intestate, although the creditor has a remedy against the surety of the administrator by a suit at law upon the bond, yet he may also file a bill in chancery against all the parties who are concerned in the alleged fraud, and such other persons as are interested in the estate. McLaughlin v. Bank, 7 How. 220, 12 L. Ed. 675.

"By the decisions of the courts of Georgia, on the statute of 5 Geo. II, making lands liable to a fiere facias, it is not necessary that the heirs should be made parties. The lands are assets, until all the debts are paid. The executor of an administrator is not, as such, liable to a suit, on account of the original intestate; but is liable in equity for the property of the

sent his claim, in the mode prescribed by law, to the representative of the estate, before distribution.[56]

h. Limitation of Actions[57]—(1) Distinctions.—The distinction between ordinary statutes of limitation and statutes of administration of the estate of decedents limiting the time within which creditors must prove their claim, is pointed out in the respect that the latter are rules of property as well as statutes of limitation.[58]

(2) When Statute Begins to Run.—Where a nunc pro tunc order has been entered, the statute begins to run from the true date of entry.[59] By Arkansas statute it is provided that "all demands not exhibited to an executor or administrator before the end of two years from the granting of letters, shall be forever barred." This statute holds against claimants under disability of nonage, or otherwise, although the claim may have originated in consequence of a relation of trust.[60] If an act of limitations have a clause "saving to all persons non compos mentis, femes covert, infants imprisoned, or out of the commonwealth, three years after their several disabilities removed," a creditor, resident of another state, removes his disability by coming into the commonwealth, even for temporary purposes; provided, the debtor be at time within the commonwealth.[61] It has been held by the supreme court of Maryland that the act of 1715 does not apply to a claim by an executor against his estate, inasmuch as the executor cannot sue himself at law.[62]

(3) Who May Plead.—A mere administrator, not the donee of a power foreign to those which come within the scope of an executor's ordinary functions, cannot plead the statute of limitations to defeat a suit brought on a judgment, by a creditor seeking to charge the realty with his debt.[63]

(4) Period of Limitation.—An acknowledgment of the debt, by the personal representatives of the original debtor, deceased, will not take the case out of the statute of limitations.[64] Where the probate court is given the power to limit the time between certain periods within which claims against an executor or administrator must be made, his having once exercised that power by fixing a certain term, any extension of that term can only be had upon showing good original intestate which has come into his hands." Telfair v. Stead, 2 Cranch 407, 415, 2 L. Ed. 320.

59. When statute begins to run.—C recovered a judgment against A, in the supreme court of New York. Three years afterwards A, a citizen of Minnesota, died testate, directing in his will that S and X be executors. The will was proved in probate court of Minnesota. Most of A's estate was in California and proof of will and authenticated copy of Minnesota court was sent to California, and the estate wound up there. C did not make himself a party to the proceedings of the California court, but brought suit upon the New York judgment in the circuit court of the United States for the District of Minnesota against S and X as executors of last will and testament of A. S never took actual part in the distribution of A's estate. He was served with process and appeared and defended the suit denying that he was or ever had been executor of A's estate. But judgment was entered against S personally, which judgment was reversed as being erroneous in form. Whereupon the lower court entered a judgment nun pro tunc against S as executrix upon its former decision and findings. A bill was filed, within one year after the nunc pro tunc order, in the lower court to marshal the assets of estate of A, and it was held, that the suit was not barred by the statute of limitations of Minnesota regarding the time within which suit against a decedent's estate should be filed, the time beginning from the last nunc pro tunc order. cause before final settlement.[65] The statute of Georgia of March 16, 1869, requiring actions for the enforcement of rights of individuals under acts of incorporation or by operation of law, which accrued prior to June 1, 1865, to be brought before January 1, 1870, did not apply to claims against the estate of a deceased person, so as to exclude the time which a previous statute allowed to administrators to ascertain the condition of the estate, and to creditors to file their claims.[66] The 9th section of the act of assembly of North Carolina, passed in 1715, which directed that unless the creditors of deceased persons should make their claim within seven years after the death of the debtor, they should be barred, was repealed by the act of 1789, c. 23, notwithstanding the act of 1799, which declared the contrary.[67] Where an action was not brought until after the time limited by the order of the probate court for the filing, examination and allowance of claims against a decedent's estate, nor until after the examination and allowance of the administrator's final account, under the laws of Minnesota the official existence of the administrator as such had ceased and no action could be maintained against him.[68] It has been held that it would be attended with the most inconvenient and pernicious consequences, to determine, that a creditor could not compel a payment from his debtor's estate, nor even bring a suit against the executors, for a period of twelve months.[69]

(5) Binding Effect of State Laws on Federal Courts.—As to the binding effect of the state laws regulating limitations of actions against decedent's estates, as recognized in the federal courts, see the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 895.

V. Distribution—1. WHAT LAW GOVERNS.—It has long been settled, and is a principle of universal jurisprudence, in all civilized nations, that the personal estate of the deceased is to be regarded, for the purposes of succession and distribution, wherever situated, as having no other locality than that of his domicile and, if he dies intestate, the succession is governed by the law of the place where he was domiciled at the time of his decease, and not by the conflicting laws of the various places where the property happened at the time to be situated.[70] Where the law of a state providing that a wife should retain certain property in her own right, notwithstanding her coverture, went into operation before a daughter arrived at the age of eighteen years, the distribution to her will be considered to have been made under that law.[71]

2. ASSENT OF PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE.—The assent of an executor must be obtained before a legatee can take possession of a legacy. But this assent may be implied, and an assent to the interest of the tenant for life in a chattel enures to vest the interest of the remainder. Therefore, where a bill averred the possession of the subject of the legacy by the life tenant in pursuance of the bequest in the will, and this bill was demurred to, it is sufficient to raise a presumption that the possession was taken with the assent of the executor.[72]

3. Fairness Required.—Personal representatives are under obligation to dispose of the property vested in their hands according to the express will of the testator, and they are not at liberty to act in the interests of one legatee as against those of another.[73]

4. Time of Distribution.—The executors have no power to distribute the property before the happening of contingencies mentioned in the will.[74]

5. Medium of Payment.—It has been held that the decree of a probate court directing the payment of distributive shares in Confederate bonds, was a nullity and afforded no protection to the executor in the courts of the United States.[75]

6. Transmutation by Declaration of Intention.—Transmutation will not be affected by the mere making of a written instrument setting aside a bond and mortgage to meet a particular legacy, in the absence of the consent of the legatees or an order of court.[76]

7. Indemnity.—Where an heir at law took an intestate's lands at a valuation, and the orphans' court only required him to give bonds to those entitled, under the act of assembly, to a distributive share, it was held that such practice was illegal and improper and that the court should, instead of bonds, which are a mere personal security, take recognizances, by which the lands themselves would be bound for the distributive shares.[77]

8. Partial Distribution.—Where partial distributions were charged against specific legacies and not against the legatee's interest in the residue, it was held that there was no ground for complaint.[78]

9. Liability of Legatee for Excess of His Share in Mortgage Assigned Him.—In the distribution of the estate of a deceased person, an assignment, to one of the distributees, of a mortgage which is for a greater sum than his distributive share, does not make him responsible to the executors for the difference between his share and the nominal amount of the mortgage, in case the mortgaged premises sell for less than the amount of his share, where the distributee has, with proper diligence, and in good faith, subjected the mortgaged property to sale, and has not bound himself absolutely for the nominal sum secured by the mortgage.[79]

10. Payment to Foreign Guardian.—A transfer of property of a testator in the District of Columbia to one, as administrator or representative of his minor children, residing in Louisiana, who by that law was empowered to hold, was held valid and binding when there were no creditors, even though the testator was domiciled in Virginia, and if the property had been administered in Virginia, regardless of the power of the father under the Louisiana law he would not be entitled to receive or remove the property from the jurisdiction without an order made by a Virginia court and upon the giving of satisfactory security.[80]

G. and J. during the lifetime of C. by a written instrument, set apart a bond and mortgage to be held by them as executors under the will, in trust, from which to collect the interest on the $4,000, which at the time of the execution of the paper had been overdue more than seventeen months. None of the legatees under the will consented to the setting apart of the bond and mortgage, nor was there any order from the court. Held, that the written instrument, even though put on record, amounted to no more than if they had retained the bond and mortgage, it was revocable at any time, and did not amount to the decisive and irrevocable act which must exist to have the effect to transmute property. 11. Receipt or Release by Distributee.—Where a legatee, laboring under undue influence, gives a receipt or release of his interest in the estate without any consideration, such release will be set aside in equity.[81]

12. Enforcement of Distribution.—A court of chancery, as an incident to its power to enforce trusts, and make those holding a fiduciary relation account, has jurisdiction to compel executors and administrators to account and distribute the assets in their hands.[82] Where a creditor seeks the aid of a court of equity for the distribution of an estate, the existence of an undisputed debt by the deceased must appear.[83] In suit brought against executors to obtain payment of legacies bequeathed in a will, it was held that the residuary legatees were not necessary parties.[84] Where there was a suit for the distribution of a fund, it was held that all who participated in the fund ought to be made parties to the suit.[85] Where one was suing an administrator for a legacy, and creditors and persons claiming as heirs at law had already filed bills against the administrator, it was held that the creditors and heirs at law should be joined as defendants with the administrator.[86] In a suit in the circuit court of the United States by a distributee of the estate of a decedent to recover a distributive share, the mere

It was held that this amounted simply to a gift to the administrators for the benefit of the other legatees whose only claim rested on the bounty of the testator, the court in passing upon this point saying: "Courts of equity view such transactions with distrust, and if the circumstances indicate that the trustee has dealt with the beneficiaries unjustly, will not hesitate to set them aside. The absence of any adequate consideration in itself raises a presumption of unfairness which the trustee is bound to repell." See, also, the titles GIFTS; TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES; UNDUE INFLUENCE.

In Glover v. Patten, 165 U. S. 394, 402, 41 L. Ed. 760, the court said: "The second assignment, that there is a nonjoinder of necessary parties defendant, is based upon the theory that there are three legatees interested in the estate to the amount of $45,000; that there is no averment that these legatees have been paid, or can be paid in full, out of the personal estate if the claims of the complainants and those of other creditors are satisfied. There is nothing in this objection. The complainants do not sue as executrices, but expressly aver that they bring the suit 'in their own right' as creditors of their mothers' estate, and for the purpose of establishing their debt. To such a suit other creditors are not necessary parties. The case of Dandridge v. Washington, 2 Pet. 370, 377, 7 L. Ed. 454, is directly in point. This was a suit brought by the plaintiff against the executors of the will of Mrs. Martha Washington to obtain payment of legacies bequeathed to him in her last will. In reply to an objection that the residuary legatees under the will should have been made parties, Mr. Chief Justice Marshall observed: 'They have undoubtedly an interest in reducing the sum to be allowed out of it to the complainant, but they have the same interest in reducing every demand on the estate. Whatever remains sinks into the residuum, and that residuum is diminished as well by the claims of creditors and specific legatees as by this. In all such cases the executors represent the residuary legatees and guard their interests. It is a part of that duty which requires them to protect the interests of the estate. In such suits the residuary legatees are never made parties. To require it would be an intolerable burden on those who have claims on an estate in the hands of executors.' If this be the law with respect to residuary legatees, who are necessarily and directly interested in defeating every other claim against the estate, with much greater force is the rule applicable to specific legatees, who are in much less danger of being affected by the allowance of other claims. That such legatees need not be joined is as clearly settled as that other libelants need not be joined as respondents in a suit in admiralty to establish a claim against a vessel, although they may be admitted to defend."

fact that the administrator is ordered to account before a master does not make parties all who were entitled to distribution, nor authorize a decree in their favor. If such persons do not appear before the master, no decree can be made for or against them, because they would not be bound thereby. If they should appear and claim an interest, if there are controverted matters between them and the administrator outside of the mere accounting to be made by him, this can only be decided on proper pleadings and regular hearing by the court. A bill which seeks to set aside a fraudulent receipt obtained by an administrator from one distributee, and to recover the amount coming to that distributee, is not a suit in which all other persons interested in the estate can be heard unless they are made parties, or make themselves parties to the suit in some appropriate mode.[87] Where the executor paid legacies to persons who had occupied property, which, it was alleged, belonged to the deceased, and the occupiers claimed to hold it in consequence of an uninterrupted possession of twenty years, the justice of their claim could not be tried in a collateral manner, by objecting to this item of the executor's account, on the ground that he should have set up the claim for rent in set-off to the legacy.[88] Under the laws of some jurisdictions, the executor has a right to refrain from pleading the statute of limitations when sued, and to pay a judgment thus obtained against him. The judgment, at all events, must stand good until reversed.[89] As to enforcement of distribution in federal courts, see the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 895.

13. CONCLUSIVENESS OF DISTRIBUTION.—A decree of a court of competent jurisdiction awarding a sum in the hands of an administrator to distributees, cannot be attacked collaterally.[90] The payment of a legacy to an innocent party who takes the same without knowledge of the fact that the funds so received are being misapplied by the executor, is conclusive as against a third person who may have suffered loss by reason of the payment of the legacy.[91] In the distribution of a common fund amongst the several parties interested, an absent party, who had no notice of the proceedings, and who was not guilty of willful laches or unreasonable neglect, will not be concluded by the decree of distribution from the assertion of his right by will or petition against the trustee, executor, or administrator; or, in case they have distributed the fund in pursuance of an order of the court, against the distributees.[92]

In Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. 532, 570, 9 L. Ed. 522, approved in Bank v. Beverly, 1 How. 134, 147, 11 L. Ed. 75, it was held that: "From the nature of the expenditure for the daily expenses of the family, it could hardly be expected that a regular must account to his successor.[95] According to the English law, as administered by the ecclesiastical courts, the representative of a deceased administrator or executor intestate, are required to account directly to the persons beneficially interested in the estate, distributees, next of kin, or creditors, and the accounting may be made or enforced in the probate court, which is the proper court to supervise the conduct of administrators and executors.[96]

2. To What Court Made.—Regularly an accounting should be made to the court which grants the letters of administration.[97]

3. Compelling Accounting.—A court of chancery, as an incident to its power to enforce trusts, and make those holding a fiduciary relation account, has jurisdiction to compel executors and administrators to account and distribute the assets in their hands.[98] Where a suit in chancery was brought by legatees, claiming an account, in order to pay their legacies, and their bill was dismissed, without an account, the court held that such decree could only be supported by showing that there were in the hands of the administrator no assets which ought to have been applied to the purposes prayed in the bill.[99]

4. Charges.—The matters with which a personal representative will stand charged, will be found treated elsewhere.[1]

5. Credits—a. Commission.—On general principles, it would seem just and proper for courts to make some compensation to executors for such services as paying over legacies, no less than for paying debts. In the case of specific legacies, the trouble and risk are as great, if not greater, than in moneyed legacies, and it would be difficult to find elementary principles to justify commissions in one case, withholding them in the other.[2] Where the matter of commissions is submitted to the discretion of the court, its decision within its authority and jurisdiction, must be considered binding.[3] Where an administrator sued to recover a account would be kept; and especially, under the large discretion given by the testator in his will, in relation to his maintenance of his family."

If an administrator of a deceased partner and all the beneficiaries acquiesce in and consent to the continued employment of the partnership property in the business of the partnership subsequently carried on by the surviving partners, and there is no difficulty or dispute between the parties in interest as to the extent of their several shares, there is no imperative necessity for the administrator to present accounts to the probate court as long as it is deemed expedient to continue all the property in the joint business, as an account would have no practical value because no immediate settlement of the estate is proposed. The statutes of some states provide that where there are two or more administrators, and the letters of one are revoked, he must account to his coadministrator "as to an administrator de bonis non," and as, in the instance of the resignation of a sole administrator, he must account to his successor, so where there are more than one, he who resigns must account to his coadministrator, as such successor, who would in effect in such case be an administrator de bonis non. certain amount, which was granted, but the court also allowed the defendant to pay only a certain part and retain the amount he would be entitled to by distribution of the estate, it was held that the administrator could get commission on all recovered—that actually paid and that not paid.[4] The law does not forbid gratuitous services, even in fiduciary relations, and if acts purport to be done gratuitously, no claim for payment can be founded upon them at a later date.[5]

b. Reimbursement for Expenditures.—It being the business and duty of the representative to defend the will, he is entitled to a reasonable allowance for what he has to pay in doing so.[6] An amount paid by executors for the curtails and discounts on notes of their testator running in the banks, is properly allowed to their credit. These are debts due from the estate; and whatever payments are made, are for, and on account of, the estate.[7]

6. CONCLUSIVENESS OF SETTLEMENT—a. General Rule as to Collateral Attack.—The accounts of an administrator settled by the probate court cannot be collaterally attacked or questioned. They are conclusive, until impeached for fraud or mistake in a direct proceeding in equity, instituted for that purpose.[8]

b. Conclusiveness upon Issue of Devastavit Vel Non.—A final account settled by the administrator with the orphans' court, is not conclusive evidence in his favor, upon the issue of devastavit vel non.[9]

c. Conclusiveness as to Property Accidentally or Fraudulently Withheld.—It is well established that a settlement of an administrator's account, by the decree of a probate court, does not conclude as to property accidentally or fraudulently withheld from the account. If the property be omitted by mistake, or be subsequently discovered, a court of equity may exercise its jurisdiction in the premises, and take such action as justice to the heirs of the deceased or to the creditors of the estate may require, even if the probate court might, in such case, open its decree and administer upon the omitted property. And a fraudulent concealment of property, or a fraudulent disposition of it, is a general and always existing ground for the interposition of equity.[10]

When the minor arrived at the proper age, and the accounts came to be settled, the trustees ought not to have been charged with an amount of money, which the administrator trustee had paid himself as a commission, that item having been allowed by the orphans' court, its correctness could not be reviewed, collaterally, by another court. an executrix recorded in the probate court is competent evidence to prove the advertisement of a sale.[12]

f. Where Representative Charges Himself with Assets before Collection.—Nothing is more common than for an executor or an administrator to charge himself with debts due the estate before they are collected, and thus expedite a final settlement; it would be dangerous to hold that, as between the executor or administrator and the debtor, such a settlement was conclusive evidence of the actual payment of the debt and the discharge of the debtor.[13]

g. Settlement as Having Force and Effect of Judgment.—Undoubtedly, final settlements of administrators and executors, when adjudicated, have the force and effect of judgments as between the parties to such settlements.[14]

h. On Whom Binding.—An executor's settlement when adjudicated binds only the parties thereto.[15] Testamentary accounts confirmed by a probate court "in all respects in which they are not opposed," cannot be regarded as "duly homologated," so as to conclude persons whose opposition has never been withdrawn, but is still active.[16]

i. Direct Attack.—If one seeks to impeach ex parte settlements of accounts by executors, in the courts, it should be by a suit brought, recenti facto, within a reasonable time, and at most, within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations for actions at law on matters of account; or else assign some ground of exception or disability, within the analogy of the statute, to justify or excuse the delay; otherwise, it will be imputed to their voluntary laches, and relief will not be given by a court of equity.[17] Ex parte settlements of accounts by executors, in the orphans' court, being matters within the acknowledged jurisdiction of the court in the administration of estates, are prima facie evidence of their correctness, and the onus probandi is upon those who seek to impeach them.[18]

17. Effect of delay in attacking.—Lupton v. Janney, 13 Pet. 381, 10 L. Ed. 210.

The executor of L. filed his accounts in the orphans' court of Alexandria, in 1816 and 1818, and settled his final account in 1821; no exceptions were taken to the accounts; in November, 1831, a subpœna was issued against the executor, and in June, 1833, a bill was filed by the devisee and legatee, against the executor, the object of which was to surcharge and falsify the accounts filed and settled in the orphans' court; the bill did not charge the executor with fraud, but imputed negligence, which was alleged to amount to a devastavit; no reason was given, or facts stated, to excuse the long delay and laches in bringing the bill. Held, that the lapse of time from the settlement of the accounts of the executor was a bar to this proceeding. Lupton v. Janney, 13 Pet. 381, 10 L. Ed. 210.

Where an executor has settled what appears to be a final account, it must be a very strong case of fraud proved in such a settlement, or of clear accident or mistake, to make it just to reopen and revise the account after the lapse of twenty years and the death of the parties concerned. Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 233, 263, 12 L. Ed. 130.

18. Presumptions and burden of proof.—Lupton v. Janney, 13 Pet. 381, 10 L. Ed. 210.

19. Personal liability for assets.—De-istrator who stands charged on record as owing his estate money, which he ought to have put into his account and held as an identified fund, is liable for legal interest.[20] And in a state where the law allows ten per cent. per annum interest, a decree will not be reversed, because it allows against a fraudulent administrator eight per cent. interest with annual rests.[21] If the personal representative fail in the proper discharge of his trust, he is liable to the parties injured thereby, as all trustees are liable in such cases,[22] whether he himself gains by his misbehavior or not,[23] and his accomplices, if he has any, are held liable on the same principle and to the same extent.[24] Thus, the executor or administrator will be held personally liable where he grossly misconstrues the will,[25] wantonly neglects the property,[26] converts the estate to his individual use,[27] unreasonably calls in good investments,[28] takes insufficient secu-

As to liability of the executor or administrator in his representative capacity, see ante, "Liability for Assets Received," VI, S.

An executor having sold the lands of the estate and received the consideration, he must be responsible to the residuary legatees. But he is not responsible for more money than he receives, with interest, unless in case of very supine negligence or willful default. And where the claim is advanced that the funds derived from the sale are insufficient to cover the expenses, such claim has no weight when advanced by the representative of the executor, unless accompanied by an exhibit of the account. Taylor v. Benham, 5 How. 233, 275, 12 L. Ed. 130.

"When assets have been turned into money by an executor or administrator, he is bound to account, not for the identical money received, but for an equal amount; and if he fails to account for and pay over this equal amount he is liable in damages, which are measured by the proceeds of the assets so turned into money." United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 265, 27 L. Ed. 927.

24. Liability of accomplices.—McBurney v. Carson, 99 U. S. 567, 572, 25 L. Ed. 378; Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 334, 29 L. Ed. 901, in which case the court said: "We may even concede the doctrine declared by the court of appeals of Virginia, that a debtor who pays to an executor in depreciated currency a debt payable in gold or its equivalent, knowing at the time that the currency is not needed for the payment of debts or legacies, or other uses of the estate, and that the safety of the debt does not require its collection, may be also charged as a participant in the devastavit." See, generally, the title ACCOMPLICES AND ACCESSORIES, vol. 1, p. 63.

25. Gross misconstruction of will.—A testator provided in his will that if all his debts and legacies could be paid before certain bonds could be collected then what remained due on the bonds should go to certain persons; providing further that in case of accident by fire before his debts and legacies were paid, then the executors were to hold his estate together, until they could add $10,000 to what would be received from insurance. The debts and legacies could be paid before the bonds were collected, and then the buildings were destroyed by fire, and the executors applied the bonds towards raising the sum of $10,000. Held, that this was a misapplication of assets. Pray v. Belt, 1 Pet. 670, 679, 7 L. Ed. 309.

26. Wanton neglect of property.—The personal representative cannot wantonly neglect the property without incurring personal liability for the consequent depreciation. Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 333, 29 L. Ed. 901.

27. Converting estate to individual use.—Where the assets of the estate have been wrongfully and knowingly taken and converted to the individual use of the personal representative, he is personally liable for such funds, together with the usual rate of interest, without investigation into the question as to what profits he may have made. Harrison v. Perea, 168 U. S. 311, 323, 42 L. Ed. 478.

28. Unreasonable calling in of investments.—If the personal representative call in good investments when the money is not needed, he thereby renders himself personally liable. Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 333, 29 L. Ed. 901.

In many cases it has been held that the payment by the executor of his own private debt with the assets of the testator is a devastavit; that is, a wasting of the estate. There are, indeed, some exceptions to this, as where the executor has paid debts of the testator with his own money to the value of the assets used. But, beyond a few exceptions of this kind, such a use of the assets is considered entirely rity,[29] accepts payment in depreciated currency,[30] makes investments in unstable bonds,[31] accepts payment of debts for less than their face value,[32] unreasonably extends time of payment,[33] fails to pay debts when discovered,[34] prematurely distributes the estate,[35] or wrongfully obstructs the distribution thereof,[36] contracts in his own name,[37] fails to account for proceeds of sales,[38] or fails to file a tableau;[39] but the general rule is that a personal representative will not be subindefensible, and the party receiving them will not be permitted to retain them, on the ground that the transaction itself gives him notice of their misapplication, and thus necessarily involves him as a participator in the fraud. And the doctrine is supported by many authorities that where a party has reasonable grounds for believing that an executor intends to misapply them, or is in the very transaction converting them to private uses, such party can take no advantage from the transaction. Smith v. Ayer, 101 U. S. 320, 327, 25 L. Ed. 955.

29. Taking insufficient security.—An executor, who, by taking an inferior security, brings a loss upon his testator's estate, shall himself be liable. Hunter v. Bryant, 2 Wheat. 32, 42, 4 L. Ed. 177.

30. Accepting payment in depreciated currency.—The personal representative renders himself personally liable if he accepts the payment of debts in depreciated currency when better currency can be had, unless it can be advantageously used in meeting expenses, discharging debts, paying legacies, and the like. Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 333, 29 L. Ed. 901.

He may, however, take payment of a debt, when not secured, in the best money he can get, when its safety requires its collection. Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 333, 29 L. Ed. 901.

31. Investments in Confederate bonds.—It has been held that an executor was not discharged from his liability to legatees by having invested funds, pursuant to a statute of the state, and with the approval of the probate court by which he had been appointed, in bonds of the Confederate States, which became worthless in his hands. Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452, 476, 28 L. Ed. 751; Horn v. Lockhart, 17 Wall. 570, 580, 21 L. Ed. 657; McBurney v. Carson, 99 U. S. 567, 571, 25 L. Ed. 378; Baldy v. Hunter, 171 U. S. 388, 395, 43 L. Ed. 208; Knotts v. Stearns, 91 U. S. 638, 642, 23 L. Ed. 252; Alexander v. Bryan, 110 U. S. 414, 417, 28 L. Ed. 195.

But as to the rule where the representative, in the collection of assets, accepts such depreciated currency, see ante, "Accepting Depreciated Currency," VI, I, 3.

32. Accepting payment of debts for less than face value.—The personal representative by accepting payment of debts for less than the face value when the full amount can be recovered without unnecessary delay and expense, renders himself personally liable for any loss sustained by his action. Glasgow v. Lipse, 117 U. S. 327, 333, 29 L. Ed. 901.

33. Unreasonable extension of time of payment.—It be generally true, that the executor, who, by unreasonably extending time of payment, brings a loss upon his testator's estate, shall himself be liable. Hunter v. Bryant, 2 Wheat. 32, 42, 4 L. Ed. 177.

34. Failure to pay debts.—The duty of an administrator arises to pay the debts when their existence is discovered, and his bond is forfeited when that duty is disregarded. Green v. Creighton, 23 How. 90, 108, 16 L. Ed. 419.

35. Premature distribution.—If an executor shall have prematurely distributed the estate of his testator, the creditor has an action at law against him. Riddle v. Mandeville, 5 Cranch 322, 330, 3 L. Ed. 114.

36. Wrongful obstruction of distribution.—Where an administrator willfully obstructed the distribution of the assets of the estate and by his conduct rendered it necessary for one to bring suit to obtain possession of them, the necessity for commencing arose entirely out of his wrongful conduct, it was held that the administrator was responsible for the costs of the suit. Harrison v. Perea, 168 U. S. 311, 327, 42 L. Ed. 478.

A breach of administration bonds occurs where an administrator continues to hold in his hands sums of money belonging to the distributees of the intestate's estate, which he has been ordered to pay over by a court of competent jurisdiction. Stovall v. Banks, 10 Wall. 583, 588, 19 L. Ed. 1036.

37. Contracts in executor's own name.—An executor who covenants in his own name, and yet describes himself as executor, is personally liable, for the obvious reason that he substitutes himself for his principal. Duvall v. Craig, 2 Wheat. 45, 56, 4 L. Ed. 180.

38. Failure to account for proceeds of sale.—Where an administrator sells property which has been conveyed to him for the purpose of securing a debt due to his intestate's estate, his failure to account for the proceeds amounts to a devastavit. Long v. O'Fallon, 19 How. 116, 15 L. Ed. 550.

39. Effect of failure to file tableau.—Under the laws of Louisiana if the administrator or curator neglect or refuse to file a tableau of the estate, and obtain the order of the judge to make payment, he can be compelled to do so on the demand of the party interested, or in default thereof render himself responsible in his personal capacity, this procedure being as indispensable under the Louisiana law to jected to liability for losses which he could not foresee.[40] The liabilities of coexecutors will be found treated elsewhere in this article.[41]

2. PROCEDURE[42]—a. Judgment as Prerequisite.—At common law, an executor or administrator is not chargeable on a devastavit, until a judgment shall be obtained against him.[43]

b. Manner in Which Defenses Must Be Set Up.—An executor or administrator is bound to defend himself by legal pleading, and can have no relief in equity.[44]

c. Effect of Admission of Assets.—The executor's admission that he had assets may be taken against him for the purpose of charging him with a liability,[45] but it cannot serve him as evidence to prove the truth of his plea. His mere allegation cannot be received as proof of its own truth where the fact is directly in issue, and the burden of proof is on him.[46]

d. Effect of Plea of General Issue.—If an executor or administrator pleads only the general issue, and has a verdict against him, it is an admission of assets.[47]

e. Effect of False Plea in Bar.—If the executor or administrator file a plea in bar which he knows to be false, it is an admission of assets.[48] authorize a proceeding against the executor or administrator to make him personally responsible, as an action and judgment are necessary at common law to charge him with a devastavit. McGill v. Armour, 11 How. 142, 152, 13 L. Ed. 638.

40. Losses impossible to foresee.—Tate v. Norton, 94 U. S. 746, 750, 24 L. Ed. 222.

Prior to the Civil War an Arkansas administrator became possessed of a large estate of his decedent, consisting of lands, stock, slaves, and a small amount of money. He cultivated the land and had paid all the debts but one when the Civil War ensued. The state was a battle field. The slaves were sent to Texas, and the mules and other live stock were swept away in the conflict. The lands hardly paid the expenses of cultivating them, and finally the slaves as property were stricken out of existence. This involved an immense loss to the estate, and the administrator became wholly unable to pay the remaining debt. It was held that the calamity was unforeseen and one for which he was not responsible. Tate v. Norton, 49 U. S. 746, 748, 24 L. Ed. 222.

"The executor, who takes charge of the affairs of a man in trade, must, necessarily, on the winding up of his affairs, be allowed a reasonable latitude of discretion; and in general, where there is manifest fidelity, diligence and ordinary judgment displayed, this court will always, with some reluctance, enforce the rigid rules which courts have been obliged, for the protection of estates, to impose upon the conduct of executors." Hunter v. Bryant, 2 Wheat. 32, 42, 4 L. Ed. 177.

There can be no devastavit which will sustain an action against an administrator until he has violated an order of the probate court to pay creditors; and his accounts settled by that court cannot be collaterally attacked, but are conclusive, until, by a direct proceeding in equity instituted for that purpose, they are impeached for fraud or mistake. A bill filed by A. for himself and other creditors against B., executor of C., and the devisees of the latter, alleged that C. was indebted to him, that the personal assets were insufficient to pay the debts, and that B. was paying some of them in full and leaving others unsatisfied. It prayed for an account of the personal estate, the application thereof to the payment of the debt, and the discovery of the real estate whereof C. died seised. The defendants pleaded in bar that B. had in his hands assets sufficient to pay A.'s claim and all others. To this plea A. filed a replication. The proofs sustained the allegations of the bill, but showed those of the plea to be untrue. Held, that as by reason of B.'s admission of assets no discovery was required, a decree against him rendering him individually liable was proper. Kennedy v. Creswell, 101 U. S. 641, 25 L. f. Plea of Plene Administravit.—Plene administravit is doubtless a good plea, and, if sustained by sufficient evidence, it is a good defense; but the rule is, that the jury, under such a plea, if no devastavit is averred, must find the amount of the assets, if any, before any judgment can be rendered.[49] If the representative plead plene administravit, and on this plea assets are found to be in his hands, he is liable only to the amount of such assets.[50] It is not required that the plea should state with precision the assets remaining unadministered; and an executor or administrator would always incur great hazard, if he were required to state and prove the precise sum remaining in his hands, under the penalty of being exposed to a judgment for the whole amount claimed, whatever it might be. To state a full administration, without proving it, would be useless. The rule and usage, therefore, is, that if the plea of fully administered be found against the defendant, the verdict ought to find the amount of assets unadministered, and the defendant is liable for that sum only.[51] When an administrator pleads plene administravit, the plaintiff may admit the plea, and take judgment of assets, quando acciderint.[52]

g. Effect of Default Judgment.—If an executor or administrator suffer judgment by default, it is an admission of assets.[53]

h. Limitation of Actions.—A claim for damages for mismanagement of the estate would be subject to the operation of the statute of limitations.[54] The statute of limitations, if it runs at all in favor of an executor, should begin from the time of his final accounting, and any special excuse for not suing within the prescribed time should be pleaded.[55] Where the cestui que trusts resided in a foreign country, it was held that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until a demand was made upon the executor for the money, as his retaining it during that time was no evidence that he did not intend to account for it.[56]

i. Parties.—Where a citizen of one state applies to the federal courts in another state to enforce his claim against an administrator arising out of the wrongful administration of the estate, the other distributees need not be made parties.[57]

j. Form of Judgment.—As to whether the judgment should be de bonis testatoris or de bonis propriis, see post, "Form of Judgment," IX, B, 6.

VII. Administration Bonds.

A. Purpose.—The ordinary bond for faithful administration is not intended to transfer the jurisdiction of questions connected with such administration from the appropriate and exclusive sphere of the probate courts to that of the common-law courts, but is designed to secure the enforcement of the decrees of the probate court, after they are rendered against the executor or administrator, whereby his breach of duty is established in the proper forum.[58]

B. What Law Governs.—Where one has given bonds, as executor, under the laws of one state, it has been held that the obligations of the executor and his sureties was determined by what had been the judicial interpretation and administration of that law in such state, uncontrolled by any decisions of other courts elsewhere.[59]

C. Control.—The ordinary bond for faithful administration is subject to control of the court by which it was taken.[60]

D. Form.—The ordinary bond for faithful administration is taken by the probate court,[61] or in the name of the state, but is held for the security of the persons interested in the estate of the deceased.[62]

E. Property Covered.—Where the laws of a state provide that the heirs of an intestate may take the property and pay the debts, and in pursuance of their right the heirs withdraw property from the administrator and sell it, by that act the responsibility as to that property, ceases.[63]

F. Additional Bonds.—Where the orphans' court of the District of Columbia called for bonds to secure the amount with which an administrator then stood charged, and such as he might afterwards get, it was held that the bonds were properly taken out under act of 1846.[64]

G. Liability of Principal.—The guaranty of an administrator's bond is not against general wrongdoing on the part of the administrator, but simply against his misconduct while in charge of the property of the estate. When that property passes out of his custody, his liability and that of his sureties cease.[65] A principal in an administration bond may be liable beyond the stipulation of the instrument.[66] As to the personal liability of representatives, generally, see ante, "Personal Liability of Executor or Administrator," VI, X.

H. Action on Bond.—The jurisdiction of a court of equity to enforce an administrator's bond arises from its jurisdiction over administrators, its disposition to prevent multiplicity of suits, and its power to adapt its decrees to the substantial justice of the case.[67] An action at law on an administrator's bond, to recover the value of property unnecessarily and improperly sold by him, and the damages resulting from such sale, is not a bill for an accounting.[68] Regularly, a decree of the probate court against the administrator for an amount due, and an order for leave to prosecute his bond, are prerequisite to the maintenance of a suit thereon.[69]

BILITY.—The general rule is that the sureties in an administration bond are bound to the full extent to which their principal is bound.[70]

2. JUDICIAL ASCERTAINMENT AND JUDGMENT AS A PREREQUISITE OF ACTION AGAINST SURETY.—In some states until there is a judicial ascertainment of the default of the principal, the liability of the surety is not fixed, and it is only that ascertainment which creates a cause of action against the surety, and authorizes suit against him.[71] And after there has been a judicial ascertainment of a default by an executor, to be able to collect from the surety on the executor's bond, there must be a decree ordering payment and on which process can issue against the principal.[72]

3. BINDING EFFECT OF DECREE AGAINST PRINCIPAL.—Sureties in an administration bond are bound by a decree against their administrator finding assets in his hands, and nonpayment of them over, to the same extent to which the administrator himself is bound. They cannot attack collaterally a decree made against him on such a subject.[73]

4. WHERE PRINCIPAL ACTS IN MORE THAN ONE CAPACITY.—In case of a trust created by a will and no trustee appointed, the executor must act as such trustee, and his sureties are liable for his defaults, whether in one sphere of duty or the other.[74] Also, where one is administrator of one estate and executor of another, his sureties on his administration bond are not liable for waste committed by him as executor, and even though the deceased persons were partners.[75]

5. EXTENT OF LIABILITY AS REGARDS MEDIUM OF PAYMENT.—Where an Alabama probate decree ascertained a distributee's share to be so much and ordered the executor to make payment in Confederate bonds, it was held that, since this was no direction to pay in lawful money of the United States and only an order to turn over the bonds, the executor could not be sued to pay in anything but the bonds, hence the surety could not be sued to pay in lawful money of the United States.[76]

6. DISCOVERY.—Where the original debtor and his surety are both dead, insolvent, and a portion of the assets of the estate of the latter can be traced to the possession of his administrator and his surety, the power of a court of 70. Liability of sureties.—Stovall v. Banks, 10 Wall. 583, 588, 19 L. Ed. 1036.

A principal in an administration bond may be liable beyond the stipulation of the instrument, independently of them, but so far as his liability is in consequence of the bond, and by force of its term, his surety is bound with him. There may be special defenses for a surety arising out of circumstances, but in their absence, whatever concludes his principal as an obligor concludes him. Stovall v. Banks, 10 Wall. 583, 588, 19 L. Ed. 1036.

And failure to account for proceeds of property sold, which was conveyed to him to secure a debt due his intestate's estate, renders the sureties liable as well as the administrator himself. Long v. O'Fallon, 19 How. 116, 15 L. Ed. 550.

equity is required to call for a discovery of the amount and nature of the assets in hand.[77]

7. Sureties Holding Claims against the Estate.—Where sureties on an administrator's bond, held claims against the estate, and the heirs withdrew property from the possession of the administrator and sold it, the purchaser assuming the payment of debts and the administrator became executor of the estate of the purchaser, it was held that the sureties were not obliged to enforce their claims against the estate of the purchaser, but could go immediately against whatever was left of the estate of the original debtor.[78]

8. Where Additional Bonds Required.—Where, under the act of 1846, additional bonds were called for by the orphans' court of the District of Columbia to secure the amount with which an administrator then stood charged, and such as he might afterwards get and they were accepted and approved by the court for that purpose, the sureties being fully aware of the state of the account which the administrator had filed, the sureties were answerable for the administrator's waste, unless there existed something else in case to relieve them.[79] But when other sureties are called for by the orphans' court, under the third section of the act of February 20, 1846, and are given, they do not bear the same relation to the administrator that his original sureties did, and they will be bound for the waste of their principal to the amount of the estate, or funds which he has charged himself by his return to the orphans' court, as administrator de bonis non, when it called for additional sureties, and for such as the administrator may afterwards receive.[80]

9. Agreements to Indemnify Surety.—Agreements by third parties to indemnify from loss a surety, who signs an administration bond under an arrangement whereby the estate is to be administered by them instead of the administrator appointed, are against the policy of law and illegal.[81] Where loss is sustained by a surety in an administration bond, who entered into the suretyship under a representation from a firm of which the administrator is a member, that they intended to take into possession of the partnership all the assets of the intestate, to make the administration a matter of partnership business and share as partners the gains and losses resulting from the administration, so that in signing the bond he would become the surety of the firm and not of the individual partner, it cannot be recovered by the surety from the firm.[82]

10. Limitation of Actions.—In Alabama in case of an executor's misfeasance or malfeasance, to bind the executor's surety, the bar in favor of the surety must be computed from the ascertainment of the default of the principal, and there must be something more than an auditing of accounts, or an ascertainment or judgment that a distributee's share is so much or that the distributee is entitled to so much, but there must be a decree ordering payment and on which process to collect can issue against the principal.[83]

11. Release or Discharge of Sureties.—Where the laws of a state provide that the heirs of an intestate may take the property and pay the debts, and in pursuance of their right the heirs withdraw property from the administrator and sell it, by that act the responsibility of the sureties on the administrator's bond, as to that property, ceases; and this release of liability is in no manner abridged by the fact that the administrator may thereafter, in his individual or in some other representative capacity, obtain the title or possession of the property thus removed from his custody as administrator.[84] Where several supposed sureties were discharged from liability on an administrator's bond because their names had been improperly signed, such discharge did not release the other sureties, where the bond was taken in good faith.[85] Where, under a power of attorney from the administrators of the estate of a decedent, one is authorized to collect money due the estate in another jurisdiction, and for that purpose takes out letters of administration therein, and on collection signs a receipt as attorney for money paid by himself as attorney for the administrators, the receipt is good, and the sureties on his administration bond remain no longer liable.[86]

J. Payment into Court of Money Recovered on Bond.—The money which may be recovered on the ordinary bond for faithful administration is ordinarily to be paid into the court by which it was taken, for distribution as assets of the estate, unless recovered to satisfy a particular judgment or decree.[88]

VIII. Resort to Court for Direction and Advice.

When in doubt as to the proper course he should pursue, the personal representative should seek the authority and direction of the proper court.[89] Where bills in equity are filed by executors for their protection, that they may have a construction of the will, and the direction of the court as to the disposition of property, courts from necessity, and in order to protect the trustee, are compelled to settle questions as to the validity and effect of contingent limitations in a will, even to persons not in esse, in order to make a final decree and give proper instructions in relation to the execution of the trusts.[90] And where an appropriation is made to a party for the benefit of others, and himself included, who, on obtaining payment of the sum appropriated, goes into a court of equity, seeking to have the fund distributed under its authority, stating all the facts, and while claiming the right to share in the distribution of the money, submits the whole question as to proper distribution to the court, the court has jurisdiction to determine as to the real meaning and proper construction of the act of congress.[91] Where executors resort to equity for advice and construction of a will, by reason of claims for estate made thereunder, they appear as complainants and make all of the legatees and distributees, or those claiming to be en-

A then collected the money and died without enough to pay what he had collected. Suit was then brought by the administrators of the decedent against the surety on A's bond. It was held that they could not collect, for A was their duly authorized agent and the money was placed in his hands with full power to receive it. Mackey v. Coxe, 18 How. 100, 104, 15 L. Ed. 299.

titled as such, parties defendant. They cannot make themselves defendants as trustees; or file a bill as complainants in double character and for different purposes and represent inconsistent interests. But they may, as executors and complainants, set forth whatever case exists, with all its questions and claims in which they may have inconsistent interests, officially and personally, bringing themselves before the court in every character in which they have an interest to assert or defend, and all others beneficially interested in the subject matter of the controversy.[92]

IX. Actions by and against Executors or Administrators.[93]

A. Actions by Executors or Administrators—1. CAPACITY TO SUE—a. General Statement.—The right of the administrator or executor to sue in the ordinary courts of the country to enforce the payment of debts owing the decedent in his lifetime, and unpaid at his death, has always been recognized; and it is believed that no system of administering the estate of decedents has changed this principle.[94] Where the letters of administration state that the deceased, at time of death, had personal property in the state granting the letters, it shows prima facie authority in the administrator to sue in that state.[95] In an action brought by an executor or administrator touching the collection and settlement of the estate of the deceased, the letters issued to an executor or administrator are conclusive evidence of his right to sue for and receive whatever was due to the deceased. The letters are conclusive evidence of the probate of the will.[96]

b. Necessity for Probate.—Until probate of the will, and until letters testamentary are obtained, the executor cannot obtain any judgment, because it cannot appear that he is executor.[97]

c. Suits against Himself.—An executor cannot maintain a suit at law against himself.[98]

d. Effect of Substitution of Administrator as a Party.—The substitution in the appellate court of an administrator as a party in place of his intestate on the record, in a case pending on appeal, only authorizes the prosecution of that case in his name; it confers no right to prosecute any other suit in his name.[99]

e. As Affected by Removal.—By removal from office, the executor is as completely separated from the business of the estate as if he had been dead, and has no right to appear in or be a party in any court, to a suit which the law confided to the representative of the deceased.[1]

2. Capacity in Which Suit May Be Brought.—The declaration, in an action by an executor for the recovery of money received by the defendant, after the decease of the testator, may be in the name of the plaintiff, as executor, or in his own name, without stating that he is executor. The distinction is, that when an executor sues on a cause of action which accrued in the lifetime of his testator, he must declare in the detinet, that is, in his representative capacity only; but when the cause of action accrues after the death of the testator, if the money, when recovered, will be assets, the executor may declare in his representative character, or in his own name.[2] Where an administrator holds negotiable paper by virtue of a blank endorsement, he has the right, and the sole right, to say in which capacity he elects to hold, as owner, or as administrator, and consequently may sue as administrator or in his own right.[3] After judgment recovered in a suit by an administrator, the debt is due to the plaintiff in his personal capacity, and he may declare that the debt is due to himself.[4]

3. Averments as to Official Character.—That it is not necessary, in actions upon such judgments, that the plaintiff name himself as administrator, follows, from his not being bound to make profert of the letters of administration, and when he does so name himself, it may be rejected as surplusage.[5] Where a bill made no distinction between the two characters in which the executor acted, namely, as an executor proper, and as an executor having a power coupled with a trust, no objection being taken in the court below upon this ground, it was held that an amendment is imperatively necessary.[6]

4. Profert and Oyer of Letters.—The necessity of a profert of letters of administration depends upon the local laws of a state.[7] As a general rule at law, the defendant might crave oyer; but in equity they must petition that the will and letters testamentary may be produced, and it is no cause of demurrer that they are not set forth in the bill.[8] It has been held that unless oyer be craved and granted, the letters cannot be judicially examined.[9] It is not necessary, under the general issue, to produce letters testamentary. If the defendant in the cause wished to have them produced, he should have pleaded, and put the matter in issue.[10] In an action upon a judgment recovered in favor of an administrator, the plaintiff is not bound to make a profert of the letters of administration.[11] Upon the death of a plaintiff, and appearance of his executor, the defendant is not entitled to a continuance. But he may insist on the production of the letters testamentary, before the executor shall be permitted to prosecute.[12] But an objection for failure to make profert, if it has any foundation, is cured by the verdict.[13]

5. Objection for Want of Authority.—Whether the objection to the character of the plaintiff as administrator or executor should be taken by a plea in abatement or a special plea in bar, would appear to have been, at one time, a matter upon which there was some diversity of opinion. In some of the cases the language used would indicate that a plea in abatement was the only appropriate form in which the objection could be presented, whilst in other cases the objection taken by a special plea in bar has been sustained.[14] The plea of ne unques executor does not deny the cause of action, but only that he is one of the representatives of the testator.[15] A distinction seems to be taken between an action brought by a person who has no right to sue, and an action brought by a person capable of suing at the time, but who becomes incapable, while it is depending; in the first case, the plaintiff may be nonsuited at the trial; in the last, the disability must be pleaded.[16]

14. Matheson v. Grant, 2 How. 263, 264, 283, 11 L. Ed. 261.

Objection for want of authority.—The objection was sustained by the supreme court, when taken by a special plea in bar, in Fenwick v. Sears, 1 Cranch 259, 2 L. Ed. 101, and in Dixon v. Ramsay, 3 Cranch 319, 2 L. Ed. 453, already cited. In the latter case a foreign executor brought an action in the District of Columbia. The defendant pleaded that he had not obtained letters in the District or in the United States, and, on demurrer, the plea was sustained. There is no principle in pleading which should prevent the objection from being taken in this way. It is only in virtue of his representative character that the plaintiff is entitled to the matters in controversy, and a plea which denies to him that character is, in its nature, a plea in bar of the action. Noonan v. Bradley, 9 Wall. 394, 400, 19 L. Ed. 757.

Kane v. Paul, 14 Pet. 33, 10 L. Ed. 341, held that the certificate of the register of wills, annexed to the proceedings of the orphans' court of Maryland, granting letters testamentary to the executor, shows that the will had been proved, and that the letters had been granted; this is proof that the person holding the letters is executor, as far as the law requires it to be proved, in an action of assumpsit upon a cause of action which arose in the time of the testator or of the executor. On the plea of the general issue, in such an action, and even in a case where that plea raises the question of right or title in the executor, the certificate of probate and qualification meets the requisition. A judicial examination into their validity can only be gone into, upon a plea in abatement, after over has been craved and granted; and then, upon issue joined, the plaintiff's title, as executor or administrator, may be disputed, by showing any of those causes which make the grant void ab initio, or that the administration had been revoked.

In Noonan v. Bradley, 9 Wall. 394, 401, 19 L. Ed. 757, the court said: "The language used by this court in Childress v. Emory, 8 Wheat. 642, 5 L. Ed. 705, and Kane v. Paul, 14 Pet. 33, 38, 10 L. Ed. 341, cited by counsel, was not intended to deny that the objection to the authority of the plaintiff as administrator or executor could be taken by a plea in bar, but was only intended to indicate that the objection must be specially pleaded, and could not be urged on demurrer to the declaration for alleged insufficient exhibition of letters testamentary, when profert of the letters was made, or under a plea to the merits. In the first case the court observed that if the defendant desired to object to the letters as insufficient, he should have craved oyer of them, and had them brought before the court, that unless oyer was craved and granted, the letters could not be judicially examined, and then added that if the plaintiffs were not executors, that objection should have been taken by way of abatement, and did not arise upon a demurrer in bar. The point decided was that the objection could not be taken, when profert of letters was made, without oyer of them, and did not arise in such case upon demurrer. There was no question as to the form of the plea to be used, if the objection were presented in that way; and it is clear that no determination as to the form was intended. In the second case the plea was nonassumpsit, which admitted plaintiff's right to sue. It was objected that the letters testamentary appeared on their face to have been granted in violation of the law of Maryland, but the court observed that the plea was the general issue, and that a judicial examination into their validity could only be gone into upon a plea in abatement, meaning evidently that such examination could not be had unless the objection were taken by special plea. There was no intention on the part of the court to determine as to the form of the special plea in such cases."

6. Admission of Representative Character by Plea to the Merits.—In an action by a plaintiff as administrator, a plea to the merits admits the representative character of the plaintiff to the extent stated in the declaration, and if that statement is consistent with the grant of letters within the state, it also admits his right to sue in that capacity; but such a plea admits nothing more than the title stated in the declaration.[17]

B. Actions against Executors or Administrators—1. Action of Debt.—Debt will not lie against executors, on a simple contract of the testator. A demurrer should be sustained in such a case, but if issue is pleaded no objection can afterwards be made.[18] Debt, against an executor, should be in the detinet only, unless he has made himself personally responsible, as by a devastavit.[19]

2. Garnishment.—A garnishment will not lie against an executor.[20]

3. Joinder of Actions.—Where three persons had filed three bills against an administrator, one claiming as legatee, another as creditor, and another as heir at law, it was held that all three of the bills ought, if possible, to have been brought to a hearing at the same time, in the circuit court, in order that a final disposition may, at the same time, have been made of all of the questions arising in all of them.[21]

4. Where Administrator Is Limited to Plead What Intestate Could Have Pleaded.—In Virginia, if the defendant dies after interlocutory judgment and a writ of inquiry awarded, his administrator, upon scire facias, can only plead what his intestate could have pleaded.[22]

5. Limitation of Actions.—If an executor do not cause himself to be made party to a suit, brought in the lifetime, and in the name, of the testator, and pending at his death, it is to be considered as a voluntary abandonment of the action, so as to exclude the executor from the equity of the exceptions to the statute of limitations.[23] The New York statute, which declares that the time which shall have elapsed between the death of any person and the granting of letters testamentary or of administration on his estate, not exceeding six months, and the period of six months after the granting of such letters, shall not be deemed any part of the time limited by any law for the commencement of actions by executors or administrators, does not give the party claiming the benefit of its provisions both of the two periods of six months therein mentioned, but only such time, not exceeding six months, as elapsed after the death of the testator or intestate before the granting of letters, and the additional time of six months after the granting of letters.[24]

6. Form of Judgment.—The owner of property, or of money received by an administrator, may resort to the administrator in his personal character, and charge him, de bonis propriis,[25] with the amount thus received; he may do this, or proceed against him as executor or administrator, at his election.[26] Where there is nothing to show that the defendant has become personally liable, the judgment should be de bonis testatoris.[27] In common-law actions, it is not unusual to render two distinct judgments against an executor, one directing money to be levied of the goods of the deceased in his hands to be administered, and the other, if he has made himself personally liable, and there are not sufficient goods of the testator, directing the same money to be levied of his own proper goods. This is always the case with regard to the costs of the suit. In Louisiana, where the course of procedure is more flexible and more closely adapted to the nature of the case, it is not an unusual thing to render distinct judgments against the same person in several capacities.[28] Where a bill had been filed

"When the suit is against the defendant as executor, and no devastavit is alleged, it is clear that a judgment de bonis propriis is unwarranted, even if it appear that the defendant has received assets, unless it appears that no assets can be found." Smith v. Chapman, 93 U. S. 41, 43, 23 L. Ed. 795; Boyce v. Grundy, 9 Pet. 275, 288, 9 L. Ed. 127.

An executor or administrator is not liable to a judgment, beyond the assets to be administered, unless he pleads a false plea. If he fails to sustain his plea of plene administravit, it is not necessarily a false plea, within his own knowledge; and if it be found against him, the verdict ought to find the amount of assets unadministered, and the defendant is liable for that sum only. In such a case, the judgment is de bonis testatoris, and not de bonis propriis. Siglar v. Haywood, 8 Wheat. 675, 5 L. Ed. 713; Smith v. Chapman, 93 U. S. 41, 42, 23 L. Ed. 795.

On the hearing of the case of Boyce v. Grundy, at January term, 1830, on an appeal from the decree of the circuit court of West Tennessee, 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. Ed. 655, the decree of the circuit court was affirmed; by which, after decreeing a rescission of a contract made between Felix Grundy and James Boyce, the intestate, for the purchase, by the former from the latter, of a tract of land lying in the state of Mississippi; the court also decreed, that Robert Boyce, the administrator of James Boyce, of the goods, etc., of James Boyce, deceased, do pay the sum of $2,065.21, to be levied on the goods of the said James Boyce, in his hands to be administered; and execution issue therefor as at law; in this decree, nothing was said as to any allowance of damages or interest. A mandate was issued in the usual form, to the circuit court, to carry the same into effect; on filing the mandate in the circuit court, in 1830, the cause was referred to the clerk, as master, to take an account of the assets of James Boyce, in the hands of the administrator, who reported that no assets appeared in the hands of the administrator, but that Robert Boyce had, under an agreement with the appellee, received for rents of the land in Mississippi, before the 1st of January, 1824, $2,100, which, with interest thereon, $1,120, to the 1st of September, 1830, would amount to $3,220; and that the land in Mississippi was devised by James Boyce, the intestate, to his son Robert Boyce. The report was confirmed, except as to the $1,120 interest; the circuit court decreed, that the plaintiff recover of Robert Boyce, $2,100, with interest from the decree; to be levied on his proper goods and chattels; and for the balance due the plaintiff, $496.46, with interest, in case the same was not paid by him; the plaintiff had for the whole amount of the decree, a lien on the lands in the state of Mississippi; and that the same should be sold to satisfy the same, by the clerk of the court, acting as a commissioner. Held, that if the sum of $2,100, the rents of the lands in Mississippi, came into the hands of Robert Boyce, as assets of the estate of James Boyce, no decree could be had against him in his individual capacity, in this case; the rents, under the agreement, upon the rescission of the contract for the sale of the land, became virtually the money of James Boyce, the intestate, and were assets in the hands of his administrator; the decree should have been rendered against his defendant in the circuit court, as administrator, and not individually. Boyce v. Grundy, 9 Pet. 275, 9 L. Ed. 127.

"Even if it appear that an executor has received assets, still the judgment or decree should be against him, in his representative character, to be levied out of the assets in his hands, when no devastavit is averred and proved, unless it appear that no such assets can be found; in which event, the rule is, that the judgment may, if so ordered, be levied out of his own proper goods." Under the code of practice in Louisiana, a suit may be brought and distinct judgments rendered against a defendant, as administratrix of her deceased husband, as widow in community, and as tutrix of his minor heirs. Kittredge v. Race, 92 U. S. 116, 23 L. Ed. 488.

It is not error, under the law of Louisiana, to render an absolute judgment against a trustee of real estate, and after his death, administration had been granted to one who, on the petition of creditors, interested in the trust, was also appointed by the court, the substituted trustee, and the court went on to decree, that such person, as trustee, should execute certain conveyances; the decree was held to be invalid; the course of proceeding, being rather to make the decree against him, in the character of administrator, because he claimed, as administrator, under a title derived from the original trustee, and was the person designated by law to represent him; or that a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of revivor, should have been filed against the substituted trustee; in which all the proceedings should have been stated, and he required to answer the charges contained in the original and supplemental bill.[29] On only one ground may executors be permitted to defend an action of ejectment, and that is when they have an interest derived from the will, and so costs against an executor in such case should be de bonis propriis.[30]

7. Conclusiveness of Judgment.—If a judgment be rendered against one, as executor, who is not executor, it does not bind the estate of the testator.[31]

X. Limited and Special Executors or Administrators.

An executor may be appointed for one of several purposes, for a part of the effects in possession of the testator at the time of his death, or for such as may be in action, if it be only for a debt due.[32] But though the executor's trust or appointment may be limited, he is, as to the creditor of the testator, executor in privity with the primary representative, bearing to the creditor the same responsibility as if there was only one executor.[33] Courts vested with the jurisdiction of granting letters testamentary and of administration have the inherent power of granting a limited administration, whenever it is necessary for the purposes of justice; as, for instance, durante minore ætate, while the executor named in the will is under age; ad litem, to defend a suit in chancery while the probate of a will is under contest; or durante absentia, when the administrator is out of the jurisdiction and therefore has not taken out letters testamentary;[34] but if the administrator durante absentia be only the agent of the executor, the executor can himself appoint, and is the proper person to appoint, against the administrator of the succession of a surety, on a bond of a United States officer, on the theory that the judgment should have been against the administrator in due course of administration; for if by the law of Louisiana the judgment is so payable, it will be thus interpreted and enforced, subject to the priority given to the government in the distribution of the proceeds of an estate of any person indebted to the United States whose estate is insufficient to pay all debts against it. his own agent, there being no necessity for the intrusion of the ordinary.[35] The powers exercised by the English courts in these respects appertain to the courts of like jurisdiction in this country, although not specified in the statutes under which they act.[36] Until probate of the will, and until letters testamentary are obtained, the executor cannot obtain any judgment; because it cannot appear that he is executor. There is, therefore, an absolute necessity for appointing some person who, until probate, shall take care of the estate.[37] But this is not the case with an executor who, after taking out letters testamentary, absents himself from the state. He is still capable of performing, and he is still bound to perform, all the duties of an executor. There exists no legal disability in the executor, and consequently, there is no necessity for transferring to another those powers which the testator has conferred on a person selected by himself.[38] It has been held that administration durante absentia executoris, cannot be granted, after probate of the will and letters testamentary granted.[39] When a suit is brought by an administrator, during the minority of the executor, his powers as administrator are determined, when the executor has attained his full age; and the fact that he has not attained his full age must be averred in the declaration; but if this averment be omitted, and the defendant pleads in bar, he admits the ability of the plaintiff to sue, and the judgment is not void.[40] The grant of a temporary administration, as, during the minority of an executor, is ad usum et commodum executoris.[41] When a special administrator ceases to act as such, that is, when his functions cease by operation of law, he must account for the property and estate in his hands to the executor or administrator with the will annexed.[42] In matters involved in the accounts of a special administrator having charge of the estate of a testator pending a contest as to the validity of his will the executor or administrator with the will annexed represents all claiming under the will. The regular representative of the estate, before passing his receipt to the special administrator, has an opportunity to examine this settlement, and, if it is not satisfactory, to contest its correctness by some appropriate proceeding.[43] As, therefore, the regular representative of the estate has an opportunity to contest the final settlement of the special administrator, before giving him an acquittance, it cannot be said that the absence of notice to the distributees of such settlement amounts to a deprivation of their rights of property without due process of law.[44]

XI. Foreign Executors or Administrators.

A. Definition and Distinction.—The administration of an estate at the domicile of the decedent is the principal or primary administration;[45] an administration elsewhere is known as an ancillary administration, and generally is made subservient to the domestic creditors.[46]

B. Extraterritorial Powers Generally.—Every grant of administration is strictly confined in its authority and operation to the limits of the territory of the government which grants it, and does not, de jure, extend to other countries;[47] and whatever operation is allowed it beyond its original territory is a mere matter of comity, which every nation is at liberty to yield or withhold, according to its own policy and pleasure, with reference to its own institutions, and the interests of its own citizens.[48]

C. Privity between Different Personal Representatives—1. ADMINISTRATORS.—Administrators in different states are in privity to the testator, and will be estopped by a judgment against him, but they have no privity with each other in law or estate. They receive their authority from different sovereignties and over different property. The authority of each is paramount to the other. Each is administrator to the ordinary from which he receives his commission. Nor does the one come by succession to the other into the trust of the same property, encumbered by the same debts.[49]

2. EXECUTORS.—All executors have the same privity with each other and to the same testator, and the same responsibility to the creditors, notwithstanding the fact that they may have been qualified as executors in different sovereignties,[50] or that some of them are limited executors.[51] The privity arises from their obligation to pay the testator's debts, wherever his effects may be, just as his obligation was to pay them.[52]

D. Collection and Disposal of Assets—1. COLLECTION.—A grant of administration in one state cannot confer, as a matter of right, any authority to

It is an averment of facts which in law excludes all right to, and control over, the property in that state by the foreign administrator. Noonan v. Bradley, 9 Wall. 394, 19 L. Ed. 757.

See, also, the title RES ADJUDICATA.

In Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 160, 35 L. Ed. 112, citing Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 60, 61, 12 L. Ed. 337, the court said: "'It is for those who assert this privity to show wherein it lies, and the argument for it seems to be this: That the judgment against the administrator is against the estate of the intestate, and that his estate, wheresoever situate, is liable to pay his debts; therefore the plaintiff, having once established his claim against the estate by the judgment of a court, should not be called on to make proof of it again. This argument assumes that the judgment is in rem, and not in personam, or that the estate has a sort of corporate entity and unity. But this is not true, either in fact or in legal construction. The judgment is against the person of the administrator, that he shall pay the debt of the intestate out of the funds committed to his care. If there be another administrator in another state, liable to pay the same debt, he may be subjected to a like judgment upon the same demand, but the assets in his hands cannot be affected by a judgment to which he is personally a stranger.' 'The laws and courts of a state can only affect persons and things within their jurisdiction. Consequently, both as to the administrator and the property confided to him, a judgment in another state is res inter alios acta. It cannot be even prima facie evidence of a debt; for if it have any effect at all, it must be as a judgment, and operate by way of estoppel.'"

An action of debt will not lie against an administrator, in one state, on a judgment obtained against a different administrator of the same intestate, appointed under the authority of another state. Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. Ed. 337.

50. Privity between executors.—Hill v. Tucker, 13 How. 458, 14 L. Ed. 223; Goodall v. Tucker, 13 How. 469, 14 L. Ed. 227.

collect assets of the deceased in any other state.[53] But payment to the administrator appointed in the state in which the intestate had his domicile at the time of his death, whether made within or without that state, is good against any administrator appointed elsewhere,[54] and payment of a debt arising under a life insurance contract to an administrator appointed in the state where the policy is paid will be good against an administrator appointed elsewhere.[55] The administrator of a creditor of the government, duly appointed in the state where he was domiciled at his death, has full authority to receive payment, and give a full discharge of the debt due to his intestate, in any place where the government may choose to pay it; whether it be at the seat of government, or at any other place where the funds are deposited.[56] By the act of congress of June, 1812, all debts due in the District of Columbia may be received by an administrator appointed in any of the states of the United States.[57] And a bona fide payment of a debt, to the administrator, which was due to the estate, is a legal discharge to the debtor, whether the administration be void or voidable.[58]

2. DISPOSAL.—After settlement of claims under the ancillary administration, the residuum is transmitted to the probate court of the country of the domicile, for the final settlement of the estate.[59] But a party acting in a representative capacity, under jurisdictions foreign to each other, is without power to voluntarily transfer assets from one jurisdiction to the other, as such a transfer would be a violation of his letters in the country from which the assets were removed.[60]

Where a person domiciled in England died, leaving property both in England and Pennsylvania, and the executor took out letters testamentary in both countries, in a suit in England against the executor by the administrator of a deceased claimant, the parties were restricted to the limits of the country to which their letters extended. The executor could not rightfully transmit the Pennsylvania assets to be distributed by a foreign jurisdiction. So, the administrator of the deceased claimant, acting under letters granted in England, only represented the intestate to the extent of these English letters and could not be known as a representative in Pennsylvania. Aspden v. Nixon, 4 How. 467, 11 L. Ed. 1059.

One country cannot transmit assets to another when there is a suit pending in the former for local assets. Although, in cases peculiarly circumstanced, one jurisdiction administering assets may, as mat-

E. Accounting.— The general rule is that an administrator's duty to account is limited to the state from whose courts he derives his authority,[61] and the tribunals of other states have no right to interfere with or to control the application of those assets, according to the lex loci.[62] But debts due by persons in the District of Columbia are not deemed by the act of congress of June, 1822, local assets, for which a foreign administrator would be bound to account in the courts of the district; they are general assets which he has full authority to receive, and for which he is bound to account in the courts of the state from which he derives his letters of administration.[63]

F. Actions—1. CAPACITY TO SUE.—The general rule is that a personal representative cannot sue in the courts held in another state in which he has not been appointed,[64] except where such power may be given by virtue of some ter of comity, transmit them to a foreign jurisdiction, yet they cannot be sent to England where a suit is pending in this country for the American assets. In Smith v. Union Bank, 5 Pet. 518, 527, 8 L. Ed. 212, the court said: "It has been solemnly adjudged in this court, and is the general principle in, perhaps, every state in the Union, that one administering in one state cannot bring suit in the courts of another state. This necessity of administering, where the debt is to be recovered, effectually places the application of the proceeds under the control of the laws of the state of the administration. And if, in any instance, the rule is deviated from, it forms, pro hac, an exception; a voluntary relinquishment of a right, countenanced by universal practice; and is of the character of the treaty stipulations already remarked upon, by which foreign nations surrender virtually a right, which locality certainly puts in their power. Whether it would or would not be politic, to establish a different rule by a convention of the states, under constitutional sanction, is not a question for our consideration. But such an arrangement could only be carried into effect by a reciprocal relinquishment of the right of granting adminstration to the country of the domicile of the deceased, exclusively, and the mutual concession of the right to the administrator, so constituted, to prosecute suits everywhere, in virtue of the power so locally granted him; both of which concessions would most materially interfere with the exercise of sovereign right, as at present generally asserted and exercised."

A grant of letters of administration in Maryland, before the separation of the District of Columbia from the original states, did not authorize an action by an administrator as such in that part of the district ceded by Maryland, but he must take out new letters within the district; and this doctrine was applicable to executors, the right to sue in both instances depending upon the letters. Dixon v.

statutory authority.[65] But if a nonresident debtor, being in the state in which the administrator is appointed, is there sued by the administrator, and the judgment recovered against him, the administrator may bring suit in his own name upon that judgment in the state where the debtor resided.[66] And on a note made to the intestate, payable to bearer, an administrator appointed in one state may sue in his own name in another state.[67] The reason for the rule that no suit for the recovery of a debt due to the intestate at the time of his death can be brought by an administrator as such in any state in which he has not taken out administration, is not because of any defect of the administrator's title in the property, but is the policy of the foreign country to protect the rights of citizens of the state in which the suit is brought.[68] This rule has never been understood to extend to a suit for lands devised to an executor. In such case, the executor sues as devisee. His right is derived from the will, and the letters testamentary do not give the title.[69]

2. LIABILITY TO SUIT.—A personal representative cannot be sued in another state in which he has not been appointed,[70] except where otherwise provided by statute.[71] But where a testator, who held the land as trustee, having died in one

Under statute in some jurisdictions an executor or administrator, by virtue of letters obtained in another state, may prosecute an action in the courts of the state without first taking out letters therein, provided such executor or administrator shall, upon commencing suit, file in the office of the clerk of the court in which such suit shall be brought an exemplified copy of the record of his or their appointment. Suits in District of Columbia.—The act of congress of June, 1812, authorizes any person to whom letters testamentary or of administration have been granted in a state of the United States, to prosecute claims by suit, in the courts of the District of Columbia, in the same manner as if the same has been granted to such persons by proper authority in the District of Columbia. The power is limited by its terms to the institution of suits. Vaughan v. Northrup, 15 Pet. 1, 10 L. Ed. 639; Kane v. Paul, 14 Pet. 33, 10 L. Ed. 341.

state, the executor took out letters testamentary in that state, sold the lands which were in another state, and then removed his residence to a third state; he can be sued in the latter for the proceeds of the lands, because his transactions in reference to them were not necessarily connected with the settlement of the estate under his letters testamentary.[72]

XII. Administrators De Bonis Non or with the Will Annexed.

A. General Statement.—Every administrator after the first is an administrator de bonis non in fact, and it is not important it should so appear of record.[73]

B. Rights, Powers, Duties and Liabilities—1. TITLE ACQUIRED.—To the administrator de bonis non is committed only the administration of the goods, chattels, and credits of the deceased which have not been administered,[74] and all assets of the testator or intestate in the hands of third persons at the death of an administrator or executor intestate;[75] but he can have no concern with property administered and accounted for by his predecessor in trust.[76] But whatever authority an administrator de bonis non may possess as to the real estate must be derived from the will. If not found there in express terms, or by nec-

73. Administrators de bonis non.—Veach v. Rice, 131 U. S. 293, 315, 33 L. Ed. 163.

74. Title acquired.—Ingle v. Jones, 9 Wall. 486, 497, 19 L. Ed. 621; Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. Ed. 292; United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 261, 27 L. Ed. 927; Wilson v. Arrick, 112 U. S. 83, 86, 28 L. Ed. 617; Veach v. Rice, 131 U. S. 293, 316, 33 L. Ed. 163.

Money received by the former executor or administrator, in his character as such, and kept by itself, will be so regarded, but if mixed with the administrator's own money, it is considered as connected, or as, technically speaking, "administered." Beall v. New Mexico, 16 Wall. 535, 21 L. Ed. 292; United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 261, 27 L. Ed. 927.

In Maryland, if an executor or administrator changes any part of an estate from what it was into something else, it is said to be administered. Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 14 L. Ed. 472.

And where a debt due the deceased is collected or a chattel of his estate is sold, the money received becomes the property of the administrator, which he is not bound to turn over to his successor. United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 263, 27 L. Ed. 927.

By statute in some states an administrator is entitled to the bonds, notes, accounts and evidence of debts which a deceased administrator or executor may have taken, and the money in his hands in his representative capacity, which he is authorized to recover in manner provided. De Valengin v. Duffy, 14 Pet. 282, 291, 10 L. Ed. 457.

"It is holden that if an executor receives money in right of the testator, and lays it up by itself and dies intestate, that this money shall go to the administrator de bonis non, being as easily distinguished as part of the testator's effects, as goods in specie. But if A dies intestate, and his son takes out administration to him and receives part of a debt, being rent arrear to the intestate, and accepts a promissory note for the residue, and then dies intestate, this acceptance of the note is such an alteration of the property as vests it in the son; and therefore, on his death, it shall go on to his administrator, and not to the administrator de bonis non." United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 260, 27 L. Ed. 927.

Where a statute authorizes the delivery of unadministered assets to the administrator de bonis non, on the removal of an executor or administrator, an order directing a delivery of administered assets is void. United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 267, 27 L. Ed. 927.

The act of congress of February 20th, 1846, to enlarge the powers of the several orphans' courts held in and for the District of Columbia, did not change the common-law rule as to the authority of an administrator de bonis non over unadministered assets of an estate, and the statute applies the same rule to the case of a removal as has been applied to the case of a deceased executor or administrator. United States v. Walker, 109 U. S. 258, 263, 27 L. Ed. 927.

In Maryland property received by an administrator of an estate and converted into money in his lifetime must be accounted for by his administrator and would not pass to the administrator de bonis non, prior to act of 1820. De Valengin v. Duffy, 14 Pet. 282, 291, 10 L. Ed. 457.

essary implication, it has no existence.[77] Where real and personal property is devised and bequeathed to executors in trust for certain designated purposes, it is doubtful, to say the least, whether the trust is not such a personal confidence reposed by the testator in the person's named, that it would in no event pass to an administrator with the will annexed, but must, if all those named in the will should die before full performance of the trust, be executed by a trustee specially appointed for the purpose;[78] if his appointment could be treated as vesting the title to the real estate, it certainly would not authorize him to undertake the performance of the trust created by the will, so long as an alternative executor and trustee therein named still lives, and had but recently known that there remained any estate of the testator undisposed of according to his will.[79]

2. Derivation of Title.—An administrator de bonis non derives his title from the deceased, and not from the former executor or administrator.[80]

3. Where Extraordinary Duties Were Imposed on Executor.—When a will imposes on an executor, who is named, duties foreign to those which come within the scope of an executor's ordinary functions, such powers do not pass to an administrator unless it be clear that it was the intention of the testator to make him a donee of the power. A mere administrator, not the donee of such a power, cannot plead the statute of limitations to defeat a suit brought on a judgment, by a creditor seeking to charge the realty with his debt.[81]

4. Right to Call First Administrator, His Sureties and Representatives to Account.—Where unadministered goods of the intestate remain in the hands of the discharged administrator or his representatives, in specie, an administrator de bonis non may sue for them either directly or on his bond.[82] Where an administrator de bonis non is appointed to succeed a removed administrator, no action lies in favor of the administrator de bonis non to recover money collected by the removed administrator from the United States on a claim belonging to the estate of the decedent, and the surety on the bond of the

A testatrix left property in trust to her executors who were clothed with important powers and duties in regard to both real and personal estate. After the debts and legacies were satisfied the entire estate was to be delivered to certain named trustees, to whom it was devised, to enable them to found a female orphan asylum. This charity was admitted to be void and the trust resulted for the benefit of the heirs at law. The will provided that if the surviving executor should die while the trust remained executory its execution should devolve upon such person or persons as should be elected by the vestries of a certain church; and that letters of administration, with the will annexed, and other competent authority, should be granted to such person or persons. On the death of the surviving executor, the vestries made no election and letters were granted as if the will contained no such provision. It was held that powers touching real estate never pass by devolution to an administrator, unless it be clear that it was the intention of the testator that he should become donee of the power, a place of the executor appointed by the will. If no provision should be made by the will for such substitution, the power would not become extinguished, but the case would fall within the category of those where a court of equity will not permit a trust to fail for the want of a testator, but will appoint one and clothe him with authority adequate to the duties to be discharged. That the testatrix did not intend that any one not clothed with the sanction she described should be instrusted with any duty touching her estate; and the administrator occupied the same relation to her realty as if he were an administrator de bonis non without the will annexed, and the testatrix had died intestate. Where B., as executor of A., sold property under the direction of the will, taking notes therefor, and on B.'s death, C., his executor, pledged them to D., for purposes not authorized by B.'s will, of which D. was aware, it was held that he could not hold them against the claim of B.'s removed administrator is liable only at the suit of creditors, distributees and legatees entitled to the fund.[83] An administrator de bonis non cannot sue the former administrator or his representatives for a devastavit, or for delinquencies in office; nor can he maintain an action on the former administrator's bond for such cause. The former administrator, or his representatives, are liable directly to creditors or next of kin.[84] When an executor or administrator with the will annexed proposes to make a final settlement of his own accounts, he is required to give notice to creditors and distributees; for there are no other representatives of the estate.[85] An administrator with the will annexed, in receiving what had been temporarily in the charge of a special administrator, acts for all interested in the distribution of the estate.[86]

5. Liability for Assets in Possession of Former Representative.—By the laws of some states, an administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, is liable for assets in the hands of a former executor.[87]

6. Privity between Administrator and Administrators De Bonis Non.—An administrator de bonis non may truly be said to have an official privity with his predecessor in the same trust, and therefore liable to the same duties; he comes by succession into the trust of the same property, encumbered by the same debts.[88] But where a creditor instituted suit against an administrator of an estate and the administrator died before the termination of the suit, but had received property in his representative capacity and controverted it into money during his lifetime, to which the administrators de bonis non were entitled under a Maryland statute, the creditor had a right to make them parties to the suit which he had instituted against the first administrator, and to continue it against them, as they were not injured nor in any manner placed in danger by such proceeding, for they were not liable, unless the money should be recovered by the representatives or sureties of the deceased administrator, provided there was no negligence or breach of duty on their part.[89]

7. Duty to Transmit Assets to Place of Principal Administration.—An administrator with will annexed, having no special reason for administering the assets in the state of his appointment should transmit them for distribution to the executor appointed at the testator's domicile.[90] representatives; and the resignation of C., who connived at the misappropriation, having been accepted, and an administrator de bonis non having been appointed in his place, there was no objection to the prosecution of the suits in the latter's name, in conjunction with the representatives of A.'s estate, to compel the restoration of the notes; and as the notes in fact belonged to A.'s estate, the administrators de bonis non of that estate might insist that, when the notes were returned by D., they be delivered to them. Where claims of an estate against the United States government were settled by the issuance of warrants to the administratrix of the estate who endorsed them over to another who drew the money thereon, it was held, that this was an administration of these assets of the estate; that the mere acceptance even of the warrants was such alteration of the property as vested title in the administratrix, and as tantamount to their administration; and that the warrants and the money received on them became the property of the administratrix, and she was responsible therefor to the creditors, legatees and distributees of the estate, and they alone were entitled to sue thereon. 8. Liability to Action of Assumpsit.—Without proof of an express assumpsit, an action of assumpsit will not lie against an administrator with the will annexed.[91]

9. Liabilities of Sureties on Bond.—And the rule in some states that a change by an executor or administrator of any part of an estate from what it was into something else constitutes administration of it, relieves the sureties of an administrator de bonis non of liability for waste of such changed estate acquired by him and charged as assets, as they are only liable for such assets of the deceased as remain in specie, unadministered by his predecessor, in the administration.[92]

XIII. Executor De Son Tort.

A person makes himself an executor de son tort by intermeddling with the estate of the testator and by taking it into his possession, and undertaking to dispose of it, and, as such, is responsible for what comes into his hands.[93]

XIV. Insolvent Estates.

The laws of some states provide that where the insolvency of the estate of a deceased person shall be reported to certain courts, the court shall order a sale of the property and distribute the proceeds thereof among the creditors pro rata.[94] Where the object is to sell the real estate of an insolvent or embarrassed succession, the settled doctrine is, there are no adversary parties, the administrator represents the land, and the proceedings are in rem. The proceedings are analogous to proceedings in admiralty, where the only question of jurisdiction is the power of the court over the things, the subject matter before them, without regard to the parties who may have an interest in it.[95] Under the laws of a state directing that, where the insolvency of the estate of a deceased person shall be reported to the orphans' court, that court shall order the sale of the property, and distribute the proceeds thereof among the creditors pro rata, and that in the meantime no execution shall issue upon judgments obtained against such insolvent estate. Judgment obtained against an administrator before the declaration by the orphans' court of the insolvency of the estate, is not, upon that account, entitled to a preference, but must share in the general distribution.[96] As to the effect of state laws upon the power of federal courts in matters pertaining to insolvent estates, see the title Courts, vol. 4, p. 895.

EXECUTORY AGREEMENT.—As used in the law of sales an executory agreement is an agreement for sale of a thing not specified, or for an article not manufactured, or for a certain quantity of goods in general without any identification of them or an appropriation of the same to the contract, or when something remains to be done to put the goods into a deliverable state, or to ascertain the price to be paid by the buyer.[1]

I. Definition.

Punative damages are damages beyond and above the amount which a plaintiff has really suffered.[1a]

II. Award of Exemplary Damages.

A. General Rule.—The allowance of anything more that an adequate pecuniary indemnity for a wrong suffered is a great departure from the prin-

1a. Definition.—Washington Gas Light Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 534, 553, 43 L. Ed. 543.

"Damages have been defined to be the compensation which the law will award for an injury done, and are said to be exemplary and allowable in excess of the actual loss, where a tort is aggravated by evil motive, actual malice, deliberate violence or oppression. While some courts and text-writers have questioned the soundness of this doctrine, it has been accepted in England, in most of the states of this Union, and has received the sanction of this court." Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 41 L. Ed. 632.

ciple on which damages in civil suits are awarded,[2] but the doctrine is well settled now that exemplary damages may be recovered in certain cases.[3] By the common as well as by statute law, men are often punished for aggravated misconduct or lawless acts, by means of a civil action, and the damages, inflicted by way of penalty or punishment, given to the party injured.[4] Punitive damages are awarded upon the theory that they are a punishment to the defendant, and not a mere matter of compensation for injuries sustained by the plaintiff.[5]

B. In Actions for Torts—1. In General.—In all actions on the case for torts a jury may give exemplary or vindictive damages depending upon the peculiar circumstances of each case,[6] and exemplary damages are allowable in excess of the actual loss where a tort is aggravated by evil motive, actual malice, deliberate violence or oppression.[7]

2. Trespass.—In actions of trespass, where the injury has been wanton and malicious, or gross and outrageous, courts permit juries to add to the measured compensation of the plaintiff which he would have been entitled to recover, had the injury been inflicted without design or intention, something further by way

"In many civil actions, such as libel, slander, seduction, etc., the wrong done to the plaintiff is incapable of being measured by a money standard; and the damages assessed depend on the circumstances, showing the degree of moral turpitude or atrocity of the defendant's conduct, and may properly be termed exemplary or vindictive rather than compensatory." "Where an injury is wanton or malicious, a jury may inflict vindictive or exemplary damages, not to recompense the plaintiff, but to punish the defendant." Seymour v. McCormick, 16 How. 480, 14 L. Ed. 1024.

Jurists have chosen to place the doctrine of exemplary damages on the ground, not that the sufferer is to be recompensed, but that the offender is to be punished; and, although some text-writers and courts have questioned its soundness, it has been accepted as the general rule in England and in most of the states of this country. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 492, 23 L. Ed. 374.

"Exemplary or punitive damages, being awarded, not by way of compensation to the sufferer, but by way of punishment of the offender, and as a warning to others, can only be awarded against one who has participated in the offense." Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 107, 37 L. Ed. 97.

6. In general.—Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 370, 14 L. Ed. 182.

The power of a jury is recognized in certain actions of tort to assess against the tort feasor punitive or exemplary damages. Whenever the injury complained of has been inflicted maliciously or wantonly, and with circumstances of contumely or indignity, the jury are not limited to the ascertainment of a simple compensation for the wrong committed against the aggrieved person. But the malice spoken of in this rule is not merely the doing of an unlawful or injurious act. The word implies that the act complained of was conceived in the spirit of mischief, or of criminal indifference to civil obligations. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 213, 16 L. Ed. 73.

The intentional, malicious and repeated interference by the defendants with the exercise of personal rights and privileges secured to the plaintiff by the constitution of the United States, constitutes a wrong and injury not the subject of compensation by a mere money standard, but fairly within the doctrine of the cases wherein exemplary damages have been allowed. Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 89, 41 L. Ed. 632.

7. Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 86, 41 L. Ed. 632.

"The doctrine is well settled, that in actions of tort the jury, in addition to the sum awarded by way of compensation for the plaintiff's injury, may award exemplary, punitive or vindictive damages, sometimes called smart money, if the defendant has acted wantonly, or oppressively, or with such malice as implies a spirit of mischief or criminal indifference to civil obligations. But such guilty intention on the part of the defendant is required in order to charge him with exemplary or punitive damages." Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 107, 37 L. Ed. 97. See, also, The Amiable Nancy, 3 Wheat. 546, 558, 559, 4 L. Ed. 456; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 371, 14 L. Ed. 182; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 213, 214, 16 L. Ed. 73; Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 493, 495, 23 L. Ed.

of punishment or example, which has sometimes been called "smart money."[8] Where the cause of action is willful and malicious trespass in seizing and taking personal property with circumstances of aggravation and averments of special damage, exemplary damages will be allowed.[9]

3. Wrongful Seizure of Property.—On an illegal seizure of a ship by the officers of a privateer, the original wrongdoers may be made responsible, beyond the loss actually sustained, in a case of gross and wanton outrage; but the owners of the privateer, who are only constructively liable, are not bound to the extent of vindictive damages.[10]

4. Negligence.—For injuries resulting from neglect of duties, in the discharge of which the public is interested, juries are permitted to assess exemplary damages.[11] A railroad company may be liable for exemplary damages for neglecting to comply with a law requiring it to maintain fences and cattle guards, and thus causing damage to property.[12]

C. Persons Liable for Exemplary Damages—1. In General.—Where a ministerial officer acts in good faith, he is not liable to exemplary damages for an injury done; but he can claim no further exemption, where his acts are clearly against law.[13]

8. Trespass.—Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 371, 14 L. Ed. 182.

"It is a well-established principle of the common law, that in actions of trespass and all actions on the case for torts, a jury may inflict what are called exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages upon a defendant, having in view the enormity of his offense rather than the measure of compensation to the plaintiff. We are aware that the propriety of this doctrine has been questioned by some writers; but if repeated judicial decisions for more than a century are to be received as the best exposition of what the law is, the question will not admit of argument." Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 370, 14 L. Ed. 182.

9. Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550, 562, 29 L. Ed. 729.

In an action for trespass, notwithstanding the fact that there were mitigating circumstances set up by the defendants, if the trespass was lawless and wholly inexcusable, was of an aggravated nature and was a resort to physical force in defiance of law endangering life and property, it gave a high claim to the injured party for exemplary damages. McAfee v. Crofford, 13 How. 447, 458, 14 L. Ed. 217.

10. Wrongful seizure of property.—The Amiable Nancy, 3 Wheat. 546, 4 L. Ed. 456.

11. Negligence.—Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 521, 29 L. Ed. 463.

"For injuries resulting from a neglect of duties, in the discharge of which the public is interested, juries are also permitted to assess exemplary damages. These may perhaps be considered as falling under the head of cases of gross negligence, for any neglect of duties imposed for the protection of life or property is culpable, and deserves punishment." Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 521, 29 L. Ed. 463.

"The statutes of nearly every state of the Union provide for the increase of damages where the injury complained of results from the neglect of duties imposed for the better security of life and property, and make that increase in many cases double, in some cases treble, and even quadruple the actual damages. And experience favors this legislation as the most efficient mode of preventing, with the least inconvenience, the commission of injuries. The decisions of the highest courts have affirmed the validity of such legislation. The injury actually received is often so small that in many cases no effort would be made by the sufferer to obtain redress, if the private interest were not supported by the imposition of punitive damages." Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. Ed. 463.

Carriers.—Exemplary damages should not be awarded for an injury received by a passenger in a railway car in a collision caused by the negligence of the employees of the company unless the injury is the result of the willful misconduct of the employees of the company, or of that reckless indifference to the rights of others which is equivalent to an intentionally violation of them. 2. Corporations.—A corporation, like a natural person, may be held liable in exemplary or punitive damages for the act of an agent within the scope of his employment, provided the criminal intent, necessary to warrant the imposition of such damages, is brought home to the corporation.[14] A railroad corporation is not chargeable with punitive or exemplary damages for the illegal, wanton and oppressive conduct of a conductor of one of its trains towards a passenger.[15]

3. Principal and Agent.—A principal, though of course liable to make compensation for injuries done by his agent within the scope of his employment, cannot be held liable for exemplary or punitive damages, merely by reason of wanton, oppressive or malicious intent on the part of the agent.[16]

III. Measure of Exemplary Damages.

A. In General.—The amount of exemplary damages depends upon the degree of malice, wantonness, oppression, or outrage of the defendant's conduct.[17]

Counsel Fees.—Damages assessed by way of example, may indirectly compensate the plaintiff for money expended in counsel fees, but the amount of these fees cannot be taken as the measure of punishment or a necessary element in its infliction.[18]

B. Discretion of Jury.—The amount of exemplary damages has always been left to the discretion of the jury, as the degree of punishment to be thus inflicted must depend on the peculiar circumstances of each case.[19]

C. Discretion of Court.—The patent act of 1836 confines the jury to the assessment of "actual damages" for the infringement of a patent right. The power to inflict vindictive or punitive damages is committed to the discretion and judgment of the court within the limit of trebling the actual damages found by the injury.[20] seas to perform a duty deemed necessary by his country, and executing according to the best of his judgment the orders he has received, if he is a victim of any mistake he commits, ought certainly never to be assessed with vindictive or speculative damages." The Charming Betsy, 2 Cranch 64, 124, 2 L. Ed. 208.

Agent.—A firm of merchants in Boston ordered their agent to purchase certain goods in Havana, but he failed to purchase them as ordered. It was held, that the agent was not liable for vindictive damages for the failure to comply with the orders of the principals. Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet. 69, 84, 7 L. Ed. 606.

14. Corporations.—Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 111, 37 L. Ed. 97.

The doctrine of punitive damages should certainly apply in a case where a corporation, by its controlling officers, wantonly disturbed the peace of the community, and by the use of violent means endangered the lives of citizens in order to maintain rights, for the vindication of which, if they existed, an appeal should have been made to the judicial tribunals of the country. Denver, etc., Railway v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 610, 30 L. Ed. 1146.

15. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 106, 37 L. Ed. 97.

16. Principal and agent.—Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 107, 37 L. Ed. 97. See ante, "Wrongful Seizure of Property," II, B, 3; "In General," II, C, 1.

Though a principal is liable to make compensation for a libel published or a malicious prosecution instituted by his agent, he is not liable to be punished by exemplary damages for an intent in which he did not participate. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 110, 37 L. Ed. 97.

17. In general.—Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 371, 14 L. Ed. 182.

18. Counsel fees.—Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 371, 14 L. Ed. 182.

19. Discretion of jury.—Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 371, 14 L. Ed. 182. See post, "Discretion of Court," III, C.

The law permits the jury to give punitive or exemplary damages and the discretion of the jury in such cases is not controlled by any very definite rules. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 521, 29 L. Ed. 463.

Redress commensurate to the injuries should be afforded. "In ascertaining its extent, the jury may consider all the facts which relate to the wrongful act of the defendant, and its consequences to the plaintiff; but they are not at liberty to go farther, unless it was done willfully, or was the result of that reckless indifference to the rights of others which is equivalent to an intentional violation of them. In that case, the jury are authorized, for the sake of public example to give such additional damages as the circumstances require. The tort is aggravated by the evil motive, and on this rests the rule of exemplary damages." Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 492, 23 L. Ed. 374.

"While all defendants joined are liable for compensatory damages, there is no justice in allowing the recovery of punitive damages in an action against several defendants, based upon evidence of the wealth and ability to pay such damages on the part of one of the defendants only. As the verdict must be for one sum against all defendants who are guilty, it seems to be plain that when a plaintiff voluntarily joins several parties as defendants, he must be held to thereby waive any right to recover punitive damages against all, founded upon evidence of the ability of one of the several defendants to pay them. This rule does not prevent the recovery of punitive damages in all cases where several defendants are joined." Washington Gas Light Co. v. Lansden, 175 U. S. 534, 553, 43 L. Ed. 543.

Discretion of Court.—Where there is conflicting testimony, upon a trial for murder, as to whether a gun in defendant's possession will scatter low mould buck shot, and the defendant requests permission of the court to take the gun out and shoot it in the presence of a deputy marshal in order to test how it threw such shot, the granting or refusal of such a request is within the discretion of the court.[1] which we think is the fair and reasonable interpretation of the argument, even standing alone upon the complainant's own statement. It was manifestly intended to apply to private or family expenses, not connected with the business of the partnership. Where the declaration contained two counts; viz, the first upon a special contract that the plaintiffs had placed a machine for saving fuel on board of the steamboat of the defendants, and were entitled to a certain portion of the savings; the second, upon a quantum meruit; it was admissible to give in evidence by the plaintiffs the experiments of practical engineers to show the value of the machine. Evidence had previously been given, tending to prove the value in the mode pointed out in the contract, and the evidence in question tended not to contradict, but to corroborate it. It was therefore admissible under the first count, and clearly so under the second. Washington, etc., Steam Packet Co. v. Sickles, 10 How. 419, 13 L. Ed. 479.

I. Expert Evidence.

A. Definition.—Experts are persons examined as witnesses in a cause, who testify in regard to some professional or technical matter arising in the case, and who are permitted to give their opinions as to such matter on account of their special training, skill, or familiarity with it.[1]

B. Admissibility of Expert Testimony—1. IN GENERAL.—Men who have made questions of skill or science the object of their particular study, are competent to give their opinions in evidence. Such opinions ought, in general, to be deduced from facts that are not disputed, or from facts given in evidence; but they need not be founded upon their own personal knowledge of such facts, but may be founded upon the statement of facts proved in the case.[2]

1. Definition.—Black's Law Dict. 461.

2. Admissibility in general.—Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 657, 25 L. Ed. 487.

It is upon subjects on which the jury are not as well able to judge for themselves as is the witness that an expert as such is expected to testify. Transportation Line v. Hope, 95 U. S. 297, 298, 24 L. Ed. 477.

The general rule undoubtedly is, that witnesses are restricted to proof of facts within their personal knowledge, and may not express their opinion or judgment as to matters which the jury or the court are required to determine, or which must constitute elements in such determination. To this rule there is a well-established exception in the case of witnesses having special knowledge or skill in the business, art, or science, the principles of which are involved in the issue to be tried. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 618, 28 L. Ed. 536.

Witnesses are not ordinarily allowed to give opinions as to conclusions dependent upon facts not necessarily involved in the controversy; but an exception to that rule is recognized in the case of experts, who are entitled to give their opinions as to conclusions from facts within the range of their specialties, which are too recondite to be properly comprehended and weighed by ordinary reasoners. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 657, 25 L. Ed. 487.

"The witness was an expert, and was called and testified as such. His knowledge and experience fairly entitled him to that position. It is permitted to ask

2. Matters of Common Knowledge.—Where the subject of a proposed inquiry before a court is not a matter of science, but of common observation, upon which the ordinary mind is capable of forming a judgment, experts ought not to be permitted to state their conclusions.[3]

3. Medical Experts—a. In General.—Medical men may give their opinions not only as to the state of a patient they may have visited, or as to the cause of the death of a person whose body they have examined, or as to the nature of the instruments which caused the wounds they have examined,[4] but also in cases where they have not themselves seen the patient, and have only heard the symptoms and particulars of his state detailed by other witnesses at the trial.[5]

b. Insanity.—The opinions of medical men are admissible in evidence as to the sanity or insanity of a person at a particular time, because they are supposed to have become, by study and experience, familiar with the symptoms of mental disease, and, therefore qualified to assist the court or jury in reaching a correct conclusion. And such opinions of medical experts may be based as well upon facts within their personal knowledge, as upon a hypothetical case disclosed by the testimony of others.[6] When evidence has been given tending to show the insanity of a grantor, and other evidence tending to show his sanity, a medical questions of a witness of this class which cannot be put to ordinary witnesses. It is not an objection, as is assumed, that he was asked a question involving the point to be decided by the jury. As an expert, he could properly aid the jury by such evidence, although it would not be competent to be given by an ordinary witness." Transportation Line v. Hope, 95 U. S. 297, 298, 24 L. Ed. 477.

3. Matters of common knowledge.—Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256.

"A second exception taken in the court below, and here insisted upon, is that the court refused to permit the defendants to prove by witnesses who were experts, experienced in the business of fire insurance, and accustomed by their profession to estimating and calculating the hazard and exposures to fire from one building to another, and to fixing rates of insurance, that, owing to the distance between the elevator and the mill, and the distance between the elevator and the lumber piles, the elevator would not be considered as an exposure to the mill or lumber, and would not be considered in fixing a rate thereon, or in measuring the hazard of mill or lumber. This exception is quite unsustainable. The subject of proposed inquiry was a matter of common observation, upon which the lay or uneducated mind is capable of forming a judgment." Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 472, 24 L. Ed 256.

The opinion of commercial experts in the place of that of the jury, upon a question which was as well understood by the community at large as by merchants and importers, is inadmissible. Schmieder v. Barney, 113 U. S. 645, 648, 28 L. Ed. 1130.

Where there was an issue as to whether certain imported "Saxony dress goods" were "goods of similiar description" to "delaines" within the meaning of that term as used in the tariff act of July 14, 1862, ch. 163, § 9, 12 Stat. 553, it was held that the testimony of merchants and commercial experts was inadmissible to prove that, in trade, among merchants and importers, "Saxony woven dress goods" were not, in 1861 and 1862, and prior thereto, "commercially known or considered as goods of similar description to delaines." Schmieder v. Barney, 113 U. S. 645, 28 L. Ed. 1130.

The question as to whether a position of two or three feet from the fender piles off a certain wharf is a reasonably safe place for a person to stand when a boat is approaching to make a landing or unload freight, is a question for the jury to decide, and requires no special training or experience; therefore, the opinions of witnesses are inadmissible. Inland, etc., Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 560, 35 L. Ed. 270.

4. Medical experts—In general.—Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 657, 25 L. Ed. 487. See, generally, the title PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS. And see post, "Insurance," I, B, 12; "Manner in Which Medical Examination Made," I, D, 2; "Medical Expert," I, D, 3, c.

Where a person is killed by a blow inflicted upon the side of his head, the opinion of a physician, who made a post mortem examination of the body, is admissible to show from which direction the blow was delivered. Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 438, 30 L. Ed. 708.

5. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 657, 25 L. Ed. 487.

It is permissible to ask a medical witness, whether, in his opinion, a man standing at the hip of a recumbent person and striking blows on that person's head and forehead with an axe would necessarily be spattered with, or covered with, some of the blood. Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 532, 569, 42 L. Ed. 568.

6. Insanity.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 618, 28 L. Ed. 536. See, generally, the title INSANITY.

expert cannot be asked his opinion respecting that person's sanity or insanity, forming his opinion from the facts and symptoms detailed in the evidence.[7]

4. Diseases.—Officers of the department of agriculture are competent to testify as experts to the nature and symptoms of a cattle disease in a certain district, although they have never been in such district; the nature of their business, the correspondence of the department and the investigation of such diseases would render them better acquainted with the districts where such diseases originated or were prevalent, than if they were merely local physicians and testified as to what came within their personal observation.[8]

5. Premature Abortion of Calves.—An experienced cattleman may be asked in an action to recover damages for loss of cattle caused by a railroad collision, if in his judgment a trip from Scotland to this country, and detention in quarantine, and shipment by rail to Missouri, would cause cows to prematurely lose their calves or abort them, if no unusual accident had occurred to them.[9]

6. Dangerous Character of Animals.—The testimony of experts as to the dangerous character of a buck deer, is admissible in an action brought to recover damages for injuries resulting from an attack made by such deer.[10]

7. Terms of Art—Construction of Written Instruments.—Experts may be examined as to the meaning of terms of art,[11] on the principles of, "cuique in sua arte credendam," but not as to the construction of written instruments.[12]

8. Patents.—See the title Patents.

9. Bridges.—The testimony of experts who are shown to have had experience in the science of bridge building and as civil engineers are admissible and entitled to due weight as to whether or not work spoken of as a dyke is a part of a bridge or approach.[13]

11. Terms of art—Construction of written instrument.—Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 252, 270, 14 L. Ed. 683. See post, "Patents," I, B, 8.

"Experts may be examined to explain the terms of art, and the state of the art at any given time." Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 658, 25 L. Ed. 487.

"Cases arise undoubtedly in which the testimony of expert witnesses is admissible to explain terms of art and technical words or phrases, and it may be admitted that a written instrument may be so interspersed with such technical terms that it would be error in the court to exclude the testimony of persons skilled in such matters, if duly offered by the proper party in the litigation." Moran v. Prather, 23 Wall. 492, 499, 23 L. Ed. 121.

12. Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 252, 270, 14 L. Ed. 683.

"Terms of art, in the absence of parol testimony, must be understood in their primary sense, unless the context evidently shows that they were used in the particular case in some other and peculiar sense, in which case the testimony of persons skilled in the art of science may be admitted to aid the court in ascertaining the true intent and meaning of that part of the instrument, but the words of the instrument which have reference to the usual transaction of life must be interpreted according to their plain, ordinary, and popular meaning; and the rule is that parol evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary such instrument." Moran v. Prather, 23 Wall. 492, 499, 23 L. Ed. 121.

13. Bridges.—Union Pac. R. Co. v. Clopper, 131 U. S. cxcii, cxcv, 26 L. Ed. 243. See, generally, the title BRIDGES, vol. 3, p. 516.

"That the opinion of a practical civil engineer of experience in bridge building is entitled to weight with the jury in deciding whether part of this track through the bottom, which had been protected by stone, was so constructed as a dyke against the current of water, or as the approach to the bridge, is, we think, too clear for argument. Such a witness would know what is usually meant by the term approach to a bridge much better than the average juror, and would have, perhaps, little difficulty in forming a just opinion, when the ordinary juror would have been wholly at a loss." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Clopper, 131 U. S. cxcii, cxcv, 26 L. Ed. 243.

in testing the strength of fire hose, may state that a particular test applied ex parte, was not a fair one.[14]

11. Nautical Matters—a. In General.—Where, in any case, a disputed question of navigation arises, in regard to which neither sailing rules and regulations prescribed by law, nor the rules of the supreme court regulating the practice in admiralty, have made provision, evidence of experts as to a general usage regulating the matter is admissible.[15]

b. Skill.—The testimony of experts is admissible in determining an issue involving a question of nautical skill.[16]

c. Construction of Vessel.—One who built a ship and had sailed her for seven years is competent to testify as to the construction of the vessel.[17]

d. Depth to Which a Vessel May Be Loaded.—Where a charter party stipulated that a vessel should receive a full cargo, the opinions of experts are the best criteria of how deeply she can be loaded with safety to the lives of the passengers.[18]

e. Damages for Collision.—See post, "Damages for Collision," I, B, 14, c, (1).

12. Insurance.—The opinion of a medical witness made prior to an application for insurance that a person was not worthy of insurance, is not competent evidence in a suit on a policy issued several months afterwards; there being no issue made in the pleadings as to the health of the assured prior to the date of the policy.[19]

13. Purpose or Quality of an Act.—The purpose or quality of an act may be stated by a witness who was present and cognizant of the whole transaction, as whether the delivery of money by one man to another was by way of payment or otherwise.[20]

14. Value—a. In General.—Testimony as to value may be properly received from the mouths of witnesses, who are duly qualified to testify in relation to the subject of inquiry.[21]

b. Attorney's Fees for Professional Services.—See the title Attorney and Client, vol. 2, pp. 727, 728.

14. Fire hose.—Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall. 726, 19 L. Ed. 769.

The testimony of a person, not an expert, that fire hose of a peculiar size which the city had contracted for, would "not answer the city's purpose," is inadmissible on a suit by the manufacturer against the city for the contract price; inadmissible both because the witness is not an expert, and because in such a suit the only questions are what did the contract call for, and what did the manufacturer furnish. Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall. 726, 19 L. Ed. 769.

15. Nautical matters—In general.—The City of Washington, 92 U. S. 31, 23 L. Ed. 600. See, generally, the title SHIPS AND SHIPPING.

"What is a competent crew for the voyage? at what time such crew should be on board? what is a proper pilot ground? what is the course and usage of trade in relation to the master and crew being on board, when the ship breaks ground for the voyage? are question of fact, dependent upon nautical testimony; and are incapable of being solved by a court, without assuming to itself the province of a jury, and judicially relying on its own skill in maritime affairs." McLanahan v. Universal Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 170, 184, 7 L. Ed. 98.

It is competent for experts to testify to material questions touching marine risks, such as whether certain acts will increase the risk and enhance the premiums. McLanahan v. Universal Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 170, 187, 7 L. Ed. 98.

16. Skill.—Transportation Line v. Hope, 95 U. S. 297, 24 L. Ed. 477.

Expert testimony is proper as to the prudent management of a boat. Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 423, 31 L. Ed. 497.

The master, fireman, and mate are competent to testify as experts as to the prudent management of a boat and its loss, where they were on board at the time, and had had several years previous experience in navigation. Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 423, 31 L. Ed. 497.

21. Value—In general.—The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 131, 41 L. Ed. 937.

c. Ships and Shipping—(1) Damages for Collision—(a) Where Opinions of Experts Conflict.—As to the value of a ship, the evidence of her builders as to her original cost and what she would have been worth at the time of the collision if she had been kept in good repair, and also testimony that the owner concluded a sale at a certain price for one-half the ship which was to have been delivered and the money paid on the day following that upon which she was lost, is better evidence of her actual value than the conflicting opinions of experts more or less friendly to the owner.[22]

(b) Where Ship Has Been Abandoned.—In cases of collision, where the injured vessel has been abandoned, the measure of damages is the difference between her value in her crippled condition and her value before the collision; and this is to be ascertained by the testimony of experts, who can judge of the probable expense of raising and repairing the vessel.[24]

(c) Where Ship Has Been Raised and Repaired.—But where the vessel has been raised and repaired, or is undergoing repairs, there is no necessity for resorting even to the opinion and estimates of experts, as to probable expenses, for as to these the reasonable expenses incurred in raising and repairing her are matters of fact that may be ascertained from the parties concerned in the work.[25]

(d) Propelling Engines.—Where a hydraulic engineer had been engaged in the construction of steam engines and other machinery for many years, his testimony as an expert is admissible as to the value of propelling engines for a boat upon which he had traveled and seen the engines in operation, and also as to what it would cost to make the engines good.[26]

d. Appraisement of Goods Fraudulently Imported.—In the trial of a cause where goods had been seized upon suspicion of being fraudulently imported, it was proper to allow to go to the jury, as evidence, appraisements of the goods made either by the official appraiser or appraisers acting under an appeal, they being present to verify the papers. The objection that the appraisements had not been made in presence of the jury was not sufficient.[27]

e. Insurance.—In a case of contributing policies, adjustments of loss made by an expert may be submitted to the jury, not as evidence of the facts stated therein, or as obligatory, but for the purpose of assisting the jury in calculating the amount of liability of the insurer upon the several hypotheses of fact mentioned in the adjustment, if they find either hypothesis correct.[28]

C. Qualification of Expert.—Discretion of Court.—How much knowledge a witness must possess before a party is entitled to his opinion as an expert is a matter which, in the nature of things, must be left largely to the discretion of the trial court, and its ruling thereon will not be disturbed unless clearly erroneous.[29]

22. When evidence of experts conflict.—The Albert Dumois, 177 U. S. 240, 255, 44 L. Ed. 751.

"There was no error in fixing the value of the Argo at the sum of $15,000—an increase of $4,000 over the amount fixed by the district court. The evidence of her builders was that she originally cost $18,000, and that, if she had been kept in good repair, she would have been worth two-thirds of that amount at the time of the collision. There was also testimony to the effect that her owner had, at the time of the collision, concluded a sale of one-half Argo for $7,500, and that it was to have been delivered and the money paid for this moiety on the day following that upon which she was lost, and upon her return to the city. This is better evidence of her actual value than the conflicting opinions of experts more or less friendly to the owner, who put her value at from $8,500 to $30,000." The Albert Dumois, 177 U. S. 240, 255, 44 L. Ed. 751.

24. Damages where ship has been abandoned.—The Schooner Catherine v. Dickinson, 17 How. 170, 15 L. Ed. 233. See ante, "Nautical Matters," I, B, 11.

27. Appraisements of goods fraudulently imported.—Buckley v. United States, 4 How. 251, 11 L. Ed. 961.

28. Insurance.—Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co., 93 U. S. 527, 23 L. Ed. 868. See, generally, the title INSURANCE.

29. Qualification of experts.—Chateaugay Ore. etc., Co. v. Blake, 144 U. S. 476, 484, 36 L. Ed. 510; Stillwell, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 130 U. S. 520, 32 L. Ed. 1035;

D. Examination of Expert Witnesses.—1. Interrogation as to Other Matters than Opinion.—After a witness has once qualified himself as an expert and given his own professional opinion in reference to that which he has seen or heard, or upon hypothetical questions, then it is ordinarily opening the door to too wide an inquiry to interrogate him as to what other scientific men have said upon such matters, or in respect to the general teachings of science thereon.[30]

2. Manner in Which Medical Examination Made.—There is no error in permitting medical witnesses, who testify in behalf of the plaintiff, to be asked whether the examinations made by them "were made in a superficial or in a careful and thorough manner."[31]

3. Hypothetical Questions—a. Value of.—Where witnesses of proper skill and experience have formed their judgment from a personal examination of the subject of the controversy, their opinions are generally more worthy of confidence than those elicited by hypothetical questions, which may or may not state all the accidents and circumstances necessary to form a correct conclusion.[32]

b. Length of.—The length of hypothetical statements presented to a witness to ascertain his opinion upon any matter growing out of the facts supposed, will necessarily depend upon the simple or complicated character of the transactions recited, and the number of particulars which must be considered for the formation of the opinion desired. And this subject, like the extent to which the examination of a witness may be allowed, must, in a great degree, be left to the discretion of the court.[33]

c. Medical Expert.—A medical expert may be asked his opinion upon a case hypothetically stated, or upon a case where the facts are certain and found; but he will not be allowed to determine from the evidence what the facts are, and to give his opinion upon them.[34]

d. Equipment of Engines.—It is permissible to ask hypothetical questions to prove bad equipments of locomotive engines.[35]

E. Weight of Expert Testimony—Question for the Jury.—The ultimate weight to be given to the testimony of experts is a question to be determined by Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 348, 34 L. Ed. 681; Inland, etc., Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 35 L. Ed. 270; Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 648, 25 L. Ed. 487.

It must appear, of course, that the witness is qualified to speak to the point of inquiry, whether it respects a patented invention, a question in chemistry, insurance, shipping, seamanship, foreign law, or of the habits of animals, whether ferœ naturœ or domestic. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 657, 25 L. Ed. 487.

It is competent for witnesses, who are medical experts, to characterize the manner of the examination made by them. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 271, 273, 39 L. Ed. 977.

32. Value of.—Morewood v. Enequist, 23 How. 491, 495, 16 L. Ed. 516.

When permissible.—Where one is charged with the crime of murder committed on board a ship and he wishes to prove that he was at the wheel at the time the murder was committed, it is permissible to ask a number of sailors in the form of hypothetical questions, what would be the effect upon the vessel if the wheelman had taken his hands off of the wheel, and what effect would be produced by lashing the wheel. Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 532, 568, 42 L. Ed. 568.

33. Length of.—Forsythe v. Doolittle, 120 U. S. 73, 78, 30 L. Ed. 586.

34. Medical expert.—Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 9, 21 L. Ed. 73. See, generally, the title PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

35. Equipment of engines.—In an action to recover for the loss of cotton caused by fire alleged to be due from sparks from a locomotive, it is competent to ask an expert witness a hypothetical question as to whether an engine is properly constructed which sets out eight fires in going a distance of four miles, where there is evidence to the effect that it is impossible even with the use of the most effective spark arresters, to prevent the escape of sparks. Texas, etc., R. Co v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 290, 47 L. Ed. 1057.

the jury; and there is no rule of law which requires them to surrender their judgment, or to give a controlling influence to the opinions of scientific witnesses.[36]

II. Nonexpert Opinion.

A. Definition.—Opinion, in the law of evidence, is an inference of conclusion drawn by a witness from facts, some of which are known to him and others assumed, or drawn from facts which, though lending probability to the inference, do not evolve it by a process of absolutely necessary reasoning.[37]

B. Admissibility of Nonexpert Testimony—1. OPINION DEDUCED FROM UNDISCLOSED FACTS.—The opinion of a witness from facts he does not disclose is inadmissible.[38]

2. VALUE—a. In General.—One cannot testify in general terms what he estimates his damages to be, when he does not testify to the items of damage, or to facts upon which his opinion is based.[39]

b. Of Land.—In respect to the value of land the opinions of witnesses familiar with the territory and its surroundings are competent.[40]

c. Rental Value of Property.—A witness cannot testify as to the rental value of property where he has no knowledge of the marketable condition or rental value of such property as would render his opinion of any use to the jury beyond the merest guess or conjecture.[41]

3. EFFECT OF INTEMPERANCE.—The opinion of a witness as to the effect of 36. Weight of expert testimony—Question for the jury.—The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 133, 41 L. Ed. 937; Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 645, 658, 25 L. Ed. 487.

The opinions of attorneys, as to the value of professional services rendered, are not to control the judgment of the jury so as to preclude them from exercising their own knowledge or ideas upon the value of such services. Head v. Hargraves, 105 U. S. 45, 47, 26 L. Ed. 1028.

37. Definition.—Black's Law Dict. 852.

38. Opinion deduced from undisclosed facts.—Raub v. Carpenter, 187 U. S. 159, 161, 47 L. Ed. 119.

A witness ought never to swear to inferences, without stating the train of reasoning by which his mind has been conducted to them. The Nereide, 9 Cranch 388, 416, 3 L. Ed. 769.

"Dr. George B. Heinecke, a practicing physician in Washington, and a grandnephew of deceased, testified that he had known deceased ever since he could recollect, and was accustomed to seeing him frequently; that he had seen him when recovering from attacks of epilepsy subsequently to the execution of the will and codicil; 'that testator had stated to him that he was a sufferer from urethal calculus; that on the 13th of March, 1896, he had seen the testator have a fainting spell;' 'that he had on one occasion seen testator laughing to himself; that on or about the 13th of February, 1899, during the blizzard, the testator acted peculiarly about the snow in his yard; did not know how it got in there, all of it, and went out there and tried to get it removed;' and witness stated the result of the autopsy and the cause of death. He was then asked the following question: 'Doctor, have you formed any opinion, from your uncle's general condition of health and the conditions disclosed by his brain at this investigation, and from all you know about him yourself, what his condition of mind was?'" Held, that no sufficient basis had been laid for that portion of the question "all that you know about him yourself." Raub v. Carpenter, 187 U. S. 159, 160, 161, 47 L. Ed. 119.

40. Of land.—Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 348, 353, 34 L. Ed. 681.

It is not necessary in order for a witness to testify as to the value of property that there should have been sales of the property in question, or similar property; after a witness has testified that he knows the property and its value, he may be called upon to state such value. Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 348, 354, 34 L. Ed. 681.

41. Rental value of property.—New York, etc., Co. v. Fraser, 130 U. S. 611, 620, 32 L. Ed. 1031.

A witness who is acquainted with gold mills enough to know what work they can perform and what they can earn, is not competent to testify as to the fair rental value per month of a silver mill, where the silver mill in controversy is the only one he has ever seen. New York, etc., Co. v. Fraser, 130 U. S. 611, 620, 32 L. Ed. 1031.

"No error is shown in the exclusion of Geissner's testimony as to the rental value of a mill which he had never seen and knew nothing of." Stillwell, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 130 U. S. 520, 527, 32 L. Ed. 1035.

intemperance upon an insured, four years prior to the time of the issuance of the policy, is inadmissible.[42]

4. Disease.—Symptoms.—In a suit to recover damages suffered by loss of cattle, the loss being caused by the communication of a disease, witnesses, though not experts, may testify as to the symptoms they observed, and that cattle so afflicted were ordinarily spoken of as having Texas fever.[43]

Smallpox.—The testimony of persons, who were not experts, was inadmissible to prove that certain infected rags caused the breaking out of smallpox.[44]

5. Insanity.—While the mere opinion of a nonprofessional witness, predicated upon facts detailed by others, is incompetent as evidence upon an issue of insanity, his judgment, based upon personal knowledge of the circumstances involved in such an inquiry, certainly is of value; because the natural and ordinary operations of the human intellect, and the appearance and conduct of insane persons, as contrasted with the appearance and conduct of persons of sound mind, are more or less understood and recognized by every one of ordinary intelligence who comes in contact with his species.[45] The extent to which such opinions should influence or control the judgment of the court or jury must depend upon the intelligence of the witness, as manifested by his examination, and upon his opportunities to ascertain all the circumstances that should properly affect any conclusion reached. It will also depend, in part, upon the decree of the mental unsoundness of the person whose condition is the subject of inquiry; for, his derangement may be so total and palpable that but slight observation is necessary to enable persons of ordinary understanding to form a reasonably accurate judgment as to his sanity or insanity; in other cases, the symptoms may be of such an occult character as to require the closest scrutiny and the highest skill to detect the existence of insanity.[46]

6. Death.—The opinion of a person's family that he is dead is not admissible to prove him dead in an action upon an insurance policy on his life.[47]

7. Insurance.—See ante, "Insanity," II, B, 4; "Death," II, B, 6.

8. Damages from Railroads.—Opinion evidence has been admitted in actions against railroads for damages.[48]

42. Effect of intemperance.—Northwestern Life Ins. Co. v. Muskegon Bank, 122 U. S. 501, 505, 30 L. Ed. 1100.

45. Insanity.—Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 619, 28 L. Ed. 536. See, generally, the title INSANITY.

The testimony of ordinary persons as to the conduct, manner, and appearance of an insured, who took his own life and to the impressions thereby made upon them, is competent to go to the jury upon the question of his insanity. Insurance Co. v. Rodel, 95 U. S. 232, 24 L. Ed. 433.

Where a person is on trial for murder, a nonexpert witness may testify as to such defendant's appearance and conduct the day before the killing, and may give his opinion formed at the time as to the defendant's mental condition, but he cannot, unless under special circumstances, testify as to his opinion of such mental condition formed after the event. Queenan v. Oklahoma, 190 U. S. 548, 549, 47 L. Ed. 1175.

In an action upon an insurance policy and the issue is as to the sanity of the insured who had killed himself, evidence of the impressions and opinions of nonprofessional witnesses is admissible to show insanity, where they were acquainted with the deceased, and described his conduct and appearance at or about, and shortly before his death, thus giving the facts upon which their opinions are based. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 28 L. Ed. 536.

47. Death.—Fidelity Mut. Life Ass'n v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 321, 46 L. Ed. 922.

48. Damages from railroads.—In an action for damages against a railroad company for injuries to an employee caused by defective appliances, the question of the admissibility of evidence is one within the reasonable discretion of the trial court, and the discretion is not abused by admitting witnesses who had had practical experience on railroads, and were familiar with structures and the character of appliances mentioned in the evidence. Gila Valley, etc., R. Co. v. Lyon, 203 U. S. 465, 475, 51 L. Ed. 276. See, generally, the titles NEGLIGENCE; RAILROADS.

9. Rediscount of Note.—A witness who had been acting cashier in a bank for two months is competent, even if he had no prior experience, to testify as to whether a note was a rediscount or not.[49]

10. Financial Standing.—Where the question in issue is the knowledge of a person as to his financial condition, the opinions of witnesses as to such knowledge is inadmissible.[50] The opinion of the cashier of a bank is inadmissible to prove the financial standing of the president, who is charged with misapplying the funds of the bank.[51]

11. Results of Voluminous Facts and Examination of Books and Papers.—When it is necessary to prove the results of voluminous facts or of the examination of many books and papers, and the examination cannot be conveniently made in court, the results may be proved by the person who made the examination.[52]

C. Qualification of Witnesses.—In General.—The opinions of witnesses are constantly taken as to the result of their observations on a great variety of subjects. All that is required in such cases is that the witnesses should be able to properly make the observations,[53] the result of which they give, and the confidence bestowed on their conclusions will depend upon the extent and completeness of their examination, and the ability with which it is made.[54]

EXPERT WITNESSES.—See the title Expert and Opinion Evidence, ante, p. 200.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.—As to the liability of a carrier for damages caused by the explosion of nitroglycerine, which is in his care, see the title Carriers, vol. 3, p. 617. ages to cotton caused by fire, the testimony of witnesses that they did not know of and saw no opportunity for the cotton to have caught fire except from the locomotive in question, is inadmissible, because the evidence was of a negative character and would not be relevant, and was in the nature of a conclusion of the witness to the effect that the fire had originated from the engine. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 289, 47 L. Ed. 1057.

53. Qualification of witnesses.—Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 437, 30 L. Ed. 708.

In an action to recover ores taken from a mine, the testimony of a witness is not admissible where he knew nothing about the quantity of ore taken out during the period alluded to; nor is it admissible because of a stipulation, if the stipulation is nowhere produced in the record. Patrick v. Graham, 132 U. S. 627, 631, 33 L. Ed. 460. See, generally, the title MINES AND MINERALS.

An employee is not competent to testify as to the daily capacity of an ore mill where the evidence shows that he was employed as a general manager who tended to the outside affairs of the business, and not to the details of the mining or practical workings of the machinery. Chateaugay Ore, etc., Co. v. Blake, 144 U. S. 476, 485, 36 L. Ed. 510.

54. Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 437, 30 L. Ed. 708.

It is difficult to lay down any exact rule in respect to the amount of knowledge a witness must possess; and the determination of this matter rests largely in the discretion of the trial judge. Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 348, 353, 34 L. Ed. 681.

Where a witness testifies as to the identification of a document, his testimony is not inadmissible where he uses the words "I should say" when it is clear that those words, instead of being the expression of a conjecture, were simply a form of speech, and he proceeded to furnish the basis for his statement. White v. Van Horn, 159 U. S. 3, 11, 40 L. Ed. 55.

EXPORTATION.—See note 1.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.—See the titles INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE; REVENUE LAWS; TAXATION. The words "exports" and "imports" as used in that clause of the constitution which declares that "no state shall, without the consent of congress, lay imposts or duties on imports or exports," does not refer to articles carried from one state into another, but only to articles imported from foreign countries into the United States.[2] An import or expert is an article of merchandise, goods of some kind—property, "commodities." The terms do not include persons unless they are brought in as property—as slaves, unwilling or passive emigrants, like the importation referred to in the ninth section of the first article of the constitution.[3] Imports are things imported; they are the be limited to expire at the same time of the foreign patent. It was held that the termination of a foreign patent by forfeiture did not terminate the United States patent. Pohl v. Anchor Brewing Co., 134 U. S. 381, 33 L. Ed. 953. See the title PATENTS.

1. Exportation.—In Turpin v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 504, 507, 29 L. Ed. 988, it is said: "But a general tax, laid on all property alike, and not levied on goods in course of exportation, nor because of their intended exportation, is not within the constitutional prohibition. How can the officers of the United States, or of the state, know that goods apparently part of the general mass, and not in course of exportation, will ever be exported? Will the mere word of the owner that they are intended for exportation make them exports? This cannot for a moment be contended. It would not be true, and would lead to the greatest frauds."

Period of exportation.—In Sampson v. Peaslee, 20 How. 571, 577, 15 L. Ed. 1022, it is said: "That the period of the exportation of merchandise is the time at which the value of any article is to be fixed by the appraisers. That in ordinary cases the date of the bill of lading may be regarded as the period of exportation." See, generally, the title REVENUE LAWS.

In Swan, etc., Co. v. United States, 190 U. S. 144, 146, 47 L. Ed. 984, it is said: "The fact that the words export and 'exportation' are, as we have indicated, generally used in the sense of transportation from this to a foreign country, makes against the contention that it is here used in a different sense."

3. Persons.—Passenger Cases, 7 How. 283, 535, 12 L. Ed. 702; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. 102, 9 L. Ed. 648; New York v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 27 L. Ed. 383, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

In People v. Compagnie Generale Translantique, 107 U. S. 59, 61, 27 L. Ed. 383, the court says: "We know of nothing which can be exported from one country or imported in another that is not in some sense property—property in regard to which some one is owner, and is either the importer or the exporter. This cannot apply to a free man. Of him it is never said he imports himself, or his wife or his children. The language of § 9, art. 1, of the constitution, which is relied on by counsel, does not establish a different construction: 'The migration or importation of such persons as any of the states now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the congress prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each person.' There has never been any doubt that this clause had exclusive reference to persons of the African race. The two words 'migration' and 'importation' refer to the different conditions of this race as regards freedom and slavery. When the free black man came here, he migrated; when the slave came, he was imported. The latter was property, and was imported by his owner as other property, and a duty could be imposed on him as an import. We conclude that free human beings are not imports or exports, within the meaning of the constitution." See Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 216, 6 L. Ed. 23; Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet. 449, 514, 10 L. Ed. 800.

A bill was filed in a state court stating that by reason of an existing strike a certain coal company threatened and was about to import into a certain town and county a large number of armed men, and prayed an injunction against such articles themselves which are brought into the country.[3a] Goods imported do not lose their character as imports, and become incorporated into the mass of property of the state until they have passed from the control of the imported, or been broken up by him from their original cases.[4]

EXPOSITIONS.—See the title THEATRES AND SHOWS. As to appropriations therefor, see the titles CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 798; UNITED STATES.

EX POST FACTO LAWS.—An ex post facto law is defined, when after an action indifferent in itself or lawful is committed, the legislature then for the first time declares it to have been a crime and inflicts punishment upon the person who committed it.[1]

EXPOSURE.—As to exposure to danger, see the titles ACCIDENT INSURANCE, vol. 1, p. 58; NEGLIGENCE. As to exposure of person, see the title OBSCENITY.

importation. The court held that the word import necessarily meant bringing into the county and town from outside their boundaries, but did not think, taking the whole bill together, that as there used its necessary signification was the bringing in from outside of the state, so as to give jurisdiction in a federal court. Arkansas v. Kansas, etc., Coal Co., 183 U. S. 185, 189, 46 L. Ed. 144.

3a. Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 437, 6 L. Ed. 678. A duty "on imports, then, is not merely a duty on the act of importation, but is a duty on the thing imported." Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 437, 6 L. Ed. 678.

In Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 445, 6 L. Ed. 678, it is said: "As, to export, it is said, means only to carry goods out of the country; so, to import, means only to bring them into it." See, also, Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. Ed. 382.

1. Ex post facto laws.—Prize Cases, 2 Black 635, 698, 17 L. Ed. 459. For a complete treatment of this subject, see the title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 4, pp. 515, 529. As to retrospective laws generally, see the title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 4, p. 432.

In Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 285, 46 L. Ed. 196, it is said: "The debates in the federal convention upon the constitution show that the terms ex post facto laws, were understood in a restricted sense, relating to criminal cases only, and that the description of Blackstone of such laws was referred to for their meaning. 3 Mad. Pap. 1399, 1450, 1579. This signification was adopted in this court shortly after its organization, in opinions carefully prepared, and has been repeatedly announced since that time." See, also, the title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 4, pp. 433, 517.

In In Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 202, 219, 31 L. Ed. 402, it was held that an ordinance and proceedings under it to remove a city official were in the nature of civil as distinguished from criminal proceedings, and that such ordinances and proceedings were not within the provision of the United States constitution against ex post facto laws.

2. Express.—Where a statute authorized a town to borrow money to construct a railroad, the money to be paid over to such railroad company as might be expressed by the written assents of two-thirds of the resident taxpayers of said town, it was held that the statute did not require that the taxpayers should express (that is, designate) the company by its name. Any mode of description that designated it was sufficient. Scipio v. Wright, 101 U. S. 665, 670, 25 L. Ed. 1037. See, generally, the title MUNICIPAL, COUNTY, STATE AND FEDERAL AID.

Express business.—An express business involves the idea of regularity, as to route or time, or both. Retzer v. Wood, 109 U. S. 187, 27 L. Ed. 900. Accordingly, it was held, when an act of congress emposed a tax on persons carrying on express business, this did not apply to a carrier without a regular route.

Expressed oils.—In the act of congress of March, 1883, providing that the duties on all preparations known as "expressed oils," not specially numerated or provided for in the act, should be 25 per cent. ad valorem, the words "expressed oil" were held to include olive oils, both salad and lamp. Hartranft v. Oliver, 125 U. S. 525, 527, 31 L. Ed. 813.

"Express Business."—An "express business" involves the idea of regularity, as to route or time, or both.[1]

Grant of Privilege to Do Business.—A state statute imposing taxes upon express companies does not grant a privilege of doing express business.[2]

Statutory Discrimination.—Where a statute defines express companies to be such "persons or corporations who carry on the business of transportation on contracts for hire with railroad or steamboat companies," a tax on such companies does not unjustly discriminate against the express companies defined by the statute, and favor other companies or persons that may, in connection with their primary or original business, engage in express business, or that may carry on a separate express business, owning their own means of transportation.[3]

The idea of regularity, as to route or time, or both, is involved in the words "express business," under § 104 of the act of June 30th, 1864, ch. 173, 13 Stat. 276, and those words do not cover what is done by a person who carries goods solely on call and at special request, and does not run regular trips or over regular routes. Railroad companies are not charged by law with the duty of carrying all express companies in the way that express carriers when taken are usually carried. Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 26, 29 L. Ed. 791.

"So long as the public are served to their reasonable satisfaction, it is a matter of no importance who serves them. The railroad company performs its whole duty to the public at large and to each individual when it affords the public all reasonable express accommodations. If this is done the railroad company owes no duty to the public as to the particular agencies it shall select for that purpose. The public require the carriage, but the company may choose its own appropriate means of carriage, always provided they are such as to insure reasonable promptness and security." Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 23, 29 L. Ed. 791.

In some of the states, statutes have been passed which, either in express terms or by judicial interpretation, require railroad companies to furnish equal facilities to all express companies, Gen. Laws N. H. 1878, ch. 163, § 2; Rev. Stat. Maine, 1883, 494, ch. 51, § 134; but these are of comparative recent origin, and thus far seen not to have been generally adopted. Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 21, 29 L. Ed. 791.

EXPRESSLY.—While the adverb "expressly," in its primary meaning, denotes precision of statement, as opposed to ambiguity, implication, or inference, and is equivalent to "in an express manner," or "in direct terms," it is also commonly used to designate purpose, and as equivalent to "especially," or "particularly," or "for a distinct purpose or object." In Webster's Dictionary, for instance, the definition of "expressly" is: "In an express manner; in direct terms; with distinct purpose; particularly; as, a book written expressly for the young."[1]

Where a clause of the tariff act of 1883 provided for duty upon suphate of potash, eo nomine, and another clause exempted from duty "all substances expressly used for manure; the term "expressly used for manure," it was said, was equivalent to "used expressly" or "particularly" or "especially" for manure, and if it were found as a fact that the imported article was so used, it was exempt from duty. Magone v. Heller, 150 U. S. 70, 74, 37 L. Ed. 1001; Chew Hing Lung v. Wise, 176 U. S. 156, 161, 44 L. Ed. 412. See the title REVENUE LAWS.

2. Ex ship.—A contract was for the sale of goods at a certain price ex ship. The court said: "The words ex ship are not restricted to any particular ship; and by the usage of merchants, as shown in this case, simply denote that the property in the goods shall pass to the buyer upon their leaving the ship's tackle, and that he shall be liable for all subsequent charges of landing. They do not constitute a condition of the contract, but are inserted for the benefit of the seller. See Neill v. Whitworth, 18 C. B. (N. S.) 435, and L. R. 1. C. P. 684." Harrison v. Fortlage, 161 U. S. 58, 64, 40 L. Ed. 616.

3. Extend.—In the case of Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 304, 375, 4 L. Ed. 97, the court in construing the second section of article 3 of the constitution of the United States said: "The words are, 'shall extend to;' now that which extends to, does not necessarily include in, so that the circle may enlarge, until it reaches the objects that limit it, and yet not take them in. But the plain and obvious sense and meaning of the word 'shall,' in this sentence, is in the future sense, and has nothing imperative in it." See the title PATENTS.

4. External and visible sign.—The clause in a certificate of an accident association, that benefits shall not extend to any bodily injury of which there shall be no "external and visible sign," is not to be confined to broken limbs or bruises on the surface of the body, but if an internal injury produces, for example, a pale and sickly look in the face, causing vomiting or retching, if, in short, it sends forth to the observation of the eye, in the struggle of nature, any signs of the injury —then those are "external and visible signs," provided they are the direct result of the injury. Sending Threatening Letters.—It has been held that the sending of threatening letters by a consul with a view of extorting money is indictable in a circuit court.[1]

Threatening to Accuse of Crime.—The offense of extortion by threats to accuse a person of a violation of any part of the internal revenue law is made a crime by virtue of the federal statute.[2]

Civil Surgeons.—Civil surgeons appointed by the commissioner of pensions under § 4777 of the Revised Statutes are not officers of the United States, and, therefore, are not indictable under § 12 of the act of 1825 (4 Stat. 118), for extortion in taking fees from pensioners.[3]

Chinese Inspectors.—A Chinese inspector guilty of extortion under color of his office can be prosecuted and subjected to fine and imprisonment under § 5481, Rev. Stat., which provides that: "Every officer of the United States who is guilty of extortion under color of his office shall be punished."[4] Prosecutions against a Chinese inspector, for extortion, cannot be sustained under § 3169, Rev. Stat.; nor can they be sustained under § 23 of the act of February 8, 1875, because such statutes refer to offenses committed by officers or agents acting under authority of revenue laws.[5]

I. Definitions and Distinctions.

A. Definitions.—Extradition may be sufficiently defined to be the surrender by one nation to another of an individual accused or convicted of an offense outside of its own territory, and within the territorial jurisdiction of the other, which, being competent to try and to punish him, demands the surrender.[1]

B. Distinctions—1. DISTINGUISHED FROM "DEPORTATION" AND "TRANSPORTATION."—Strictly speaking, "transportation," "extradition" and "deportation," although each has the effect of removing a person from the country, are different things, and have different purposes. "Transportation" is by way of punishment of one convicted of an offense against the laws of the country. "Extradition" is the surrender to another country of one accused of an offense against its laws, there to be tried, and, if found guilty, punished. "Deportation" is the removal of an alien out of the country, simply because his presence is deemed inconsistent with the public welfare, and without any punishment being imposed or contemplated, either under the laws of the country out of which he is sent, or under those of the country to which he is taken.[2]

2. Distinction between International and Interstate Extradition.—See post, "Trial on Another Charge," IV.

II. International.

A. In General.—The surrender of fugitives from justice is a matter of conventional arrangement between states, as no such obligation is imposed by the laws of nations.[3]

B. Exclusiveness of Federal Authority.—Where an authority is granted to the federal government, to which a similar authority in the states would be absolutely and totally contradictory and repugnant, there the authority to the federal government is exclusive; therefore, a state cannot enter into extradition treaties nor make laws or agreements for the detention and return of fugitives from justice from foreign countries, as such power is repugnant to the power granted to the United States, and cannot be constitutionally exercised by the states.[4]

C. Extradition Treaties—1. Construction of.—In the construction and

2. Distinguished from "deportation" and "transportation."—Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 709, 37 L. Ed. 905. See, generally, the titles ALIENS, vol. 1, p. 210; CHINESE EXCLUSION ACTS, vol. 3, p. 769.

3. In general.—In re Metzger, 5 How. 176, 188, 12 L. Ed. 104.

It is only in modern times that the nations of the earth have imposed upon themselves the obligation of delivering up fugitives from justice to the states where their crimes were committed, for trial and punishment. This has been done generally by treaties made by one independent government with another. Prior to these treaties, and apart from them, it may be stated as the general result of the writers upon international law, that there was no well-defined obligation on one country to deliver up such fugitives to another, and though such delivery was often made, it was upon the principle of comity, and within the discretion of the government whose action was invoked; and it has never been recognized as among those obligations of one government towards another which rest upon established principles of international law. United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 411, 30 L. Ed. 425.

It has been said, in Holmes v. Jennison, that it is the policy of the federal government, in the absence of extradition treaties, to refuse to surrender fugitives from justice or to demand from a foreign government any one who has fled from this country in order to escape from the punishment due to his crimes. Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 540, 573, 10 L. Ed. 579.

4. Exclusiveness of federal authority.—Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 540, 573, 10 L. Ed. 579.

"Whether in the United States, in the absence of any treaty on the subject with a foreign nation from whose justice a fugitive may be found in one of the states, and in the absence of any act of congress upon the subject, a state can, through its own judiciary or executive, surrender him for trial to such foreign nation, is a question which has been under consideration by the courts of this country without any very conclusive result," but "at this time of day, and after the repeated examinations which have been made by this court into the powers of the federal government to deal with all such international questions exclusively, it can hardly be admitted that, even in the absence of treaties or acts of congress on the subject, the extradition of a fugitive from justice can become the subject of negotiation between a state of this Union and a foreign government." United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 412, 414, 30 L. Ed. 425.

This question arose in Holmes v. Jennison. H. was indicted in Canada for murder, and fled to the state of Vermont, where he was confined under a warrant issued by the government of Vermont. He petitioned to the supreme court of Vermont for a writ of habeas corpus, and on hearing he was remanded by the state court; he then prosecuted a writ of error to the supreme court of the United States. The court was equally divided upon the question whether a state can deliver up an individual found within its territory to a foreign government, and the writ of error was dismissed. In this case there was no extradition treaty under which the United States could have surrendered H. Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. 540, 10 L. Ed. 579.

In cases where a state seeks to have a person extradited from a foreign country, it must carry on the negotiations through the federal government, even though it is a law of the state that has been violated. United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 30 L. Ed. 425.

carrying out of extradition treaties, the ordinary technicalities of criminal proceedings are applicable only to a limited extent.[5]

2. Right to Asylum under Treaties.—Extradition treaties made by the United States with foreign countries do not entitle a party fleeing from one country to the other, to an asylum in the country to which he has fled. These treaties, so far as they regulate the right of asylum at all, are intended to limit this right in the case of one who has proved to be a criminal fleeing from justice, so that, on proper demand and proceedings had therein, the government of the country of the asylum shall deliver him up to the country where the crime was committed.[6]

3. Extraditable Offenses—a. Essentials.—The general principle of international law is that in all cases of extradition the act done on account of which extradition is demanded must be considered a crime by both countries; and such principle is embodied in a treaty which provides that the offense must be "made criminal by the laws of both countries."[7]

b. Political Offenses.—It has been the policy of all governments to grant an asylum to persons who have fled from their homes on account of political disturbances, and who might be there amenable to laws framed with regard to such subjects, and to the personal allegiance of the party. In many of the treaties of extradition between the civilized nations of the world, there is an express exclusion of the right to demand the extradition of offenders against such laws, and in none of them is this class of offenses mentioned as being the foundation of extradition proceedings.[8]

4. Protection Afforded by Treaty.—When a party is duly surrendered to a state under a treaty, he is clothed with the protection which the treaty gives him, and if a state denies him such rights, he can appeal to the federal government. But if he is kidnapped and brought to a state in disregard of any treaty, abductors not professing to act under any foreign authority, then, he cannot appeal to the federal government, as he is clothed with no rights which a proceeding under a treaty could have given him, and there is no duty that this county owes to the country from which he was taken, nor do the constitution or laws of the United States guarantee him any protection.[9]

D. Statutory Provisions—1. Extradition to Country under Control of United States.—The act of congress of June 6, 1900, amending § 5270, Revised Statutes, provides for extradition from the United States to any foreign country or territory, or any part thereof that is occupied by or under the control of the United States.[10]

6. Asylum under treaties.—Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 442, 30 L. Ed. 421.

7. Essentials.—Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 58, 47 L. Ed. 948; Treaty with England, 1889.

Where fraudulent acts of a corporate director are made criminal by the laws of England, and one guilty of such acts flees to New York, he may be extradited under the treaty of 1889, which provides for the extradition of corporate directors committing fraud "made punishable by the laws of both countries," although the statutes of the two countries defining the offense are not absolutely identical. Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 47 L. Ed. 948.

Where a person forges theater tickets in Mexico in violation of its laws, and flees to the United States, he may be extradited under the treaty of 1862 entered into between the two countries. Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 32 L. Ed. 234.

In the treaty of 1862 between the United States and Mexico, the crime of "forgery" is not to be restricted in its meaning or scope by the common law. Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 466, 32 L. Ed. 234.

Under the treaty entered into between Prussia and the United States in 1858, a person may be extradited from the United States if he commits a crime in Prussia, such a forgery, which is contrary to the laws of the German Empire. Terlinden v. Ames, 184 U. S. 270, 289, 46 L. Ed. 534.

10. Extradition to country under control of United States.—31 Stat. 656, ch. 793.

The island of Cuba is included within

2. Jurisdiction of Commissioner—a. Necessity for Special Authorization.—Under § 5270, Revised Statutes, the commissioner must be specially authorized to act in extradition cases, but he is not without jurisdiction to act simply because at the time the warrant was issued for the prisoner's detention, he had not been specially authorized; it is sufficient if he is specially authorized at the time he assumes to act.[11]

b. Necessity of Requisition from Demanding Government.—It is not necessary that a requisition from the demanding government be produced before the commissioner can act.[12]

c. Nature of Proceeding before Commissioner.—The proceeding before a commissioner is not to be regarded as in the nature of a final trial by which the prisoner can be convicted or acquitted of the crime charged against him, but rather of the character of those preliminary examinations which take place every day in this country before an examining or committing magistrate for the purpose of determining whether a case is made out which will justify the holding of the accused, either by imprisonment or under bail, to ultimately answer to an indictment, or other proceeding, in which he shall be finally tried upon the charge made against him.[13]

d. Right of Commissioner to Grant a Continuance.—In extradition proceedings the commissioner may grant a continuance of the examination, and is not controlled in his discretion by the laws of the state.[14]

3. Bail.—While bail should not ordinarily be granted in cases of foreign extradition, it has not been held that the circuit courts may not in any case, and whatever the special circumstances, extend that relief.[15]

4. Complaint—a. Who May Make Complaint.—The complaint may be made by any person acting under the authority of the foreign government having knowledge of the facts, or, in the absence of such person, by the official representative of the foreign government based upon depositions in his possession.[16]

b. Oath.—Section 5270, Revised Statutes, requires that a warrant of arrest must issue upon a complaint made under oath; it does not require that the oath shall be taken before a commissioner authorized to act in extradition proceedings, or even before the judge or commissioner who issues the warrant.[17]

c. Requisites.—In an extradition proceedings the complaint need not set the meaning of the act of June 6, 1900. Neely v. Henkel, 180 U. S. 109, 48 L. Ed. 448.

11. Necessity for special authorization.—Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 186, 47 L. Ed. 130.

A United States commissioner has, under the extradition treaty with England of 1842, the power and jurisdiction to issue a warrant for the arrest of a fugitive without the previous mandate from the executive department. In re Kaine, 14 How. 103, 111, 14 L. Ed. 345.

12. Requisition from demanding government.—Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 194, 47 L. Ed. 130.

13. Nature of proceeding before commissioner.—Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 463, 32 L. Ed. 234.

14. Rice v. Ames, 180 U. S. 371, 376, 377, 45 L. Ed. 577. And this rule applies under the treaty with Great Britain, which provides that the extradition of fugitives "shall be carried out in the United States and in Her Majesty's dominions respectively, in conformity with the laws regulating extradition for the time being in force in the surrendering states," as this evidently contemplates the laws of the United States regulating extradition, and has no reference whatever to the laws of the particular state within which the proceedings are taken.

15. Bail.—Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 63, 47 L. Ed. 948. See, generally, the title BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE, vol. 2, p. 765.

Not only is there no statute providing for admission to bail in cases of foreign extradition, but § 5270 of the Revised Statutes is inconsistent with its allowance after committal, for it is there provided that if he finds the evidence sufficient, the commissioner or judge "shall issue his warrant for the commitment of the person so charged to the proper jail, there to remain until such surrender shall be made." Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 62, 47 L. Ed. 948.

16. Who may make complaint.—Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 193, 47 L. Ed. 130.

17. Oath.—Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 186, 47 L. Ed. 130.

Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 193, 47 L. Ed. 130. No evidence is required that a Russian consul had authority to make the complaint, as all that is required by § 5270 is that a complaint be made under oath.

forth the crime with the particularity of an indictment; it is sufficient, if it fairly apprises the party of the crime of which he is charged.[18]

5. Evidence—a. To Establish Official Character of Foreign Magistrate.—To establish the official character of a foreign magistrate before whom depositions were taken, a prima facie case is made under the act of 1848, when certified copies are produced, which are sworn to by the party producing them.[19]

b. Foreign Magistrate's Warrant of Arrest.—It is not necessary, under the extradition treaty with Russia, to produce in extradition proceedings, a copy of the warrant of arrest issued by a Russian magistrate, as such procedure has been dispensed with by § 5270, Revised Statutes, which is applicable to all governments with which the United States have treaties of extradition.[20]

c. Authentication Requirements of the Act of 1882.—Section 5 of the act of August 3, 1882, which provides for the authentication of papers received as evidence upon the hearing of an extradition case, applies only to papers or copies thereof, which are offered in evidence by the prosecution to establish the criminality of the person apprehended, and does not apply to documents or depositions offered on the part of the accused.[21]

d. Sufficiency of Evidence.—It has been held that for the purpose of the determination of the guilt of a person charged with crime, in extradition proceedings, it is sufficient if only a prima facie case is made out.[22]

6. Issue of Warrant of Arrest.—A commissioner specially appointed by a court of the United States under and in execution of statutes enacted to give effect to treaty stipulations for the apprehension and delivery of offenders, has no power to issue a warrant for the arrest of an alleged criminal which may be executed by a marshal of the United States, within his district, in a state other than the one in which the commissioner has his office. And a person, arrested under such a warrant, cannot be lawfully taken beyond the state, in which he

The complaint is not defective, in extradition proceedings charging embezzlement, because it does not use the word "fraudulently," the allegation being "that the accused wrongfully, unlawfully and feloniously appropriated said money." Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 189, 47 L. Ed. 130.

A complaint in extradition proceedings sufficiently charges the crime of embezzlement under the Col. Pen. Code, § 508, although it alleges that the property came into the possession of the accused "in his capacity of clerk," instead of following the language of the statute by charging that it was "by virtue of his employment as such clerk." The requirement of the extradition treaty with Russia of 1893, that "the application for extradition shall be accompanied by an authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest or of some other equivalent judicial document issued by a judge or magistrate" of the demanding country, is sufficiently complied with by the production of an order purporting to be signed and sealed by an examining magistrate of Russia, if it is evidently designed to secure the apprehension of the accused and his production before an examining magistrate, even though it is not in the form of arrest used in the United States. Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 47 L. Ed. 130.

21. Authentication requirements of the act of 1882.—In re Oteiza, 136 U. S. 330, 336, 34 L. Ed. 464.

The certificate of a Russian ambassador that the depositions and other documents which appear in the record "are properly and legally authenticated so as to entitle them to be received and admitted as evidence for similar purposes by the tribunals of Russia," is a literal conformation with § 5 of the act of August 3, 1882, 22 Stat. 216, and is not defective because of the addition of the words "as evidence." Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 193, 47 L. Ed. 130.

22. Sufficiency of evidence.—Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 47 L. Ed. 130.

Where it appears in extradition proceedings brought in California, against a Russian, on a charge of embezzlement that a check was delivered to him with instructions to draw the money from the bank, take it to a railway station and forward it to another city, such facts show that he obtained possession of both the check and the money, honestly, and with the consent of his principal, and if he subsequently converted it to his own use, a prima facie case is made, and the fact whether there was an original intent to was found, and delivered in another state before the officer who issued the warrant of arrest, without any preliminary examination in the former state as to the criminality of the charge against him.[23]

To Whom Warrant Should Be Made Returnable.—It may be said that technically the warrant, under § 5270, Revised Statutes, should be made returnable before the magistrate issuing it, but where it is made returnable before another officer, having the same power and jurisdiction to act, it is not fairly open to criticism.[24]

7. Review of Proceedings by Habeas Corpus.—Cannot Perform Office of Writ of Error.—A writ of habeas corpus cannot perform the office of a writ of error, and in extradition proceedings, if the committing magistrate has jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the accused, and the offense charged is within the terms of the treaty of extradition, and the magistrate, in arriving at a decision to hold the accused, has before him complete legal evidence on which to exercise his judgment as to whether the facts are sufficient to establish the criminality of the accused for the purposes of extradition, such decision cannot be reviewed by a circuit court or by this court, on habeas corpus, either originally or by appeal.[25] The court issuing the writ may, however, inquire and adjudge whether the commissioner acquired jurisdiction of the matter, by conforming to the requirements of the treaty and the statute; whether he exceeded his jurisdiction; and whether he had any legal or competent evidence of facts before him, on which to exercise a judgment as to the criminality of the accused.[26]

Objection Not Made before Commissioner.—Where no objection is made before a commissioner fully vested with authority to act, that the judge made his warrant returnable before such commissioner, the objection cannot be made available for the first time on habeas corpus, although § 5270, Rev. Stat., tech-steal is a question for the Russian court to determine, it is sufficient for the purposes of the California proceeding to make out a prima facie case. Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 47 L. Ed. 130.

23. Issue of warrant of arrest.—In Pettit v. Walshe, 194 U. S. 205, 48 L. Ed. 938, where a complaint was made before a commissioner in New York charging L. with murder committed in Great Britain, and the commissioner issued a warrant addressed "to any marshal of the United States, to the deputies of any such marshal, or any or either of them," and a marshal of the United States for the district of Indiana found and arrested the accused in that state, it was held that under the treaty with England which provides the accused shall be surrendered "upon such evidence of criminality as according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found," would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime or offense had there been committed; L. could not be lawfully taken from Indiana and delivered for examination before the New York commissioner until he had had a preliminary examination in Indiana, and the question of his criminality tried upon sufficient evidence as to justify his apprehension and commitment under the laws of Indiana had the murder been committed in such state, although it is provided that the accused be brought before the commissioner issuing the warrant, by the act of 1848, and § 5270, Rev. Stat.

A. The Constitutional Provision—1. NATURE OF.—The constitutional provision relating to fugitives from justice, as the history of its adoption will show, is in the nature of a treaty stipulation entered into for the purpose of securing a prompt and efficient administration of the criminal laws of the several states—an object of the first concern to the people of the entire country, and which each state is bound, in fidelity to the constitution, to recognize. A faithful, vigorous enforcement of that stipulation is vital to the harmony and welfare of the states. And while a state should take care, within the limits of the law, that the rights of its people are protected against illegal action, the judicial authorities of the Union should equally take care that the provisions of the constitution be not so narrowly interpreted as to enable offenders against the laws of a state to find a permanent asylum in the territory of another state.[28]

2. HISTORY OF.—The necessity of this policy of mutual support, in bringing offenders to justice, without any exception as to the character and nature of the crime, seems to have been first recognized and acted on by the American colonies; for we find by Winthrop's History of Massachusetts, vol. 2, pages 121 and 126, that as early as 1643, by articles of confederation between the plantations under the government of the different colonies, the plantations pledged themselves to each other, to help apprehend and return fugitives from justice. When by the Declaration of Independence, these colonies had become separate and independent sovereignties they formed a confederation for mutual support in which similar provisions were introduced. And later, as they were about to form a still closer union by the present constitution, but still preserving their sovereignty, they introduced in the constitution a provision to extradite fugitives guilty of every offense known to the law of the state from which the party had fled.[29]

3. TERMS OF.—"A person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another state, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime."[30]

"Charge" with Crime.—A complaint entered before a committing magistrate having power under the laws of the demanding state to examine and bind for trial in a higher court, is sufficient to "charge" a person with crime within the meaning of the constitution and laws of the United States providing for the extradition of fugitives from justice.[31]

B. Acts of Congress—1. NECESSITY OF.—This duty of providing by law the regulations necessary to carry this compact into execution, from the nature of the duty and the object in view, was manifestly devolved upon congress; for if it was left to the states, each state might require different proof to authenticate the judicial proceeding upon which the demand was founded; and as the duty of the governor of the state where the fugitive was found is, in such cases, cheques were presented to the Commercial Bank by a bank at which the appellant kept a personal account, and this account showed a credit of three cheques, which upon the following day were presented and paid by the Commercial Bank, and that the appellant had no authority to sign cheques for Morrison & Marshall, the inference is at least a reasonable one that these cheques were forged by the appellant." Bryant v. United States, 167 U. S. 104, 107, 42 L. Ed. 94.

27. Objection not made before commissioner.—Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 188, 47 L. Ed. 130. See ante, "Issue of Warrant of Arrest." II, D, 6.

merely ministerial, without the right to exercise either executive or judicial discretion, he could not lawfully issue a warrant to arrest an individual without a law of the state or of congress to authorize it.[32]

2. TERMS OF.—"Whenever the executive authority of any state or territory demands any person as a fugitive from justice, of the executive authority of any state or territory to which such person has fled, and produces a copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any state or territory, charging the person demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state or territory from whence the person so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the state or territory to which such person has fled to cause him to be arrested and secured, and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear. If no such agent appears within six months from the time of the arrest, the prisoner may be discharged. All costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive to the state or territory making such demand, shall be paid by such state or territory."[33]

C. Extraditable Crimes.—The words "treason, felony or other crime," in the second clause of the second section of the fourth article of the constitution of the United States, include every offense forbidden and made punishable by the laws of the state where the offense is committed.[34] And such offenses may be made the foundation of a requisition.[35]

As Applied to Persons Found in Territories.—Although the constitutional provision in question does not, in terms, refer to fugitives from the justice of any state, who may be found in one of the territories of the United States, the act of congress has equal application to that class of cases.[36]

D. Extraditable Persons—1. FUGITIVES FROM SERVICE.—See, generally, the titles ARMY AND NAVY, vol. 2, p. 494; SEAMEN; SLAVERY AND INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE.

2. FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE—a. "Fugitive" Defined.—To be a fugitive from justice in the sense of the act of congress, it is not necessary that the party charged should have left the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, after an indictment found, or for the purpose of avoiding a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that having within a state committed that which by its laws constitutes a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense, he has left its jurisdiction and is found within the territory of another.[37]

32. Necessity of acts of congress.—Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 104, 16 L. Ed. 717.

"These difficulties presented themselves as early as 1791, in a demand made by the governor of Pennsylvania upon the governor of Virginia, and both of them admitted the propriety of bringing the subject before the president, who immediately submitted the matter to the consideration of congress. And this led to the act of 1793. * * * All difficulty as to the mode of authenticating the judicial proceeding was removed by the article in the constitution, which declares, 'that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings, of every other state; and the congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which acts, records, and proceedings, shall be proved, and the effect thereof.' And without doubt the provision of which we are now speaking—that is, for the delivery of a fugitive, which requires official communications between states, and the authentication of official documents—was in the minds of the framers of the constitution, and had its influence in inducing them to give this power to congress." Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 104, 16 L. Ed. 717.

37. "Fugitive" defined.—Roberts v.

b. Ignorance That Crime Was Committed.—A person leaving a state in ignorance that he had committed a crime therein, may be a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the constitution and laws of the United States.[38]

c. Actual Presence.—It has never been held that the statute covered a case where the party was not in the state at the time when the act is alleged to have been committed. The plain meaning of the act requires such presence, and it was not intended to include, as a fugitive from the justice of a state, one who had not been in the state at the time when, if ever, the offense was committed, and who had not, therefore in fact, fled therefrom.[39] A subsequent going there and coming away is not flight.[40]

Proof of Presence.—The person accused is entitled, under the act of congress, to insist upon proof that he was within the demanding state at the time he is alleged to have committed the crime charged, and subsequently withdrew from her jurisdiction, so that he could not be reached by her criminal process.[41]

d. Right to Asylum.—The laws of the United States do not recognize any right of asylum, on the part of a fugitive from justice in any state to which he has fled.[42]

3. Intruders and Lawless Bands from Another State.—The surrender of fugitives to the states whose laws have been violated, is the only aid provided by the laws of the United States for the punishment of depredations and violence committed in one state by intruders and lawless bands from another state.[43]

E. Power and Duty of Governor—1. Governor Demanding Extradition of Fugitive.—Source of Power.—The constitution confers power upon the chief executive of a state to demand the return of a fugitive from the state to which he has fled.[44]

2. Governor of Whom Extradition of Fugitive Is Demanded—a. In General.—Upon the executive of the state in which the accused is found rests the responsibility of determining, in some legal mode, whether he is a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state. And for this purpose he may make it a condition precedent to the surrender of the accused that it be shown to him, by competent proof, that the accused is, in fact, a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state.[45] There is also an obligation upon the governor of the surrendering state to deliver the person demanded without any reference to the character of the crime charged, or to the policy or laws of the state to which

"But the appellant contended below, as he does here, that he had no belief when leaving New York at any time that he had violated its criminal laws, and therefore, within the meaning of the constitution and laws of the United States, he could not be deemed a fugitive from its justice. This contention cannot be sustained; indeed, it could not be sustained without materially impairing the efficacy of the constitutional and statutory provisions relating to fugitives from justice. An alleged fugitive may believe that he has not committed any crime against the laws of the state in which he is indicted, and yet, according to the laws of such state, as administered by its judicial tribunals, he may have done so, and his belief, or want of belief, may be without foundation in law." When a person was not in the state at the time the crime was committed, but eight days afterwards goes there on business and leaves when the business is completed, he is not a fugitive from justice within the meaning of § 5278, Rev. Stat. Hyatt v. People, 188 U. S. 691, 47 L. Ed. 657.

b. Statutory Provisions.—The act of congress, Rev. Stat., § 5278, makes it the duty of the executive authority of the state to which such person has fled to cause the arrest of the alleged fugitive from justice, whenever the executive authority of any state demands such person as a fugitive from justice, and produces a copy of an indictment found, or affidavit made, before a magistrate of any state, charging the person demanded with having committed a crime therein, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state from whence the person so charged has fled.[47]

c. When Governor Refuses to Act.—It is the duty of the governor of whom extradition of a fugitive is demanded, to return the fugitive over to the demanding state, but if he refuses to do so, there is no power either through the judicial department or any other department to compel him.[48]

d. Nature of Governor's Act.—When the governor surrenders the fugitive to the demanding state, his act is the act of the state which he represents, and it cannot require, after such surrender, the appearance of the fugitive before its tribunals.[49]

e. Capacity in Which Governor Acts.—The judicial acts which are necessary to authorize the demand are plainly specified in the act of congress; and the certificate of the executive authority is made conclusive as to their verity when presented to the executive of the state where the fugitive is found. He has no right to look behind them, or to question them, or to look into the character of the crime specified in this judicial proceeding; the duty which he is to perform is merely ministerial.[50]

f. Evidence before Governor—(1) Questions of Law and Fact to Be Proved.—Before a governor of a state can lawfully comply with the demand to deliver a fugitive, it must appear, first, that the person demanded is substantially charged with a crime against the laws of the state from whose justice he is alleged to have fled, by an indictment or an affidavit, certified as authentic by the governor of the state making the demand; and, second, that the person demanded is a fugitive from the justice of the state the executive authority of which makes the demand.[51] The first is a question of law and the second a question of fact.[52]

Right to Be Heard before Governor.—The person demanded has no constitutional right to be heard before the governor on either question, and the statute provides for none.[53]

(2) Evidence of Fugitivity.—A governor may surrender a fugitive when the evidence before him makes out a prima facie case of the fugitive's guilt,[54] and

50. Capacity in which governor acts.—Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 106, 16 L. Ed. 717. The question of whether the indictment sufficiently charges the crime is a judicial question for the courts of the demanding states to determine, and not the governor of the surrendering state. Any other interpretation would lead to the conclusion that the mere requisition by the executive of the demanding state, accompanied by the copy of an indictment, or an affidavit before a magistrate, certified by him to be authentic, charging the accused with crime committed within her limits, imposes upon the executive of the state or territory where the accused is found, the duty of surrendering him, although he may be satisfied, from incontestable proof, that the accused had, in fact, never been in the demanding state, and, therefore, could not be said to have fled from its justice. he need not demand proof of the fugitivity of a person other than that shown by the requisition papers.[55]

g. Conclusiveness of Governor's Decision.—When the requisition proceedings before a governor are regular, his decision is conclusive, and cannot be reviewed.[56]

F. Where Accused Is in Custody under Laws of Surrendering State.—Where a demand is properly made by the governor of one state upon the governor of another, the duty to surrender is not absolute and unqualified, but depends upon the circumstances of the case, and if the laws of the latter state have been put in force against the fugitive, and he is imprisoned there, the demands of those laws may first be satisfied.[57]

G. Habeas Corpus—1. Right of Accused to Invoke Aid.—Whenever the executive of the state, upon whom a demand has been made, by virtue of his warrant, causes the arrest for delivery of a person charged as a fugitive from the justice of another state, the prisoner is held in custody only under color of authority derived from the constitution and laws of the United States, and is entitled to invoke the judgment of the judicial tribunals, whether of the state or the United States, by the writ of habeas corpus, upon the lawfulness of his arrest and imprisonment.[58]

2. Power of State Courts.—Subject to the exclusive and paramount authority of the national government, by its own judicial tribunals, to determine whether persons held in custody by authority of the courts of the United States, or by the commissioners of such courts, or by officers of the general government, acting under its laws, are so held in conformity with law, the states have the right, by their own courts, or by the judges thereof, to inquire into the grounds upon which any person, within their respective territorial limits, is restrained of his liberty, and to discharge him, if it be ascertained that such restraint is illegal; and this, notwithstanding such illegality may arise from a violation of the constitution or the laws of the United States.[59] A warrant of extradition of the governor of a state, issued upon the requisition of the governor of another state, accompanied by a copy of an indictment, is prima facia evidence, at least, that the accused had been indicted and was a fugitive from justice; and, when the court in which the indictment was found has jurisdiction of the offense, is sufficient to make it the duty of the courts of the United States to decline interposition by writ of habeas corpus, and to leave the question of the lawfulness of the detention of the prisoner, in the state in which he was indicted, to be inquired into and determined, in the first instance, by the courts of the state, which are empowered and obliged, equally with the courts of the United States, to recognize and uphold the supremacy of the constitution and the laws of the United States.[60]

3. Review of Governor's Decision.—Presumptions.—The presumption is, 56. Conclusiveness of governor's decision.—Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 366, 374, 21 L. Ed. 287.

57. In custody under laws of surrendering state.—Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 366, 371, 21 L. Ed. 287.

58. Right to invoke aid.—Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 94, 29 L. Ed. 544.

In extradition, the warrant issued by the governor is but prima facie sufficient to hold the accused, and it is open to him in habeas corpus, to show by admissions, or by other conclusive evidence, that the charge upon which extradition is demanded assumes the absence of the accused person from the state at the time the crime was, if ever, committed. Hyatt v. People, 188 U. S. 691, 711, 47 L. Ed. 657.

59. Power of state courts.—Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 639, 28 L. Ed. 542.

that the governor insisted upon the production of whatever he deemed necessary or important to inform him upon the subject.[61]

How Far Decision May Be Reviewed.—How far his decision may be reviewed judicially in proceedings in habeas corpus, or whether it is not conclusive, are questions not settled by harmonious judicial decisions, nor by any authorative judgment of the supreme court. It is conceded that the determination of the fact by the executive of the state in issuing his warrant of arrest, upon a demand made on that ground, whether the writ contains a recital of an express finding to that effect or not, must be regarded as sufficient to justify the removal until the presumption in its favor is overthown by contrary proof.[62]

When Absence from State Is Conceded.—When it is conceded, or when it is so conclusively proved, that no question can be made that the person was not within the demanding state when the crime is said to have been committed, and his arrest is sought on the ground only of a constructive presence at that time, in the demanding state, then the court will discharge the defendant. But the court will not discharge a defendant arrested under the governor's warrant where there is merely contradictory evidence on the subject of presence in or absence from the state, as habeas corpus is not the proper proceeding to try the question of alibi, or any question as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.[63]

4. In Cases of Involuntary, Irregular or Forcible Appearance.—As Affecting Jurisdiction of Court.—The jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment is found is not impaired by the manner in which the accused is brought before it.[64]

By Fraud and Connivance between Governors.—One who has been arrested and deported from a state by the fraud and connivance of the governors of the surrendering and demanding states, so arranged and carried out as to deprive him of an opportunity to prove, before the governor of the surrendering state, that he was not a fugitive from justice, as well as opportunity to appeal to some court in such state to prevent his illegal deportation from its territory, cannot be discharged on habeas corpus by the federal court, as the constitution or laws of the United States are not violated by such acts.[65]

By Kidnapping of Abduction.—There is no comity between the states by which a person held upon an indictment for a criminal offense in one state can be turned over to the authorities of another, though abducted from the latter.[66] And he may be kidnapped or unlawfully abducted from the state or country of refuge, and be, thereafter, tried in the state to which he is forcibly carried, without violating any right or immunity secured to him by the constitution and laws of the United States.[67] A person indicted for a felony in one state, forcibly abducted from another state and brought to the state where he was indicted by parties acting without warrant or authority of law, is not entitled under the constitution or laws of the United States to release from detention under the indict-

When it is conceded that the party charged was not in the state at the time when it is alleged in the indictment that the crimes were committed, and there is no proof to show that the crimes were in truth committed on some other day than the day alleged in the indictment, nor that the dates therein named were erroneously stated, it is sufficient for the party charged to show that he was not in the state at the times named, in order to prove that he was not in the state when the crimes were, if ever, committed. ment by reason of such forcible and unlawful abduction.[68]

H. Procedure—1. The Indictment.—Authentication.—Where the indictment is certified by the governor of the demanding state to be authentic and to be duly authenticated, it is all that is required by the act of congress, and certified copies of the laws of the demanding state may be dispensed with in such case.[69] And the certification of authentication of the extradition papers is sufficient, without the governor's certifying to the genuineness of such papers.[70]

Sufficiency of.—Each state has the right to establish the forms of pleadings and process to be observed in her own courts, in both civil and criminal cases, subject only to those provisions of the constitution of the United States involving the protection of life, liberty and property in all the states of the Union; therefore, the indictment that accompanies the requisition need not conform to the technical rules of criminal pleading. It is sufficient if it conforms to the requirements of the laws of the demanding state,[71] such as being framed in the language of the statute with the ordinary averments of the time and place, and with such a description as will appraise an intelligent man of the nature of the accusation.[72]

Functions of Commissioner.—An extradition commissioner is not presumed to be acquainted with the niceties of criminal pleading. His functions are practically the same as those of an examining magistrate in an ordinary criminal case.[73] The extent to which he may inquire into the validity of an indictment put in evidence before him, as proof of probable cause of guilt, has never been definitely settled, but it has been held generally that technical objections should not be considered, and that the legal sufficiency of the indictment is only to be determined by the court in which it is found.[74]

On the 9th of February, 1888, the governor of West Virginia, on behalf of that state, presented to the district court of the United States for the district of Kentucky a petition, representing that during the month of September, 1887, a requisition was made upon him as governor aforesaid, by the governor of Kentucky, for Plyant Mahon, alleged to have committed murder in the latter state, and to have fled from its justice, and to be then at large in West Virginia; that pending correspondence between the two governors, and the consideration of legal questions growing out of the requisition, and during the month of December, 1887, or January, 1888, the said Plyant Mahon, while residing in West Virginia, was, in violation of her laws, and of the constitution and laws of the United States, and without warrant or other legal process, arrested by a body of armed men from Kentucky, and by force and against his will, conveyed out of the state of West Virginia into the county of Pike, in the state of Kentucky, and there confined in the common jail of the county. Held, that he was not entitled to discharge on a writ of habeas corpus from the circuit court of the United States. Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700, 32 L. Ed. 283.

Where a person was arrested in Texas upon the requisition of the governor of Alabama, and sought his discharge by a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the statute under which the indictment was drawn was unconstitutional, the Texas court held that such question was for the decision of the Alabama court, and this court held that such decision did not deny any right secured by the constitution and laws of the United States. Pearce v. Texas, 155 U. S. 311, 39 L. Ed. 164.

To hold it to be the duty of the commissioner to determine the validity of every indictment as a pleading, when offered only as evidence, is to put in his hands a dangerous power, which might be subject to serious abuse. If, for instance, he were moved by personal considerations, popular clamor or insufficient knowledge of the law to discharge the ac-

2. Defenses.—It is no defense that the facts charged constitute a crime against the laws of the asylum state, for such state may waive the exercise of its jurisdiction by surrendering the fugitive.[75]

3. Review after Surrender.—After a party has been surrendered and is on trial, it is not a proper subject of inquiry to examine into the details of the extradition proceedings.[76]

I. Agent to Whom Accused Is Surrendered.—Is Not an Officer of the United States.—A person sent by the demanding state to receive the prisoner from the surrendering state, is not an officer of the United States, but is simply an agent of the former state, invested with authority to receive in her behalf, an alleged fugitive from the justice of that state.[77]

Duties.—No obligation is imposed by the constitution or laws of the United States upon the agent of a state to so time the arrest of the fugitive and so conduct his deportation from the state where found, as to afford him a convenient opportunity, before some judicial tribunal sitting in such state, to test the question whether he was a fugitive from justice and as such liable, under the act of congress, to be conveyed to the demanding state for trial there.[78]

IV. Trial on Another Charge.

A. In International Cases.—When a party is surrendered under international extradition proceedings, he cannot be tried for any other offense than the one with which he is charged in the extradition proceedings and for which he was delivered up, and if not tried for that, or after trial and acquittal, he must be given a reasonable time to leave the country before he is arrested upon the charge of any other crime committed previous to his extradition.[79] And this rule holds in a case where a person is extradited from England, although the trial and conviction is upon the same evidence that was produced before the English committing magistrate.[80] cused by reason of the insufficiency of the indictment, it might turn out that the indictment was perfectly valid and that the accused should have been held. But the evil once done is, or may be, irremediable, and the commissioner, in setting himself up as a court of last resort to determine the validity of the indictment, is liable to do a gross injustice. Benson v. Henkel, 196 U. S. 1, 12, 49 L. Ed. 919.

75. Defenses.—Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 96, 29 L. Ed. 544, where one charged with larceny set up the defense that the facts showed him to be guilty of a crime in the state where he was held.

76. Review after surrender.—Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 441, 30 L. Ed. 421.

When the governor of one state voluntarily surrenders a fugitive from the justice of another state to answer for his alleged offenses, it is hardly a proper subject of inquiry on the trial of the case to examine into the details of the proceedings by which the demand was made by the one state and the manner in which it was responded to by the other. Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 441, 30 L. Ed. 421.

77. As officer of the United States.—Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 28 L. Ed. 542.

It is true that the authority of the agent of the demanding state to bring the fugitive within its territorial limits, is expressly conferred by the statutes of the United States, and, therefore, while so transporting him, he is, in a certain sense, in the exercise of an authority derived from the United States. But these circumstances do not constitute him an officer of the United States, within the meaning of former decisions. He is not appointed by the United States, and owes no duty to the national government, for a violation of which he may be punished by its tribunals or removed from office. His authority, in the first instance, comes from the state in which the fugitive stands charged with crime. He is, in every substantial sense, her agent, as well in receiving custody of the fugitive, as in transporting him to the state under whose commission he is acting. What he does, in execution of that authority, is to the end that the violation of the laws of his state may be punished. The fugitive is arrested and transported for an offense against her laws, not for an offense against the United States. Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 635, 28 L. Ed. 542.

78. Duties.—Pettibone v. Nichols, 203 U. S 192, 205, 51 L. Ed. 148.

Where Convicted and Sentenced Prior to Requisition.—And where a person has been convicted and sentenced prior to the requisition for extradition, and such requisition has been refused on the grounds that the offense charged was not extraditable, after which an offense is charged in another requisition that is extraditable, and the accused is surrendered accordingly, while he may be tried upon the new offense charged, he cannot be punished for the offense first charged and upon which he was convicted, as it would be the same as trying him for an offense other than that for which he was extradited.[81]

Trial upon Counts Charging Different Offenses.—So long as the prisoner is tried upon the facts which appeared in evidence before the commissioner, and upon the charges or one of the charges for which he is surrendered, it is immaterial whether the indictment against him contains counts charging the different offenses alleged against him.[82]

Voluntary Return.—When a treaty provides that the person extradited shall be allowed to return after his trial for the offense for which he was extradited, to his own country, before he can be tried for a crime committed prior to his extradition, it is held that where one who has been given his liberty on bail, goes to his own country, and subsequently voluntarily returns to the country where he was indicted, he does not lose or waive the protection of such treaty by his voluntary return.[83]

B. In Interstate Cases.—A fugitive from justice who has been surrendered by one state of the Union to another state thereof upon requisition, charging him with commission of a specific crime, has, under the constitution and laws of the United States, no right, privilege or immunity to be exempt from indictment and trial in the state to which he is returned, for any other or different offense than that designated and described in the requisition proceedings, under which he was demanded by and restored to such state, without first having an opportunity to return to the state from which he was extradited.[84]

ing committed murder on an American boat on the high seas, and fled to England to escape punishment, and was returned under extradition to the United States, in which country he was tried and convicted of inflicting cruel and unusual punishment, it was held that the court erred, and that he could appeal to the supreme court or obtain release on habeas corpus, although he was convicted upon the same evidence that had been produced before the English committing magistrate. United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 30 L. Ed. 425.

Where a person was charged with having committed murder on an American boat on the high seas, and fled to England to escape punishment, but was returned under extradition to the United States, in which country he was tried for a crime other than the one for which he was extradited, it was held that the court erred, and that he could appeal to the supreme court or obtain release on habeas corpus. 82. Counts charging different offenses.—Bryant v. United States, 167 U. S. 104, 108, 42 L. Ed. 94, for example, when a fugitive is charged with forgery, embezzlement and larceny, the government need not elect for which of these he shall be tried, nor need he be tried for all of these.

Article 3 of the extradition treaty of 1889, with Great Britain, leaves out the words "or be punished," in the provision that no person surrendered "shall be triable or be tried for any crime or offense, committed prior to his extradition, other than the offense for which he was surrendered, until he shall have had an opportunity of returning to the country from which he was surrendered," but such omission does not give the United States the right to punish a person for an offense upon which he was convicted prior to his extradition and for which he was not extradited. To hold otherwise would be to ignore the manifest scope and object of the treaty of 1842, to which the treaty of 1889 is supplementary, and also would be contrary to the obvious meaning of §§ 5272 and 5275, Rev. Stat. Johnson v. Browne, 205 U. S. 309, 51 L. Ed. 816.

different things, which rest upon entirely different principles. In the former the extradition depends upon treaty contract or stipulation, which rests upon good faith, and in respect to which the sovereign upon whom the demand is made can exercise discretion, as well as investigate the charge on which the surrender is demanded, there being no rule of comity under and by virtue of which independent nations are required or expected to withhold from fugitives within their jurisdiction the right of asylum. In the matter of interstate rendition, however, there is the binding force and obligation, not of contract, but of the supreme law of the land, which imposes no conditions or limitations upon the jurisdiction and authority of the state to which the fugitive is returned." 2. Extraordinary accident.—The bursting of a river through its natural banks or through artificial dikes must generally be regarded as an accident or cas fortuit, ordinary or extraordinary, according to the frequency or infrequency with which it takes place in the tract of country in question. In Louisiana, the breaking of the Mississippi through the levees occurs so often that it is held not to be an extraordinary accident; but that does not take it out of the general class of accidents or unforeseen events, cas fortuits. The breaking of a crevasse in the Louisiana levees by the waters of the Mississippi River, causing a plantation to be overflowed, must therefore be considered as a cas fortuit, a fortuitous or unforeseen event, within the meaning and scope of articles 2697 and 2699, La. Code, entitling the lessee, if thereby the plantation is wholly or partly destroyed, or is rendered unfit for the purpose for which it was leased, to have the lease annulled; although it is not a cas fortuit extraordinaire, an extraordinary as well as an unforeseen accident, within the meaning of article 2743 so as to justify an abatement of rent if the crop only is destroyed. Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U. S. 707, 733, 30 L. Ed. 776. See, generally, the title LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Extraordinary marine risk.—A vessel was hired by the government, and it was stipulated in the charter party that in the event the vessel, while executing the orders of the government, should be destroyed or damaged by being compelled to run any extraordinary marine risk, the owners should be indemnified. In complying with the orders of the harbor master, the vessel struck a sunken anchor and sank. It was held that it was an extraordinary marine risk within the meaning of the charter party; that the term extraordinary was there used to distinguish an unusual risk which the vessel might be compelled to run by order of the government, from those risks which would be covered by an ordinary marine policy and which might be expected to arise from the service in which the vessel was engaged; it was an ordinary risk which any vessel must run that enters a harbor, and is one which every marine policy covers. I. Definition, Distinction and Nature.

Definition.—A factor or commission merchant is an agent to whom goods are intrusted by the principal to be sold.[1] And a shipper who purchases goods on his own credit, or with his own funds, is not acting in the ordinary capacity of a factor.[2]

Distinction between Factors and Broker.—See the title BROKERS, vol. 3, p. 532.

Nature.—A factor who receives the money of his principal, is not a fiduciary within the meaning of the United States bankruptcy act of 1841.[3]

II. Authority, Duties and Liabilities of Factor.

A. Authority—1. EXTENT OF AUTHORITY TO SELL.—Where a consignment has been made generally without any specific orders as to the time or mode of sale, and the factor makes advances or incurs liabilities on the footing of such consignment, then the legal presumption is, that the factor is intended to be clothed with the ordinary rights of factors to sell, in the exercise of a sound dis-

2. Power to Delegate Authority.—A factor cannot delegate his employment to another, so as to raise a privity between that other and his principal.[5]

3. Authority to Bind Principal to Insure.—A promise by a merchant's factor, that he would write to his principal to have property insured, does not bind the principal to insure.[6]

4. Authority to Pledge—a. In General.—By the common law, a factor or agent, who has power to sell the produce of his principal, has no power to affect the property by tortiously pledging it as a security or satisfaction for a debt of his own, to in any way affect the rights of the principal,[7] and it is of no consequence that the pledgee is ignorant of the factor's not being the owner.[8] But such a pledge is good as against the factor.[9] Also, if the factor has a lien upon the goods, he may pledge them to the amount of his lien.[10]

b. The Factors' Acts.—It being recognized that this rigid rule imposed hardship upon pledgees and purchasers of such property, acts were passed in England and some of the United States, known as "The Factors' Acts," giving validity to contracts for pledge or sale of principal's goods, provided the pledgee or pur-

5. Cannot delegate authority.—Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 223, 13 L. Ed. 667.

So a transfer by way of sale, by a clerk of property trusted to his principal as a factor, cannot pass the title or right in it from the real owner. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 223, 13 L. Ed. 667.

"The utmost relaxation of the rule, potestas delegata non potest delegare, in respect to mercantile persons, is, that a consignee or agent for the sale of merchandise may employ a broker for the purpose, when such is the usual course of business. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 223, 13 L. Ed. 667.

Or where the usual course of the management of the principal's concerns in the employment of a subagent has been pursued for a length of time, and been recognized by the owners of property, they will be taken to have adopted the acts of the subagent as the acts of the agent himself. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 223, 13 L. Ed. 667.

The reason of the rule in all these mercantile agencies is, that it is a trust and confidence reposed in the ability and integrity of the person authorized. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 223, 13 L. Ed. 667.

6. Cannot by promise bind principal to insure.—Randolph v. Ware, 3 Cranch 503, 2 L. Ed. 512.

7. Cannot pledge goods of principal.—Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 13 L. Ed. 667.

"By the common law, a factor * * * for sale has no power to pledge, whether the owner has intrusted him with the possession of the goods themselves, or with the symbol of them, as by consigning them to him by a bill of lading in which he is consignee or indorsee." Allen v. St. Louis Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 32, 30 L. Ed. 573. See, also, Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 224, 13 L. Ed. 667.

Missouri law.—"Factors have no power, by the law of Missouri, to make a pledge of the goods of their principals by a transfer, without indorsement in writing, of the bills of lading or warehouse receipts." Allen v. St. Louis Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 39, 30 L. Ed. 573.

Louisiana.—"Before the act of 1876 it was settled by numerous decisions in Louisiana, that a factor could not pledge for his own debts the property of his principal." Insurance Co. v. Kiger, 103 U. S. 352, 355, 26 L. Ed. 433.

8. Makes no difference that pledgee did not know the factor was not the owner.—When goods are so pledged or disposed of, the principal may recover them back by an action of trover against the pawnee, without tendering to the factor what may be due to him, and without any tender to the pawnee of the sum for which the goods were pledged; or without any demand of such goods; and it is no excuse that the pawnee was wholly ignorant that he who held the goods held them as a mere agent or factor, unless, indeed, where the principal has held forth the agent as the principal. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 225, 13 L. Ed. 667.

9. Binding as against factor.—Where the consignee had advanced no money on the goods consigned to them, a verbal mortgage or pledge of the goods accompanied by delivery to a third party is good against the factors to whom the consignment was made, irrespective of any question of notice. Means v. Bank, 146 U. S. 620, 628, 36 L. Ed. 1107.

10. May pledge to amount of lien.—In this case, the principal must tender the amount of the lien due to the factor, before he can be entitled to recover back the goods so pledged. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 225, 13 L. Ed. 667.

chaser had no notice, that the person intrusted was not the actual and bona fide owner of the goods.[11]

5. Authority to Transfer Goods in Payment of Factor's Debts.—Sale to Creditor of Factor.—A factor cannot sell the merchandise of his principal to a creditor of the factor in payment of an antecedent debt.[12]

6. Ratification of Unauthorized Acts.—If the principal after knowledge that his orders have been violated by his agent, receives merchandise purchased for him, contrary to orders, and sells the same, without signifying any intention of disavowing the acts of the agent, an inference in favor of the ratification of the acts of the agent may fairly be drawn by the jury; but if the merchandise was received by the principal, under a just confidence that his orders to his agent had been faithfully executed, such an inference would be, in a high degree, unreasonable.[13] Also where a factor has failed to make a sale of goods because of a dull market, and writes to his consignor of his failure to sell, and the consignor purposely refuses to answer the letter, it will be presumed that he ratified the act of the factor, so far as his letter informed him, and he will be regarded as having consented to whatever delay occurred in effecting a sale, even though the delay was contrary to his directions.[14]

The obvious meaning of the New York Factors' Act of 1830, c. 179, is that the factor or other agent who has been intrusted with certain documentary evidence of title, or with the possession and ostensible ownership of the property, shall be deemed the true owner, so far as may be necessary to protect those who have dealt with him "upon the faith thereof;" that is, upon the faith, induced by the usual indicia of title, that he was the true owner of the property. Allen v. St. Louis Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 34, 30 L. Ed. 573.

12. Cannot sell to creditor of factor in payment of antecedent debt.—Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 13 L. Ed. 667.

13. Ratification of unauthorized acts.—Bell v. Cunningham, 3 Pet. 69, 7 L. Ed. 606.

H. and others, merchants in Baltimore, consigned a vessel and cargo to W. and others, merchants in Amsterdam, with instructions to them respecting her ulterior destination, which showed that on the failure of getting a freight to Batavia, or of selling the vessel at a price limited, she was to proceed to St. Petersburg, and there take in a return cargo of Russian goods for the United States, but with instructions to the master committing to him the management of the ulterior voyage. No freight to Batavia could be obtained, and the vessel could not be sold for the price limited, at Amsterdam, and W. and others purchased, in Amsterdam, with the concurrence of the master, a return cargo of Russian goods, partly with the money of H., and others, and partly with money advanced by themselves. On the return of the vessel to Baltimore, H. and others objected to the purchase of this cargo in Amsterdam, as being contrary to express orders, and gave notice to W. and others, of their determination to hold them responsible for all losses sustained in consequence of this breach of instructions; but received the goods and sold them. W. and others brought an assumpsit against H. and others, to recover from them the moneys advanced. Held, that whether the plaintiffs could, or could not, be made responsible in any form of action which might be devised, for the possible loss resulting from the breaking up of the intended voyage to St. Petersburg, the defendants were not entitled to a deduction from the plaintiffs' demand, for the amount of such loss. Willinks v. Hollingsworth, 6 Wheat. 240, 5 L. Ed. 251.

14. By refusing to answer letter of factor.—Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 19 L. Ed. 923.

The effect of the refusal by the consignor to reply to a letter informing him that they had not sold his goods, as the market had been dull and on the decline every day since he left them; that the goods would not then sell for more than so much (a decline from former prices); that they would be compelled to sell unless he made other shipments, or remitted in cash as a margin, the money market being tight; that they had held on thus far to meet his views, but that the declining tendency of the market induced them to write, and asking to hear from him on his receipt of their letter, within a reasonable time after he received it, was to raise a presumption that he approved of what his factors had done, so far as their letter informed him; and in the absence of anything to rebut that presumption, he was to be regarded as having consented to whatever delay had occurred in effecting a sale, even though the of goods, yet, if he does accept it, he is answerable, like every other agent or factor, for a breach of the positive orders of his principal.[15]

b. Instructions as to Price.—If a factor is instructed to purchase at a certain price, and a purchase is made for a price exceeding the limit prescribed by the principal, he may repudiate the purchase, and no title will pass to him.[16]

c. Ratification of Acts Contrary to Instructions.—See ante, "Ratification of Unauthorized Acts," II, A, 6.

d. Qualification to General Rule—(1) Advances by Factor.—Though it is true that factors are generally bound to obey all orders of their principals respecting the time and mode of sale, yet when they have made large advances or incurred expenses on account of the consignment, the principal cannot by any subsequent orders control their right to sell at such a time as in the exercise of a sound discretion, and in accordance with the usage of trade, they may deem best to secure indemnity to themselves, and to promote the interests of the consignor, they acting, of course, in good faith and with reasonable skill.[17]

(2) Obeying Subsequent Orders of General Agent.—If foreign merchants send out, by their general agent, written orders to their factor in this country, to purchase tobacco upon their account, but to ship it in the name of the factor, and by those orders, the factor is referred to the verbal communications of the general agent, who undertakes to order tobacco to be shipped in the name of another person, and declares he has authority from the foreign merchants thus to control and vary their orders; the factor is justified in obeying the new orders of the general agent, though contrary to the first written orders.[18]

2. Duty to Insure Goods.—It is a recognized usage, if not the duty of factors, to insure goods consigned to them.[19]

3. Duty as to Sale.—It is a continuing obligation of factors authorized to sell goods, to exercise good faith, and sell within a reasonable time, considering the circumstances; and at the best prices that can be obtained. If a delay in selling is unreasonable, if it is in violation of the factor's duties, they, rather than the principal, should bear the loss that results from it.[20] delay was contrary to his directions. Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 19 L. Ed. 923.

15. Must obey orders of principal.—Walker v. Smith, 4 Dall. 389, 390, 1 L. Ed. 878; Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 19 L. Ed. 923.

16. Principal may repudiate purchase.—If the factors bought coffee at a price exceeding the limit prescribed by the principals and the latter, upon learning the fact, no matter when that was, or what the circumstances, repudiated the purchase, the title of the factors thereupon became absolute, and none passed to the principals for whom the purchase was made. The Sally Magee, 3 Wall. 451, 457, 18 L. Ed. 197.

17. Principal cannot give instructions which will affect factor's indemnity for advances.—Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 149, 19 L. Ed. 923. See post, "Right of Factor to Sell for Purpose of Reimbursement," III, A, 2.

18. Factor may obey subsequent orders of general agent of principal.—Manella v. Barry, 3 Cranch 415, 2 L. Ed. 484.

19. Factor's duty to insure.—Peyton v. Heinekin, 131 U. S., appx. ci, cii, 20 L. Ed. 679.

20. Duty in regard to sale.—Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 151, 19 L. Ed. 923.

Must sell within a reasonable time.—The receipt by the consignor and nonacknowledgment of a letter informing him that they had not sold his goods, as the market had been dull and on the decline every day since he left them; that the goods would not then sell for more than so much (a decline from former prices); that they would be compelled to sell unless he made other shipments, or remitted in cash as a margin, the money market being tight; that they had held on thus far to meet his views, but that the declining tendency of the market induced them to write, and asking to hear from him on his receipt of their letter; would not, however, relieve the factors from a continuing obligation to sell within a reasonable time, all the circumstances of the case being considered; and at the best prices that could be obtained. Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 19 L. Ed. 923.

Where a factor held goods because of a decline in the market and wrote to him for instructions, it was held that, though the letter was never acknowledged, it was a question which should have been submitted to the jury, whether a ten months delay to sell in view of a market falling the whole time was in the exercise of sound discretion, good faith, and reasonable diligence; and that an instruction that the consignor should bear all losses sus-

4. Duty and Right as to Proceeds—a. Right to Proceeds of Sale.—Wherever the proceeds of a sale of property of the principal can be specifically distinguished from the property of the factor, it has been uniformly determined that the right of the former shall prevail over the possessions of the latter.[21]

b. Remitting Proceeds.—The mode of remitting by a general bill, payable to one merchant, with separate drafts in favor of each of the other merchants who are interested in the amount of the bill, is a good and lawful execution of the trust and authority of a factor, employed by several distinct and unconnected merchants, resident abroad. It is essential, however, to such a remittance, that notice should be given to the parties. In case of a partial loss it must be borne, as a general average, by all concerned.[22]

5. Liability.—A principal consigned goods to a commission merchant and wrote to him that he would hold him responsible for them. The commission merchant transferred the goods to another person under an order by a person who had been authorized by the principal to make arrangement with the commission merchant for the acceptance of the consignment of goods. It was held that the commission merchant was responsible for the goods after the receipt of the letter stating that he was held responsible for them.[23]

III. Duty and Liability of Principal.

A. Reimbursement of Factor for Advances and Expenditures—1. In General.—Upon the sale of goods consigned to a factor he is entitled to reimbursement, out of the proceeds of the sale, for any advancements or expenditures.[24]

2. Right of Factor to Sell for Purpose of Reimbursement.—A factor who has made advances or incurs liability upon goods consigned to him, may be regarded, in a limited sense, to the extent of his advances, as the owner,[25] and tained after his refusal to answer the factors' letter without excepting such portion of the loss as might have been caused by the factor's fault, was error. This, notwithstanding that the court charged that, as a general principle, the factors were found to use due diligence, care, and skill in the sale of the goods, and to obey instructions given to them by the consignors in regard to the sale, this charge not having been given by way of qualification to the specific instructions previously given. Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 19 L. Ed. 923.

21. If distinguishable from property of factor, principal's right is superior.—Price v. Ralston, 2 Dall. 60, 67, 1 L. Ed. 289.

If a factor sells the goods consigned to him, receives the money due upon the sales, and mixes it, indiscriminately, with his own cash, there cannot, from the nature of the thing, be any subsequent distinguishment, any specific appropriation of property. But if the factor sells on credit, and does not afterwards actually receive the money; or if, having received the money, he vests the amount in other effects, for the use of the principal; or if, upon the sale, he takes notes in his own name, for the price of the goods—in all these instances, the property of the principal is clearly separated from the factor's; and being thus distinguished, and distinguishable, it must, upon the principles of law and equity, be appropriated, upon the factor's bankruptcy, to the individual use of the principal; it cannot be applied by the commissioners to the benefit of the general creditors. Price v. Ralston, 2 Dall. 60, 67, 1 L. Ed. 289.

A bond taken by a factor in payment for goods sold by him is so specifically distinguished from the property of the factor, that the right of the principal has all priority. Price v. Ralston, 2 Dall. 60, 1 L. Ed. 289.

22. Remitting proceeds.—Schenekhouse v. Gibbs, 4 Dall. 136, 1 L. Ed. 773.

23. Liability.—Berthold v. Goldsmith, 24 How. 536, 540, 16 L. Ed. 762.

24. Factor has right to reimbursement out of proceeds of sale.—Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. 141, 149, 19 L. Ed. 923; United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64; Brander v. Phillips, 16 Pet. 121, 10 L. Ed. 909; Brown v. McGran, 14 Pet. 479, 495, 10 L. Ed. 550.

25. Factors making advances treated as owner to a limited extent.—United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64.

Under the statute of New York, of April 16, 1830 (Laws of 1830, c. 179, p. 203), a factor who has advanced money on goods for the principal has a right to treat the goods as his own so long as his negotiable acceptances, of which the principal had had the benefit, were outstanding, not taken up by it, and his lien on the goods was unsatisfied. Fourth Nat. Bank v. American Mills Co., 137 U. S. 234, 238, 34 L. Ed. 655.

Where goods are shipped to factor for if there be no special agreement, he may sell the property, in the exercise of a sound discretion, according to general usage, and reimburse himself out of the proceeds of the sale,[26] but however, he is accountable to his consignor for any surplus.[27] But the consignor may at any time before sale reclaim the possession upon paying the advances made, with interest and expenses.[28]

B. Reimbursement of Factor for Insurance.—As it is a duty of factors by recognized usage to insure their principals' goods, they are entitled to reimbursement for insurance on goods consigned to them.[29]

IV. Title and Right of Property.

It has been held that where goods are consigned to a commission merchant with the intention that he shall sell them and pay a draft drawn against them, the title and right of property vests in the commission merchant as soon as the goods are delivered to the common carrier.[30] But upon a shipment of goods, to be sold on joint account of the consignee and shipper, or of the latter alone, at the option of the consignee, the right of property does not vest in the consignee, until he has made his election, under the option given him.[31]

V. Lien of Factor.

A. Existence and Extent of Lien—1. EXISTENCE.—The lien of a factor depends upon legal principles, founded on equitable considerations, and can be held valid on no other grounds.[32] Such lien is only protected by the factor's possession.[33] use of another.—See post, "Existence," V, A, 1.

26. Factor may sell and reimburse himself out of proceeds of sale.—Brander v. Phillips, 16 Pet. 121, 10 L. Ed. 909; Brown v. McGran, 14 Pet. 479, 495, 10 L. Ed. 550; United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64; Fourth Nat. Bank v. American Mills Co., 137 U. S. 234, 238, 34 L. Ed. 655.

Must be no agreement to the contrary.—If, a factor makes advances, or incurs liabilities on account of a consignment, by which he acquires a special property therein; then the factor has a right to sell so much of the consignment as may be necessary to reimburse such advances or meet such liabilities; unless there be some existing agreement between himself and the consignor, which controls or varies this right. But if, contemporaneously with the consignment and advances or liabilities, there are orders given by the consignor, which are assented to by the factor, that the goods shall not be sold until a fixed time, in such a case, the consignment is presumed to be received by the factor subject to such orders; and he is not at liberty to sell the goods to reimburse his advances or liabilities, until after that time has elapsed. Brown v. McGran, 14 Pet. 479, 495, 10 L. Ed. 550.

27. Liable to consignor for surplus.—United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64.

28. Consignor may reclaim goods any time before sold.—United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64.

The owner of goods in the hands of a factor may, at any time before his factor has sold them, reclaim the possession upon paying the advances made, with interest and expenses. He has not lost his ownership by committing the custody of the goods to a factor and by receiving advances upon them. United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64.

29. Factors have right to reimbursement for insurance on goods consigned to them.—Peyton v. Heinehin, 131 U. S., appx. ci, cii, 20 L. Ed. 679.

30. When title and right of property vests in factor.—Halliday v. Hamilton, 11 Wall. 560, 564, 20 L. Ed. 214.

A party consigned 1250 sacks of corn to a commission merchant with the intention that he should sell it and pay a draft drawn against it. It was held that as soon as the corn was deposited with the common carrier, who was the bailee for the purpose, the title to it and right of property in it was changed and vested in the commission merchant to whom it was to be delivered. Halliday v. Hamilton, 11 Wall. 560, 564, 20 L. Ed. 214.

31. Right of property does not vest if factor elects under the option given him.—The Venus, 8 Cranch 253, 3 L. Ed. 353.

32. Lien founded on equitable considerations.—Brander v. Phillips, 16 Pet. 121, 131, 10 L. Ed. 909.

Lien for advances made.—A factor, notwithstanding he may have made advances upon the property consigned to him, has but a limited right. That right is sometimes called a special property, but it is never regarded as a general ownership. At most, it is no more than ownership of a lien or charge upon the property. Such is unquestionably the doctrine of the common law. United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64. See ante, "Reimbursement of Factor for Advances and Expenditures," III, A.

33. Lien is only protected by posses-

Where Goods Are Shipped to Factor for Use of Another.—Where goods are shipped to a factor, the shipper taking a receipt stating that the goods are to be delivered to the factor, for the use of a third person, such person takes the legal title and the factor cannot claim a lien on the goods for advances made by him.[34]

Right of Consignor of Goods to Countermand Consignment to Prevent Assignee's Lien from Attaching.—Where goods are sent upon the account and risk of the shipper, the delivery to the master is a delivery to him, as agent of the shipper, not of the consignee; and it is competent for the consignor, at any time before actual delivery to the consignee, to countermand it, and thus to prevent the consignee's lien, for advance made by him, from attaching.[35]

2. EXTENT.—The lien of the factor for advances and liabilities incurred extends not only to the property consigned, but, when sold, to the proceeds in the hands of the vendee, and the securities therefor, in the hands of the factor.[36]

B. Priority of Lien.—It has been held that the privilege given a factor who makes advances to a planter is inferior to the privilege of a landlord for his rent.[37] And in bankruptcy proceedings a factor's lien occupies no better ground than would a mortgage, pledge, or power to confess judgment, given at the same time and for the same purpose.[38]

C. Foreclosure of Lien.—A transfer of goods by a principal to a factor, as absolute owner, in discharge of advances made to the principal, is in effect a foreclosure of the lien on the goods held by the factor for the advances made.[39]

VI. Principal's Right against Third Persons.

May Follow Property or Its Proceeds.—As to the factor's power to bind his principal by a disposition of his goods, the common-law rule is that to acquire a good title to the employer's property by purchasing it from his agent, such purchase must have been either in market overt and without knowledge of the seller's representative capacity, or from an agent acting according to his instructions, or from one acting in the usual course of his employment, and whom the buyer did not know to be transgressing his instructions, or that he had not such notice as the law deems equivalent to raise that presumption. The reason of this is clear, for unless the transaction took place bona fide in the market overt, an agent selling without express authority must, that his acts may be supported, have sold under an implied one. But an implied one thereby always empowers the person authorized to act in the usual course of his employment; consequently, if he sells in an unusual mode, he could have no implied authority to support his act, and, as he had no express one, his sale, of course, sion.—United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64.

In the Code of Georgia of 1861, while a factor's lien is recognized and declared to extend to all balances on general account, and to attach to the proceeds of sale of goods consigned as well as to the goods themselves, there is nothing that declares he has anything more than a lien protected by his possession. United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64.

34. Where goods are shipped to factor for use of another.—Grove v. Brien, 8 How. 429, 12 L. Ed. 1142.

35. Consignor may countermand consignee's lien from attaching.—The Frances, 8 Cranch 418, 3 L. Ed. 609.

36. Lien extends to goods, proceeds of sale, and securities therefor.—Brander v. Phillips, 16 Pet. 121, 10 L. Ed. 909; United States v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. 35, 42, 23 L. Ed. 64.

37. Priority of lien.—Saloy v. Bloch, 136 U. S. 338, 344, 34 L. Ed. 668.

In Louisiana the privilege or pledge of the landlord for his rent is superior to the privilege given by the civil code to the factor who advances money or necessary supplies to the planter; and, by the proviso of the act of 1874, it is still made superior to the pledge which that law authorizes the planter to make to the factor for his advances. Saloy v. Bloch, 136 U. S. 338, 344, 34 L. Ed. 668.

falls to the ground.[40] And where a party takes from a factor, in payment of his debt, moneys which he knows equitably belong to the factor's consignor and principal, justice forbids the upholding of such a transaction and demands that the party receiving the moneys must account to the principal for the same.[41]

May Recover from Factor's Assignee in Bankruptcy.—A bond taken by a factor in payment for goods sold by him will not pass to the assignees in bankruptcy, on the factor's subsequent bankruptcy. In such case the principal may maintain an action to recover the bond from the assignee.[42]

A. By Principal—1. Against Factor.—When Right of Action Accrues.—Where goods are sold by a factor, and his principal drew bills of exchange upon him, which were duly accepted for the full amount of the proceeds, and all the bills were negotiated to third persons, no right of action exists in favor of the principal against the factor until after the bills have become due and dishonored and taken up by the principal.[43]

As to the doctrine that market overt does not exist in the United States, see the title MARKETS.

A buyer who, at the time of a sale by a factor, knows nothing of the relation between the factor with whom he deals and the principal by whom that factor has been employed, is protected by the law, in case of a misadventure occurring by the default of the factor, and it is admitted that the risk which a principal runs, through the inadvertence or misconduct of his agent may be avoided, by the purchaser having notice, at any time before the completion of the purchase or delivery of the goods, of the agent's commission. Among the instances which the law terms notice enough for such a purpose is the insolvency of the factor known to the buyer. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 222, 13 L. Ed. 667.

If a factor, holding property in trust for his principal, transfers it to a bank which has notice of the capacity in which he holds it, the principal may assert his right in the property against the bank, either by independent suit, or by way of defense to an action by the bank against him. Allen v. St. Louis Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 40, 30 L. Ed. 573. See, also, National Bank v. Insurance Co., 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. Ed. 693.

Where a merchant, in order to secure himself from loss, took merchandise from a factor, with a knowledge that the factor was about to fail, the principal who consigned that merchandise to the factor may avoid the sale, and reclaim his goods, or hold the merchant accountable for them. And where the purchase was made from the factor's clerk, who had been left by the factor in charge of the business, this was an additional reason for avoiding the sale; because a factor cannot delegate his authority without the assent of the principal. Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 13 L. Ed. 667.

"When a contract is proposed between factors, or between a factor and any other creditor, to pass property for an antecedent debt, it is not a sale in the legal sense of that word or in any sense in which it is used in reference to the commission which a factor has to sell." Warner v. Martin, 11 How. 209, 226, 13 L. Ed. 667.

43. Where factor accepts bills of exchange drawn upon him.—Black v. Zacharie, 3 How. 483, 510, 11 L. Ed. 690.

A cargo of sugar and molasses was sold by B. on account of Z. & Co. and Z. & Co. drew bills of exchange upon B. which were accepted by the latter for the full amount of the proceeds and all these bills had been negotiated to third persons. It was held that there was no right of action by Z. & Co. against B. until after those bills had become due and dishonored and owners of merchandise consign it to a merchant for sale, and inform him that each owns one moiety; and if they give separate and variant instructions, each for his own moiety; one of the consignors alone may maintain a separate action against the consignee, for a violation of his separate instructions.[44]

Measure of Damages.—If a factor has instructions to sell goods on a certain day, but sells on a day prior to date, the damages to which the principal is entitled to will be regulated by the price on the day he were instructed to sell.[45]

2. Against Third Persons.—Right on Contract in Name of Factor.—A written contract made by a factor in his own name for the sale of goods for his principal will bind the principal, and he may sue thereon as if he was a party named in the contract, for it is in fact a contract of the principal.[46]

B. Actions against Principal.—A written contract made by a factor, in his own name, for the purchase of goods for his principal, will bind the principal, and he may be sued thereon exactly as if he were named in it, for it is treated as the contract of the principal as well as of the agent.[47]

The statute of limitations does not apply to accounts still remaining unliquidated and unsettled between a principal and his factor, concerning the sales of merchandise made by the plaintiff, as agent and factor for the defendant.[48]

C. By Factor against Third Person.—Injuries to the possession of goods in the factor's hands may be redressed by an action in the factor's name, and further it may be assumed that upon contracts of sale by him, he may sue.[49]

If a sale of cotton in Liverpool, by a factor, has been made on a particular day tortiously, and against the orders of the owner, the owner has a right to claim damages for the value of the cotton on the day the sale was made, as for a tortious conversion; if the sale of the cotton by the factor was authorized on a subsequent day, and the cotton had been sold against orders, before that day, the damages to which the owner would be entitled would be regulated by the price of cotton on that day; but the rate of damages is not to be obtained from the prices of cotton at any time between the day when the cotton was sold, against the orders of the owner, and the day on which the sale was authorized by him. 1. Failing to comply.—A devise or bequest is often made dependent on the beneficiary refusing on failing to comply with certain conditions. When used in this connection, the words "refusing to comply," may, in general, have the same operation of law as the words failing to comply would have; and where the condition to be performed depends on the will of the devisee, his failure to perform it is equivalent to a refusal. But where the condition does not depend on his will, but on the will of those over whom he can have no control, there is a manifest distinction between "refusing" and failing to comply with it. The first is an act of the will, the second may be an act of inevitable necessity. Taylor v. Mason, 9 Wheat. 326, 344, 6 L. Ed. 101. See, generally, the title WILLS.

2. Failure.—In Godfrey v. Terry, 97 U. S. 171, 178, 24 L. Ed. 944, the court says: "What is meant by 'failure of the bank' in the clause of its charter which makes the stockholders liable? If a partnership engaged in any mercantile or manufacturing business fails to meet, and pay when demanded, its current business paper as it falls due, that firm is said, in popular language, to have failed. And unless it compromises with its creditors, or makes arrangement for extension of time, it has failed in all senses of the word. If it continues to dishonor its paper, it has failed. If any business man or business firm does the same thing, they are, by the express terms of every bankrupt law, bankrupts. * * * Why is it not so with regard to a bank? If there be any difference, it should be in favor of the rule which brings into action the remedies for bank failures." See the title BANKS AND BANKING, vol. 3, p. 122.

1. Faith.—Where a statute provides that a factor or agent, not having the documentary evidence of title, but intrusted with the possession of any merchandise for the purpose of sale, or as a security for any advances to be made or obtained thereon, shall be deemed to be the true owner thereof, so far as to give validity to any contract made by him with any other person for the sale or disposition of the merchandise, for any advances made by such other person "upon the faith thereof," the words "on the faith thereof" are not to be referred to "merchandise," or to its symbols, but to the words "shall be deemed to be the true owner thereof." The obvious meaning is, that the factor or other agent who has been intrusted with certain documentary evidence of title, or with the possession and ostensible ownership of the property, shall be deemed the true owner, so far as may be necessary to protect those who have dealt with him "upon the faith thereof;" that is, upon the faith, induced by the usual indicia of title, that he was the true owner of the property. The private intention of a magistrate is not a sufficient substitute for the constitutional requirement of a particular description in the warrant. West v. Cabell, 153 U. S. 78, 88, 38 L. Ed. 643.

Without warrant.—Where one is arrested for horse stealing upon grounds giving a probable cause, his imprisonment is not unlawful though it lasted for seven days and no warrant had been issued, where the minutes of the proceedings before the magistrate show that he was so detained as the necessary consequence of his own request for delay, and the neglect on his part to offer any satisfactory security for his appearance at the time appointed for the examination. Liability of Members of the House of Representatives.—Members of the house of representatives who did not in any manner assist in the arrest or imprisonment of a person whom they had ordered punished for contempt of their authority, nor order or direct the same, except by their votes and by their participation as members in proceedings of the house, are not liable in an action for false imprisonment.[4]

6. Accordingly, where certain military officers of the United States, being sued for the arrest and imprisonment of a person in Vermont, not connected with the military service of the United States, alleged in their pleas that the arrest and imprisonment were made under the authority and by the order of the president, whose orders as commander in chief of the armies of the United States, by the rules and regulations of the army, they were bound to obey, without setting forth any order, general or special, of the president directing or approving of the acts in question, it was held that the pleas were defective and insufficient. Evidence in mitigation of damages.—A., who was an officer of the army, and acting as a provost-marshal in Vermont, arrested B., during the Civil War, on the charge of aiding and abetting deserters from the army. At the time of making the arrest, A. had no warrant, but was acting under orders of his commanding officer, based upon a report made to him by A. B. having brought an action for false imprisonment against A., the latter, for the purpose of satisfying the jury of the misconduct of B., and in support of his own testimony as to the state of facts which he at the time of making the arrest believed in good faith to exist, offered to show, by evidence which was not known to him at the time of B.'s release from imprisonment, that the latter had, during the war, been engaged in procuring men to enlist in the army, and to desert after they had obtained their bounty; but the court, on the ground that the offered evidence did not become known to A. until after the commencement of the suit, excluded it. I. Statement of Fellow-Servant Rule and Reason Therefor.

A. Statement of Rule.—At common law a master who has used due care in the selection of servants and furnished them with proper means to perform the work, is exempt from liability for injuries to a servant caused by the negligence of another servant engaged in a common employment.[1]

B. Basis and Reason of Rule.—The obvious reason for this exemption is that the ordinary risks incident to the employment, of which the negligence of fellow servants is one, are, or in law supposed to be, taken into consideration by the servant when he engages in the service, and that his compensation is arranged accordingly.[2] He cannot in reason complain if he suffers from a risk

"There is implied in his contract of service in such cases, that he takes upon himself risks arising from the negligence of his fellow servants, while in the same employment, provided always the master is not negligent in their selection or retention, or in furnishing adequate materials and means for the work; and that if injuries then befall him from such negligence, the master is not liable." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 383, 28 L. Ed. 787. See post, "Safe Place to Work, Safe Tools, Machinery, Appliances, etc.," III, A, 4, b, (2); "Negligence in Selecting or Retaining Servants," III, A, 4, b, (3).

"It is implied in the contract between the parties that the servant risks the dangers which ordinarily attend or are incident to the business in which he volun-

which he has voluntarily assumed, and for the assumption of which he is paid.[3] When the employer has been personally free from blame and the injury results from the fault or misconduct of a fellow servant, it would seem reasonable that the wrongdoer should be alone responsible, and that one who is innocent should not be called upon to pay damages. And such is the general rule.[4]

Public Policy.—There is also another reason often assigned for this exemption—that of a supposed public policy. It is assumed that the exemption operates as a stimulant to diligence and caution on the part of the servant for his own safety as well as that of his master. Much potency is ascribed to this assumed fact by reference to those cases where diligence and caution on the part of servants constitute the chief protection against accidents. But it may be doubted whether the exemption has the effect thus claimed for it.[5]

II. History and Origin of Doctrine.

The doctrine was first announced in this country by the Supreme Court of South Carolina in 1841, in Murray v. S. C. Railroad Co., 1 McMullan 385, and was affirmed by the supreme court of Massachusetts the following year in Farwell v. Boston and Worcester Railroad Co., 4 Met. 49.[6]

In England the doctrine of the master's exemption from liability was first distinctly announced in 1850 by the court of exchequer in Hutchinson v. York, Newcastle & Berwick Railway Co., 5 Exch. R. 343. Priestley v. Foster, 3 M. & W. 1, which was decided in 1837, is often cited as the first case declaring the doctrine, but it did not directly involve the question as to the liability of a master to a servant for the negligence of a fellow servant.[7]

III. Operation of Doctrine.

A. At Common Law—1. General Rule.—The fellow-servant doctrine applies where the person injured, and the one by whose negligence or incompetency the injury is caused, are fellow servants in the same common employment, and acting under the same immediate direction.[8] There are well-defined exceptions to the rule.[9]

2. As to Corporations and Their Employees.—As corporations can act only through superintending officers, the negligences of those officers, with respect to other servants, are the negligences of the corporation; and as to such officers and servants the fellow-servant doctrine applies.[10]

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 382, 28 L. Ed. 787, Mr. Justice Field said as to this reason: "We have never known parties more willing to subject themselves to dangers of life or limb because, if losing the one, or suffering in the other, damages could be recovered by their representatives or themselves for the loss or injury. The dread of personal injury has always proved sufficient to bring into exercise the vigilance and activity of the servant."

4. With Respect to Character of Negligent Act—a. In General.—The question whether or not the master is liable to his employee for the negligent act of a coemployee, turns rather on the character of the act than on the relations of the employees to each other. If the act is one done in the discharge of some positive duty of the master to the servant, then negligence in the act is the negligence of the master; but if it be not one in the discharge of such positive duty, then there should be some personal wrong on the part of the employer before he is held liable therefor.[11]

b. Negligence in Discharge of Positive or Nonassignable Duties of Master—(1) In General.—Among the established exceptions to the general rule as to the nonliability of the common employer to one employee for the negligence of a coemployee in the same service, is one which arises from the obligation of the master, whether a natural person or a corporate body, not to expose the servant, when conducting the master's business, to perils or hazards against which he may be guarded by proper diligence upon the part of the master.[12] An employer cannot transfer or delegate to a servant a duty required of him for the safety and protection of his servants, so as to exonerate himself from liability for injuries caused to another servant by its neglect or omission.[13] The contract of service implies that in regard to these matters the employer will make adequate provision that no danger shall ensue to the servant.[14] If, instead of personally performing his nonassignable duties or those which he personally owes to his employees, the master engages another to do them for him, he is liable for the neglect of that other, which, in such case, is not the neglect of a fellow servant, no matter what his position as to other matters, but is the neglect of the master to do those things which it is the duty of the master to perform as such.[15]

(2) Safe Place to Work, Safe Tools, Machinery, Appliances, etc.—(a) In General.—A master must furnish a reasonably safe place for his servant to work,[16] and provide reasonably safe tools, appliances and machinery for the

A master is liable to a servant for injuries caused by the negligence of a coservant in the performance of a positive duty imposed upon the master, and amounting to a personal wrong. The servant has a right to look to the master for the discharge of that duty, and if the master, instead of discharging it himself, sees fit to have it attended to by others, that does not change the measure of obligation to the employee, or the latter's right to insist that reasonable precaution shall be taken to secure safety in these respects. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 386, 37 L. Ed. 772.

A servant who is intrusted with the performance of one of the master's personal duties is, so far as that duty is concerned, the representative of the master; his negligence in its performance is the master's negligence, and imposes a liability upon him, to the same extent as for his own negligence in the same particular. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 652, 29 L. Ed. 755.

An employer is liable to an employee who is injured as a result of the negligent act of a foreman in the performance of a personal duty of the employer. Martin v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 166 U. S. 399, 41 L. Ed. 1051.

An employer is liable to a servant for the negligence of a fellow servant, when the other servant occupies such a relation to the injured party, or to the employment, in the course of which his injury was received, as to make the negligence of such servant the negligence of the employer. Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 L. Ed. 656; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 335, 44 L. Ed. 181.

accomplishment of the work necessary to be done,[17] and the risk the servant assumes of the negligence of a fellow servant does not exempt from that duty.[18] If instead of personally performing these duties the master engages another to do it for him, he is liable for the neglect of that other, which, in such case, is not the neglect of a fellow servant, no matter what his position as to other matters, but is the neglect of the master to do that which it is the duty of the master to perform as such.[19] It matters not to the employee by whom that safety is secured, or the reasonable precautions therefor taken.[20] He has a right to look to the master for the discharge of that duty, and if the master, instead of discharging it himself, sees fit to have it attended to by others, that does not change the measure of obligation to the employee, or the latter's right to insist that reasonable precaution shall be taken to secure safety in these respects. Therefore it will be seen that the question turns rather on the character of the act than on the relations of the employees to each other.[21]

An employer cannot delegate to a servant the duty to furnish sufficient and safe materials, machinery, or other means by which the service is to be performed, so as to exempt himself from liability for injuries caused to another servant by the neglect of such duty. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 647, 29 L. Ed. 755; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 334, 44 L. Ed. 181.

A servant to whom the duty is delegated is a vice principal for whose negligence in its performance the master is liable to the same extent as for his own negligence in the same particular. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 648, 29 L. Ed. 755.

The appointment of an agent to provide and maintain in a suitable condition the machinery and apparatus to be used by the other employees, is not a performance of the master's duty in this respect but he is liable for the failure of the agent to do so. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 648, 29 L. Ed. 755; Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 688, 38 L. Ed. 597.

The master cannot escape liability for an injury to a servant caused by failure to provide the servant with safe appliances, upon the ground that a particular act of negligence was that of a fellow servant. Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612.

The obligation of the master to exercise reasonable care in furnishing suitable and safe machinery and appliances and keeping them in repair, is a personal obligation of which he cannot rid himself by delegating it to an agent to perform. Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612.

In Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612, the injury was the result of defective appliances. Gardner v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 150 U. S. 349, 359, 37 L. Ed. 1107.

The liability does not depend in any manner upon the grade of service of a coemployee, but upon the character of the act itself, and a breach of the positive obligation of the master. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 388, 37 L. Ed. 772; Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 755.

The duty is a continuing one and must be exercised whenever circumstances demand it.[22]

Degree of Care Required of Master.—While the employer is bound to provide a safe place and safe machinery, appliances, etc., in which and with which the employee is to work, and while this is a positive duty resting upon him and one which he may not avoid by turning it over to some employee, it is also true that there is no guaranty by the employer that place and machinery, etc., shall be absolutely safe.[23] The degree of care to be exercised by the master is ordinary care. He is bound to take reasonable care and make reasonable effort to secure safety,[24] and the greater the risk which attends the work to be done and the machinery to be used, the more imperative is the obligation resting upon him.[25] Reasonable care becomes then a demand of higher supremacy, yet in all cases it is a question of the reasonableness of the care—reasonableness depending upon the danger attending the place or the machinery. The rule in respect to machinery is the same as that in respect to place.[26]

(b) Inspection and Repairs.—An employer cannot delegate to a servant the duty to keep the materials, appliances, machinery, or other means by which the service is to be performed, in repair and order, so as to exempt himself from liability for injuries caused to another servant by its neglect or omission.[27]

Railroads.—Notwithstanding a railroad corporation may be controlled by competent, watchful and prudent directors, and care and caution are exercised in the selection of subordinates at the head of the several branches of its service, its obligation still remains to provide and maintain in a suitable condition the machinery and apparatus to be used by its employees.[28] The duty of a railroad

The master must exercise reasonable care in keeping machinery and appliances for carrying on the business for which he employs the servant, including the duty of making inspections, tests and examinations at the proper intervals; and he cannot in the respect of such matters interpose as a defense to an action by a servant, who has been injured, without fault on his part, the neglect of another servant to perform that duty. company in that respect to its employees is discharged when, but only when, its agents, whose business it is to supply such instrumentalities, exercise due care as well in their purchase originally, as in keeping and maintaining them in such condition as to be reasonably and adequately safe for use by employees;[29] and the company cannot, in respect of such matters, interpose between it and the servant, who has been injured without fault on his part, the personal responsibility of an agent, who, in exercising the master's authority, has violated the duty he owes, as well to the servant as to the corporation.[30]

The duty of a railroad company to exercise reasonable care to furnish trains in a safe and proper condition for the use of its employees, is not performed by exercising reasonable care to select and retain only competent and diligent inspectors; but it is liable if such inspectors in fact failed to discover defects which a reasonable examination would have disclosed.[31]

Car inspectors and repairers.—A car inspector and repairer is charged with one of the nonassignable duties of the railroad company, and is a vice principal, for whose negligence the company is liable to its other servants. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 755.

In the case of Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 218, 25 L. Ed. 612, "the engine of the railroad, coming in contact with an animal, was thrown from the track over an embankment, whereby the whistle fastened to the boiler was forced out, thus permitting hot water and steam to escape, which so scalded the engineer as to cause his death. The engine was thrown from the track because the cow-catcher or pilot was defective; and the whistle was forced out because it was insecurely fastened. These defects were owing to the negligence of the company's master mechanic and the foreman of the round house, to whom was committed the exclusive management of the motive power of the company, with control over all the engineers employed. In an action by the widow and child of the deceased the company set up as a defense that, if the alleged defects existed, which it denied, they were owing to the negligence of those servants, for which the company was not liable. The court held that the company was not thereby exonerated from liability." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 648, 29 L. Ed. 755.

In Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612, and in Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. Ed. 605, the action was for the fault of the master; either in providing an unsafe engine, or in employing unfit servants. Randall v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 483, 27 L. Ed. 1003. See post, "Negligence in Selecting or Retaining Servants," III, A, 4, b, (3).

Inspection of wheels of cars in freight trains.—The duty rests upon a railroad company to see to it, at the proper inspection station, that the wheels of the cars in a freight train, which is about to be drawn out upon the road, are in safe and proper condition, and this duty cannot be delegated so as to exonerate the company from liability to its servants for injuries resulting from the omission to perform such duty or through its negligent performance. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 689, 38 L. Ed. 597.

The evidence showed that the plaintiff, a brakeman, was in the employment of the company, and in the discharge of his duties as such, on a freight train made up

(c) Promulgating Rules for Conduct of Business.—It has been held in many states that the master owes, as such, to a servant entering his employment, the further duty of adopting and promulgating safe and proper rules for the conduct of his business, including the government of the machinery and the running of trains on a railroad track. If the master be neglectful in this matter it is a neglect of a duty which he personally owes to his employees, and if the employee suffer damage on account thereof, the master is liable. If, instead of personally performing this obligation, the master engages another to do it for him, he is liable for the neglect of that other, which, in such case, is not the neglect of a fellow servant, no matter what his position as to other matters, but is the neglect of the master to do that which it is the duty of the master to perform as such.[32]

Movement of Trains.—It is the duty of a railroad company to promulgate adequate rules and regulations for the safety of employees engaged in the dangerous duty of operating trains, and at times telegraph orders for the movements of trains. The duty is a continuing one and must be exercised whenever circumstances demand it. It may, indeed, often be discharged by one exercise. It may recur at any moment in keeping, moving and opposing trains in safe relation.[33]

(d) Particular Employments—aa. Buildings and Structures.—The obligation of a master to provide reasonably safe places and structures for his servants to work upon does not oblige him to keep a building, which they are employed in erecting, in a safe condition at every moment of their work, so far as its safety depends on the due performance of that work by them and their fellow servants.[34]

at Green River; that he was ordered on top of the train to set the brakes at different points going down a long hill, and was so engaged when the train was suddenly wrecked, and he was severely injured; that a wheel on one of the cars of the train had an old crack in it, some twelve inches long, which rendered it unsafe; that the wheel gave way by reason of the fracture and thus the disaster occurred; and that, although the crack, being old, was filled with greasy dirt and rust, it could have been detected without difficulty if the wheel had been properly examined at Green River, which was an inspecting station, at which trains were made up. It was held that upon the inferences properly deducible from such evidence, the rule applied, which requires of the master the exercise of reasonable care in furnishing suitable machinery and appliances for carrying on the business for which he employs the servant, and in keeping such machinery and appliances in repair, including the duty of making inspections, tests, and examinations at the proper intervals, Union Pac. R. Co. v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 688, 38 L. Ed. 597.

Defective brakes.—In Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 755, it appeared that a brakeman suffered an injury by reason of the fact that the brakes which he was called upon to apply were broken and out of order, the cars had been defective for years; the brakes were all worn out, and their condition had been called to the attention of the yard master, who had control of them while in the yard, and might have been ascertained, upon proper inspection, by the officer or agent of the company charged with the duty of keeping them in repair, yet nothing was done to repair either brakes or cars. It was held that in such circumstances, the company had not exercised ordinary care to keep the cars and brakes in good condition. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 334, 44 L. Ed. 181.

Carpenters, under charge of a foreman, and bricklayers, all employed by the owner through his superintendent, were engaged in the erection of a building, with a cornice supported by sticks of timber passing through the wall (which was thirteen inches thick) and projecting sixteen inches, and to be bricked up at the sides and ultimately over the top of the timbers. When the wall had been bricked up on a level with, but not yet over, the timbers, the foreman of the carpenters directed two of them to take a joist for the edge of the cornice, and to push it out to the ends of the projecting timbers. In so arranging the joist, a carpenter stepped on the projecting part of one of the timbers, which tipped over, whereby he fell and was hurt. Held, that the owner of the building was not liable to him for

If the master be neglectful in this matter it is a neglect of a duty which he personally owes to his employees, and if the employee suffer damage on account thereof, the master is liable. If, instead of personally performing this obligation, the master engages another to do it for him, he is liable for the neglect of that other, which, in such case, is not the neglect of a fellow servant, no matter what his position as to other matters, but is the neglect of the master to do that which it is the duty of the master to perform as such.[37]

Ordinary care, in the selection and retention of servants and agents implies that degree of diligence and precaution which the exigencies of the particular service reasonably required.[40]

40. Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. Ed. 605.

Ordinary care, when applied to the degree of care to be exercised by a railroad company or other corporation in the appointment and retention of its employees, implies the exercise of reasonable diligence, and reasonable diligence implies, as between the employer and employee, such watchfulness, caution, and oversight as, under all the circumstances of the particular service, a corporation controlled by careful, prudent officers ought to exercise. Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 460, 27 L. Ed. 605.

"It is such care as, in view of the consequences that may result from negligence on the part of employees, is fairly commensurate with the perils or dangers likely to be encountered." Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 460, 27 L. Ed. 605.

And does not mean only that degree of diligence which is customary, or is sanctioned by the general practice and usage, which obtains among those entrusted with the management and control of that business. Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. Ed. 605.

"To charge a brakeman, when entering the service of a railroad company, with knowledge of the degree of care generally or usually observed by agents of railroad corporations in the selection and retention of telegraphic operators along the line traversed by trains of cars—a branch of the company's service of which he can have little knowledge, and with the employees especially engaged therein he can ordinarily have little intercourse—is unwarranted by common experience. And to say, as matter of law, that a railroad corporation discharged its obligation to an employee—in respect of the fitness of coemployees whose negligence has caused him to be injured—by exercising, not that degree of care which ought to have been observed, but only such as like corporations are accustomed to observe, would go far towards relieving them of all responsibility whatever for negligence in the selection and retention of incompetent servants. If the general practice of such corporations in the appointment of servants is evidence which a jury may consider in determining whether, in the particular case, the requisite degree of care was observed, such practice cannot be taken as conclusive upon the inquiry as to the care which ought to have been exercised. A degree of care ordinarily exercised in such matters may not be due, or reasonable, or proper care, and therefore not ordinary care, within the meaning of the law." Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 461, 27 L. Ed. 605.

In an action against a railway company by an employee for damages for injuries resulting from the negligence of an engineer, the evidence established that the engineer had by his conduct frequently shown his negligence, recklessness and unfitness for the place; that complaints had at different times been made of his negligent and reckless conduct to the representatives of the railway company; that, notwithstanding such complaints, he was retained in the same service, except during short intervals when he had been discharged two or three times for misconduct; and that the injury complained of was the result of the negligence of such engineer. It was held that this made a case for the plaintiff unless overthown by a successful defense. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mares, 123 U. S. 710, 31 L. Ed. 296.

The court was right in refusing to give a peremptory instruction that if the plaintiff knew or even had the opportunity of knowing, before his injury, that the engineer was an unfit or unsafe man to run the engine in question, it was the plaintiff's duty absolutely to refuse to work with him any longer, and that his failure to do so would prevent him from recovering. The duty of the plaintiff under such circumstances is not to be determined by the single fact of his knowledge of the danger he incurred by continuing to serve with a coemployee known by him to be an unfit and incompetent person. It was enough for the court to say that a failure on the part of the plaintiff to refuse to work, in view of that knowledge on his part, might be negligence on his part. It was for the jury to say from all the attending circumstances whether his failure to do so was in fact contributory negligence. A suitable judgment on that question can only be reached by carefully weighing the probable consequences of ers, and the fellow-servant doctrine cannot be invoked to defeat a recovery for injuries resulting from a neglect of such duty.[41]

(5) Degree of Care Required of Master.—The degree of care required to be exercised by the master in the performance of his personal duties to his employer is ordinary care, which implies that degree of diligence and precaution which the exigencies of the particular services reasonably require.[42]

Selection and Retention of Servants.—See ante, "Negligence in Selecting or Retaining Servants," III, A, 4, b, (3).

In Providing Safe Place to Work and Safe Appliances, etc.—See ante, "In General," III, A, 4, b, (1).

In Inspection and Repairs.—See ante, "Inspection and Repairs," III, A, 4, b, (2), (b).

5. Superior Servants—a. In General.—Another qualification is where the one guilty of the negligence has such general control and occupies such relation to the work that he in effect takes the place of the employer—becomes a vice principal, or alter ego, as he is sometimes called. If an employer, whether an individual or a corporation, giving no personal attention to the work, places it in the entire control of another, such person may be not improperly regarded as the principal and his negligence that of the principal.[43]

b. Manager of Department.—In addition to the liability of the master for his neglect to perform his nonassignable duties, there has been laid upon him by some courts a further liability for the negligence of one of his servants in charge of a separate department or branch of business whereby another of his employees has been injured, even though the neglect was not of that character which the master owed in his capacity as master to the servant who was injured. In such case it has been held that the neglect of the superior officer or agent of the master was the neglect of the master, and was not that of the coemployee, and hence that the servant, who was a subordinate in the department of the officer, could recover against the common master for the injuries sustained by him under such circumstances.[44] The rule is that, in order to form an exception to the general law of nonliability, the person whose neglect caused the injury must be one who was clothed with the control and management of a distinct department, and not a mere separate piece of work in one of the branches of servboth courses of conduct, and it might well happen that even at the risk of injury to himself, occasioned by the unskillfulness of his coemployee, the plaintiff might still reasonably be regarded as under a duty not suddenly and instantly to refuse to continue in the conduct of the business of his principal. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mares, 123 U. S. 710, 31 L. Ed. 296.

It is not error for the court to charge "that the plaintiff had a right to suppose and assume that the railroad company had used proper diligence and care in the employment and retention of an engineer." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mares, 123 U. S. 710, 31 L. Ed. 296.

Train dispatcher.—In an action against a railway company by a brakeman to recover damages for an injury claimed to have resulted from the employment and retention by the company of an incompetent train dispatcher, it appeared that the train dispatcher was a boy 17 years of age whose whole knowledge of telegraphy was acquired during one year's service as a messenger boy, and that he had not been considered competent for certain parts of the work. It was held that a judgment for damages must be sustained. Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. Ed. 605.

When it appears that the work in which the employer is engaged is divided into separate and distinct departments, the one in charge of each of those departments is regarded as a vice principal. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 344, 48 L. Ed. 1006.

The master is liable for injuries to servants caused by the negligence of superintendents of departments who are representatives of the master, intrusted with the performance of his duties, and within the scope of their authority as vice ice in a department. This distinction is a plain one, and not subject to any great embarrassment in determining the fact in any particular case.[45] When the business of the master or employer is of such great and diversified extent that it naturally and necessarily separates itself into departments of service, the individuals placed by the master in charge of these separate branches and departments of service, and given entire and absolute control therein, may properly be considered, with respect to employees under them, vice principals and representatives of the master as fully and as completely as if the entire business of the master were placed by him under one superintendent.[46] But this rule can only

"Thus, between the law department of a railway corporation and the operating department, there is a natural and distinct separation, one which makes the two departments like two independent kinds of business, in which the one employer and master is engaged. So, oftentimes there is in the affairs of such corporation what may be called a manufacturing or repair department, and another strictly operating department; these two departments are, in their relations to each other, as distinct and separate as though the work of each was carried on by a separate corporation." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 383, 37 L. Ed. 772; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 355, 40 L. Ed. 994, reaffirmed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. Some indication of the meaning of the phrase "a superintendent of a separate and distinct branch or department of the master's business," is given by the facts and theory upon which a recovery was permitted in the case of Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 354, 40 L. Ed. 994, reaffirmed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. Ed. 999. The Ross case, supra, was overruled in New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 338, 44 L. Ed. 181. See post, "Employees of Railroads," III, A, 5, d, (1).

"The meaning of the expression 'departmental control' was again and very lately discussed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. Ed. 1009." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 356, 40 L. Ed. 994, reaffirmed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. Ed. 999.

It was this proposition which the court applied in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 383, 37 L. Ed. 772; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 344, 48 L. Ed. 1006. The Ross case, supra, was overruled in New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. Ed. 181.

Agents of a corporation clothed with the control and management of a district department, in which their duty is entirely that of direction and superintendence, are not fellow servants of their subordinate servants. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 390, 28 L. Ed. 787.

Indeed, where the master is a corporation, there can be no negligence on the part of the master except it also be that of some agent or servant, for a corporation only acts through agents. The directors are the managing agents; their negligence must be adjudged the negligence of the corporation, although they are simply agents. So when they place the entire management of the corporation in the hands of a general superintendent, such general superintendent, though himself only an agent, is almost universally recognized as the representative of the corporation, the master, and his negligence as that of the master. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 382, 37 L. Ed. 772.

It is only carrying the same principle a little further and with reasonable application, when it is held that the manager of a separate department of the master's business is not a fellow servant of the employees under him. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 383, 37 L. Ed. 772; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 344, 48 L. Ed. 1006.

be fairly applied when the different branches or departments of service are in and of themselves separate and distinct.[47] And from this natural separation flows the rule that he who is placed in charge of such separate branch of the service, who alone superintends and has the control of it, is as to it in the place of the master.[48] But this is a very different proposition from that which affirms that each separate piece of work in one of these branches of service is a distinct department, and gives to the individual having control of that piece of work the position of vice principal or representative of the master.[49]

c. Coworker in Control or Having Superiority of Position.—The master's responsibility for the negligence of a servant is not founded upon the fact that the servant guilty of the neglect had control over and a superior position to that occupied by the servant who was injured by his negligence. Mere superiority of position is no ground for liability.[50] So far as the matter of the master's exemption from liability depends upon whether the negligence is one of the ordinary risks of the employment, and, thus assumed by the employee, it includes all coworkers to the same end, whether in control or not.[51]

That the person sustaining the injury was under the direct authority and control of the person by whose negligence it was caused, does not render the master liable. Northern Pac. R. Even in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787, liability arising from mere superiority in position and the power to give orders to subordinates was denied. What was approved in that case, and the foundation upon which the approval was given, is very clearly stated by Mr. Justice Brewer in the course of the opinion delivered in the case of Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 380, 37 L. Ed. 772; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 355, 40 L. Ed. 994, reaffirmed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. The risks which an employee of a company assumes from the service which he undertakes is from the negligence of one in immediate control, as well as from a coworker, and there is no superintending agency for which a corporation is liable, unless it extends to an entire department of service. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 346, 44 L. Ed. 181.

" 'The danger from the negligence of one specially in charge of the particular work is as obvious and as great as from that of those who are simply coworkers with him in it; each is equally with the other an ordinary risk of the employment,' which the employee assumes when entering upon the employment, whether the risk be obvious or not." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 384, 37 L. Ed. 772; Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 263, 40 L. Ed. 418; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 343, 44 L. Ed. 181.

In Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772, it was laid down that the rightful test to determine whether the negligence complained of was an ordinary risk of the employment was "whether the negligent act constituted a breach of positive duty owing by the master, such as that of taking fair and reasonable precautions to surround his employees with fit and careful coworkers, and the furnishing to such employees of a reasonably safe place to work and reasonably safe tools or machinery with which to do the work, thus making the question of liability of an employer for an injury to his employee turn rather on the character of the alleged negligence act than on the relations of the employees to each other, so that, if the act is one done in the discharge of some positive duty of the master to the servant, then negligence in the act is the negligence of the master; but if it be not one in the discharge of such positive duty, then there should be

Prima facie, all who enter into the employ of a single master are engaged in a common service, and are fellow servants, and some other line of demarcation than that of control must exist to destroy the relation of fellow servants. All enter the service of the same master, to further his interests in the one enterprise; each knows when entering into that service that there is some risk of injury through the negligence of other employees, and that risk, which he knows exists, he assumes in entering into the employment.[52]

In the courts of the states of Ohio, Kentucky and perhaps others, the rule seems to obtain that while the master is not liable to his servant for any injury committed by a servant of equal degree in the same sphere of employment, unless some negligence is fixed on the master personally, yet that he is liable for the gross negligence of a servant superior in rank to the person injured, and is also liable for the ordinary negligence of a servant not engaged in the same department of service.[53]

some personal wrong on the part of the employer before he is liable therefor." Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 263, 264, 40 L. Ed. 418. See, also, New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. Ed. 181.

In the course of the opinion in Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772, Mr. Justice Brewer said: "It may safely be said that this court has never recognized the proposition that the mere control of one servant over another in doing a particular piece of work destroys the relation of fellow servants and puts an end to the master's liability. On the contrary, all the cases proceed on the ground of some breach of positive duty resting upon the master, or upon the idea of superintendence or control of a department. It has ever been affirmed that the employee assumes the ordinary risks incident to the service; and, as we have seen, it is as obvious that there is risk from the negligence of one in immediate control as from one simply a coworker." New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 336, 44 L. Ed. 181, overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787.

Ed. 656, the persons whose negligence caused the injury were adjudged to be fellow servants with the parties injured, so as to exempt the master from liability; and while the question in this case was not there presented, yet in neither case were the two servants doing the same work, although it is also true that in each of them there was no control by one over the other." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 388, 389, 37 L. Ed. 772.

"There is nothing in the later decision of this court in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. Ed. 1009, militating against the views expressed in the Baugh case. On the contrary, that case is approvingly referred to (p. 359), although said there to involve a different question from that which was in the Hambly case." Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 265, 40 L. Ed. 418.

"Where more than one man is engaged in doing any particular work, it becomes almost a necessity that one should be boss and the other subordinate, but both are nevertheless fellow workmen." The supreme court of Ohio and the court of appeals of Kentucky do not accept the ordinary rule exempting the master from liability to a servant for the negligent conduct of his fellows. At least, they do not apply such a rule to the extent that the supreme court of the United States and other courts have done. They

d. Particular Employments—(1) Employees of Railroad.—In general all railroad employees below the head of a department are fellow servants where the negligent servant is not intrusted with the personal duties of the master.[54]

Members of Train Crew.—As a general rule all the members of a train crew are fellow servants. Thus, a conductor while in charge of a train is a fellow servant of the engineer, fireman, brakeman and other members of the crew employed in operating such train;[55] and an engineer is a fellow servant of a fireman[56] hold that no service is common that does not admit a common participation, and no servants are fellow servants when one is placed in control over the other. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 342, 44 L. Ed. 181, overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787.

54. Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612.

Car repairers.—A car repairer working underneath a car failed to step from under such car, upon seeing that a caboose was being slowly backed down upon it, and warn the engineer having charge of the engine moving the caboose; but relied upon another car repairer, who was on the side of the track to give the warning. It was held that if the car repairer is to be regarded as the servant of the railroad company, his negligence gave rise to no cause of action on behalf of the injured car repairer, since in every view of the law of fellow servant they were such servants. Southern Pac. Co. v. Pool, 160 U. S. 438, 40 L. Ed. 485.

55. Conductors.—A conductor while in charge of a train is not a vice principal, representing the railroad company, as to the engineer, fireman, brakeman and other employees engaged in operating such train in such a sense that his negligence is that of the company, the common employer. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 44 L. Ed. 181, expressly overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787, which was in effect if not in terms overruled in Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772. See, also, Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 358, 38 L. Ed. 1009.

In the absence of evidence of special and unusual powers having been conferred upon the conductor of a freight train, he, the engineer, and the brakeman, must be deemed to be fellow servants within the meaning of the rule which exempts the railroad company, their common employer, from liability to one of them for injuries caused by the negligence of another. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 340, 44 L. Ed. 181, overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787.

Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787, was a case wherein an action was maintained, brought by a locomotive engineer to recover damages received in a collision caused by the negligence of the conductor of the train. The reasoning employed in expressing the views of a majority of the court, and the conclusion reached, cannot be reconciled with the other decisions of the supreme court. In New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 340, 44 L. Ed. 181, the court in overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, supra, said: "While the opinion in the Ross case contains a lucid exposition of many of the established rules regulating the relations between masters and servants, and particularly as respects the duties of railroad companies to their various employees, we think it went too far in holding that a conductor of a freight train is, ipso facto, a vice principal of the company. An inspection of the opinion shows that that conclusion was based upon certain assumptions, not borne out by the evidence in the case, as to the powers and duties of conductors of freight trains. * * * In so far as the decision in the case of Ross is to be understood as laying down, as a rule of law to govern in the trial of actions against railroad companies, that the conductor, merely from his position as such, is a vice principal, whose negligence is that of the company, it must be deemed to have been overruled, in effect if not in terms, in the subsequent case of Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 789, is distinguished in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 354, 40 L. Ed. 994; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 358, 38 L. Ed. 1009.

Kentucky and Ohio.—"It has been held by the supreme court of Ohio and by the court of appeals of Kentucky that railroad companies are responsible for negligence of conductors to other employees." New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 342, 44 L. Ed. 181.

56. An engineer and fireman when engaged in their respective duties as such, are fellow servants of the railroad company, and the fireman is precluded by principles of general law from recovering damages from the company for injuries caused by the negligence of the engineer. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. Ed. 772; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 358, 38 L. Ed. 1009.

An engineer and fireman of a locomotive engine running alone on a railroad, without any train attached, when engaged on such duty, are fellow servants of the railroad company, so as to preclude the fireman from recovering damages from and a brakeman[57] when engaged in their respective duties.

Foreman of and Members of a Float Drill Crew.—The foreman or boss of a float drill crew is a fellow servant with the other members of such crew.[58]

The rule of a railroad company provided: "Whenever a train or engine is run without a conductor, the engineman thereof will also be regarded as conductor, and will act accordingly." It was held that the rule of the company does not have the effect of making the engineman the representative of the railroad company while performing his duties and not a fellow servant with the other employees on the train, so as to make the company liable to a fireman for injuries caused by the negligence of the engineman, ad interim conductor under the rule. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 379, 37 L. Ed. 772; New England R Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 346, 44 L. Ed. 181.

The engineer as railroads are now operated, is a much more important functionary in the actual movements of the train, when in motion, than the conductor. It is his hand that regulates the application of the brakes that control the speed of the train, and in doing so he acts upon his own knowledge and observation, and not upon orders of the conductor. Particularly has this become the case since the introduction of the air train-brake system. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 342, 44 L. Ed. 181, overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787.

57. Engineer and brakeman.—A brakeman, who is injured by the negligence of the engineer, and the negligent engineer are fellow servants. Randall v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. Ed. 1003.

58. The foreman of a float drill crew whose duties were not even those of simple direction and superintendence over the operations of the drill crew, but who was a component part of the crew, an active coworker in the manual work of switching, with the specific duty assigned to him by the yardmaster of turning the switches, and who was subordinate to the yardmaster who had control of this and other drill crews and employed and discharged all the workers in the yard, giving them their general instructions, and assigning them to their duty, is a fellow servant with the other members of the drill crew; and the railroad company is not liable to a member of the crew for injuries resulting from the foreman's negligence in moving the detached cars without placing someone at the brake of the moving cars. Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. Ed. 418.

In Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 40 L. Ed. 418, the men engaged in the service of the railroad company were employed in uncoupling from the rear of trains cars which were to be sent elsewhere and in attaching other cars in their place, and they were held to be fellow servants, although the force, consisting of five men, was under the orders of a "boss" who directed the men which cars to uncouple and what cars to couple, and the neglect was alleged to have been the neglect of the "boss" by which the injury resulted to one of the men. This court held that they were fellow servants, and the mere fact that one was under the orders of the other constituted no distinction, and that the general rule of nonliability applied. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 356, 40 L. Ed. 994, reaffirmed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. Ed. 999.

"'It is quite obvious that the work of shifting cars in a railroad yard must be left in a great measure to the judgment and discretion of the servants of the railroad who are entrusted with the management of the yard. The details must be left to them, and all that the company can do for the protection of its employees is to provide competent coservants, and prescribe such regulations as experience shows may be best calculated to secure their safety.' * * * A personal, positive duty would clearly not have been imposed upon a natural person, owner of a railroad, to supervise and control the details of the operation of switching cars in a railroad yard; neither is such duty imposed as a positive duty upon a corporation." Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 267, 40 L. Ed. 418.

59. The negligence of a local telegraph operator and station agent of a railway company in observing and reporting by telegraph to the train dispatcher the movement of trains past his station, which causes the injury or death of a fireman of the company, without any fault or negligence of the train dispatcher, is not the negligence of a vice principal for which

Employees Engaged in Repairing Road.—Employees engaged in repairing the road of a railroad company are fellow servants.[60]

Section Foreman or Boss of Repair Gang and Member of Gang.—A section foreman does not occupy the position of a superintendent of a separate and distinct department,[61] but is a fellow servant of a member of his crew, and one of the crew injured by the negligence of such foreman cannot recover.[62]

the railway company is liable in damages to the fireman or his personal representatives, but is the negligence of a fellow servant of the fireman, the risk of which the latter assumed. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 340, 48 L. Ed. 1006.

When a local telegraph operator is called upon specially by a train dispatcher to give information relative to the arrival of a train at his station, to enable the dispatcher to formulate orders for the movement of other trains, the local operator in the matter of giving such information acts as a fellow servant of train operatives in such sense that the master is not liable to train operatives (a fireman) who are injured by obeying an erroneous order of the dispatcher that was induced by false information given by the local operator. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 340, 48 L. Ed. 1006.

The work of the fireman and the operator brings the parties closely together in the matter of the movement of trains. The fireman knew that any negligence on the part of the operator might result in injury to him, and must have contemplated such possibility when he entered the service of the company. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 346, 48 L. Ed. 1006.

In Price v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 145 U. S. 651, 36 L. Ed. 843, the trial court held that a telegraph operator by whose negligence the accident happened, was a fellow servant with the engineer, the person injured, and that the defendant was therefore entitled to a verdict. On writ of error the judgment was affirmed in the supreme court by a divided court.

60. The conductor and the hands on a work train, and a section foreman on a handcar, who has charge of such car, are fellow servants of a member of the section gang on the handcar under the orders of such foreman, who is injured as a result of their negligence by a collision of the train while running backward, and the handcar. Martin v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 166 U. S. 399, 41 L. Ed. 1051.

62. Central R. Co. v. Keegan, 160 U. S. 259, 267, 40 L. Ed. 418.

The foreman of a gang of laborers employed in keeping in repair sections of a railroad although he has the power to hire or discharge any laborer and exclusive control and management in all matters connected with their work, is a fellow servant with the men in the gang. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. Ed. 994; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 344, 48 L. Ed. 1006; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 338, 44 L. Ed. 181.

If a member of a railroad gang is injured, while riding on a handcar as a result of the negligence of the foreman of the gang, the company is not liable to him in the absence of a contract to carry him safely on such car to and from his work. If there is no proof of any contract on the part of the railroad company to carry the injured servant safely, further than is to be inferred from the fact that the company furnished handcars which were worked by the gang and upon which they rode to and from the place of labor and if, under these circumstances, the servant be injured through the neglect of a fellow servant, such as appears in this case, the master is not liable. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 40 L. Ed. 994, reaffirmed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. Ed. 999.

The boss of a small gang of ten or fifteen men, engaged in making repairs upon the road wherever they might be necessary, over a distance of three sections, aiding and assisting the regular gang of workmen upon each section as occasion demanded, was not such a superintendent of a separate department, nor was he in control of such a distinct branch of the work of the master as would be necessary to render the master liable to a coemployee for his neglect. He is in fact, as well as in law, a fellow workman; he went with the gang to the place of work in the morning, stayed there with them during the day, superintended their work, giving directions in regard to it, and returned home with them in the evening, acting as a part of the crew of the handcar upon which they rode. The mere fact, if it be a fact, that he did not actually handle a shovel or a pick, is an unimportant matter. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Peterson, 162 U. S. 346, 357, 40 L. Ed. 994, reaffirmed in Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. Ed. 999; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 338, 44 L. Ed. 181.

6. Servants in Separate Departments—a. In General.—If the departments of the two servants are so far separated from each other that the possibility of coming in contact, and hence incurring danger from the negligent performance of the duties of such other department, could not be said to be within the contemplation of the person injured, the doctrine of fellow service should not apply.[64] charge of a railroad gang, in running his handcar at too high a rate of speed while carrying his gang to or from the place of labor, as a result of which a member of the gang is injured, is, not the neglect of any duty which the company as master was bound itself to perform, but was nothing more than the negligence of a coservant of the injured member of the gang in performing the duty revolving upon them. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charless, 162 U. S. 359, 40 L. Ed. 999. The court said: The principle which covers the facts of this case was laid down in Randall v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. Ed. 1003, and distinguished the case of Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787, and cited Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 380, 37 L. Ed. 772; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 38 L. Ed. 1009, as among the latest expression of opinion of that court in regard to views similar to those stated in the case in 109 U. S.

In an action by a laborer or construction hand against a railway company for injuries received by him resulting from the negligence of his fellow servants in allowing a steel rail which they were loading upon a flat car to strike such car and drop upon him, breaking his leg and foot, the negligence alleged consisted in the fact that, after the men had lifted the rail in question and had carried it forward to the car and were holding it, awaiting the word of command from the construction boss or foreman to lift it further and throw it on the car, the foreman failed to give the word of command in such a way as to produce concert of action in the men, but, on the contrary, ordered them to get the rail on the car in any way they could; and the fact that the foreman hurried the men and urged them to hasten as a consequence of which the plaintiff and his fellow workmen became confused and failed to act in concert. It was held that whatever negligence there was, was the negligence either of the plaintiff himself or of his fellow servants who with him had hold of the rail and did not authorize a recovery from the employer. Coyne v. Union Pac. R. Co., 133 U. S. 370, 33 L. Ed. 651.

63. The business of a mining company was under the control of a general manager, and was divided into three departments, the mine, the mill and the chlorination works, each of which departments had a foreman or superintendent under the general manager. The mine department had three shifts or gangs of workmen, two by day and one by night. It was held that the foreman of one of these shifts or gangs of workmen was not a vice principal or representative of the corporation, but a fellow servant with the members of such gang although he had authority to engage and discharge the men under him. Alaska Min. Co. v. Whelan, 168 U. S. 86, 42 L. Ed. 390.

The foreman was not a vice principal or representative of the corporation. He was not the general manager of its business, or the superintendent of any department of that business. But he was merely the foreman or boss of the particular gang of men to which the plaintiff belonged. Whether he had or had not authority to engage and discharge the men under him is immaterial. Even if he had such authority, he was none the less a fellow servant with them, employed in the same department of business, and under a common head. There was no evidence that he was an unsuitable person for his place, or that the machinery was imperfect or defective for its purpose. The negligence, if any, was his own negligence in using the machinery or in giving orders to the men. The case is governed by a series of recent decisions of the supreme court, undistinguishable in their facts from this one. Alaska Min. Co. v. Whelan, 168 U. S. 86, 89, 42 L. Ed. 390; Central R. In Cunard Steamship Co. v. Carey, 119 U. S. 245, 30 L. Ed. 354, a judgment in favor of a longshoreman for injuries resulting from the falling of a tub filled with coal upon him, was affirmed by a divided court. The fall was caused by the separation or breaking of a rope which suspended the tub. The longshoreman claimed that the injury was caused by the negligence of B, a servant of the company, in not providing a proper rope. The company defended upon the ground that B was a fellow servant of the longshoreman for whose negligence it was not liable.

Persons entrusted with the duty of repairing or inspecting cars, engines, or other appliances used in operating railroads, are not fellow servants of other employees of a railroad company and who work on the trains or about the yards, so as to relieve the railroad company from liability for injuries to the latter occasioned by the negligence of the former in the performance of this duty. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 755; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 356, 38 L. Ed. 1009.

A brakeman and a person entrusted with the duty of keeping the cars in order are not fellow servants so as to relieve a railroad company from liability for the negligence of the latter in its performance. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 755; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 356, 38 L. Ed. 1009.

In Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 755, the plaintiff was a brakeman in defendant's yard where its cars were switched upon different tracks and its trains were made up for the road. He received an injury from a defective brake, which had been allowed to get out of repair through the negligence of an officer or agent of the company who was charged with the duty of keeping the cars in order. It was held, that the person receiving and the person causing the injury did not occupy the relative position of fellow servants. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 356, 357, 38 L. Ed. 1009. See, also, Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Daniels, 152 U. S. 684, 38 L. Ed. 597.

67. A train dispatcher who represents the company in the promulgation of special orders governing the movement of trains does not relieve the company, by the promulgation of the orders; he may be required to repeat them or promulgate new ones; he must at all times know and guard against possible changes. Santa Fe Pac. R. Co. v. Holmes, 202 U. S. 438, 50 L. Ed. 1094.

Two passenger trains No. 3 and No. 4, the former being westbound and the latter eastbound collided causing injuries to an engineer. Train No. 3 was running under special orders indicating the meeting point of the trains. No. 4 should have reached the meeting point before the leaving time for train No. 3. The train dispatcher was informed that No. 3 was running ahead of time, but took no steps to stop such train at the meeting point. Train No. 3 passed the meeting point before the arrival of train No. 4 and collided with it, resulting in the injuries to the engineer. It was held that the collision was the result of the dispatcher's negligence in failing to take into account and do what a prudent man would have taken into account and have done, and that the dispatcher represented the company in the promulgation of orders, for the running of the trains and was not a fellow servant of the engineer. Members of Crew of Different Trains.—The relation of fellow servant exists between the members of crews employed in operating different trains of the same railroad company.[68]

Laborers Employed upon a Railroad Track and Employees of a Moving Train.—It may be said in general that, as between laborers employed upon a railroad track and the conductor or other employees of a moving train, the courts of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, North Carolina, Minnesota, Maine, Texas, California, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Arkansas, and Wisconsin hold the relation of fellow servants to exist; while in Illinois, Missouri, Virginia, Ohio, and Kentucky the rule is apparently the other way. In the supreme court of the United States although the cases involving the question of fellow service have not been numerous nor, perhaps, altogether harmonious, yet they hold the relation of fellow servants to exist.[69]

68. The relation of fellow servant exists between an engineer operating a locomotive on one train and the conductor on another train of the same road. Oakes v. Mase, 165 U. S. 363, 364, 41 L. In Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Poirier, 167 U. S. 48, 42 L. Ed. 72, it was held that a brakeman on a regular train of a railroad and the conductor of a wild train, on the same road, are fellow servants, and the railroad company is not responsible for injuries happening to the former by reason of a collision of the two trains, caused by the negligence of the latter and by his disregard of the rules of the company. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 340, 44 L. Ed. 181.

A brakeman, working a switch for his train on one track in a railroad yard, is a fellow servant with the engineman of another train of the same corporation upon an adjacent track; and cannot maintain an action against the corporation for an injury caused by the negligence of the engineman in driving his engine too fast and not giving due notice of its approach, without proving negligence of the corporation in employing an unfit engineman. Randall v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. Ed. 1003; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 333, 44 L. Ed. 181.

"They are employed and paid by the same master. The duties of the two bring them to work at the same place at the same time, so that the negligence of the one in doing his work may injure the other in doing his work. Their separate services have an immediate common object—the moving of the trains." Randall v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 484, 27 L. Ed. 1003; New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. "That the running of an engine by itself is not a separate branch of service seems perfectly clear. The fact is all the locomotive engines of a railroad company are in the one department, the operating department; and those employed in running them, whether as engineers or firemen, are engaged in a common employment and are fellow servants. It might as well be said that, where a liveryman has a dozen carriages, the driver of each has charge of a separate branch or department of service, and that if one drives his carriage negligently against another employee, the master is exempt from liability." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 389, 37 L. Ed. 772. See, to the same effect, New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 336, 44 L. Ed. 181.

"The services of a switchman in keeping a track clear for the passage of trains do not differ materially, so far as actions founded upon the negligence of trainmen are concerned, from those of a laborer engaged in keeping the track in repair; neither of them is under the personal control of the engineer or conductor of the moving train, but both are alike engaged in an employment necessarily bringing them in contact with passing engines, and in the 'immediate common object' of securing the safe passage of trains over

(2) Members of Crew of Vessel.—Upon a full review of the English and American authorities the law may be considered as settled, that all the members of the crew of a vessel, except perhaps the master, are, as between themselves, fellow servants, and hence seamen cannot recover for injuries sustained through the negligence of another member of the crew beyond the expense of their maintenance and cure.[70] The porter and the carpenter of a ship's company are fellow servants with the stewardess.[71]

"As a laborer upon a railroad track, either in switching trains or repairing the track, is constantly exposed to the danger of passing trains, and bound to look out for them, any negligence in the management of such trains is a risk which may or should be contemplated by him in entering upon the service of the company." The negligence of the employees on a freight train in giving no signals of their approach around a curve and through a cut, although they were near a public crossing and some signals were necessary on that account, and which result in injury to a member of a section gang who was on a handcar, is not negligence for which the railroad company is liable but the negligence of a fellow servant. In England the master and crew are treated as fellow servants, and hence it would follow that no action would lie by a member of the crew against either the owners or the ship for injuries received through the negligence of the master. It is otherwise, however, in Ireland and in Scotland, where the master is regarded as a vice principal. The statutes of the United States contain no provision upon the subject of the liability of the ship or her owners for damages occasioned by the negligence of the captain to a member of the crew; but in all but a few of the more recent cases the analogies of the English and Continental codes have been followed, and the recovery limited to the wages and expenses of maintenance and cure. The Osceola, 189 U. S. 158, 171, 47 L. Ed. 760.

The statute of Wisconsin, Rev. Stat., 1898, § 3348, which provides that every ship, boat or vessel used in navigating the waters of that state shall be liable "for all damages arising from injuries done to persons or property by such ship, boat or vessel," and that the claim for such damages shall constitute a lien upon such ship, boat or vessel, which shall take precedence of all other claims or liens thereon, does not apply to injuries suffered by a member of the crew on board the ship as a result of a gangway being blown against him through the negligence or mismanagement of the master. In Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 L. Ed. 656, an action was brought by one Merchant, who was employed as a stewardess of the steamship belonging to the defendant. "It appeared that the ship's company consisted of thirty-two persons, divided into three classes of servants, called three departments—the deck department, the engineers' department, and the steward's department. The captain, the first and second officers, the purser, the carpenter and the sailors were in the deck department; the engineers, the firemen and the stokers were in the engineers' department; the steward, the waiters, the cooks, the porter and the stewardess were in the steward's department. At the close of the evidence the defendant's counsel requested the court to charge the jury to find a verdict for the defendant on the ground that the injury sustained by the plaintiff was occasioned, if there was any negligence, by the negligence of a fellow servant. This the court refused to do. There was a verdict for the plaintiff, and the case was brought to this court. Here it was contended that, as the carpenter whose negligence was alleged as the cause of the accident, was in the deck department, and the stewardess in the steward's department, those were different departments in such a sense that the carpenter was not a fellow servant with the stewardess." It was held that the carpenter and stewardess were fellow servants, and that the case fell within the fellow-servant rule. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 335, 44 L. Ed. 181.

7. Concurrent Negligence of Master or Vice Principal with That of Fellow Servant.—If the neglect of the master or of a servant intrusted with performance of a personal duty of the master concurs with the negligence of a fellow servant in causing an injury to another servant, the master is liable therefor.[73] If the neglect of the master's duty to furnish safe applicances and safe working places concurs with that of the negligence of a fellow servant, the master is liable.[74]

In Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 L. Ed. 656, "the stewardess of a steamship belonging to a corporation brought suit to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by her by reason of a defective railing at a gangway, which gave way as she leaned against it, and precipitated her into the water. The railing had been recently removed and the gangway opened to take off some freight, and had not been properly replaced by the porter and carpenter of the ship whose duty it was to replace them. It was held that, as the porter and the carpenter were fellow servants with the stewardess, the corporation was not liable. Said Mr. Justice Blatchford: 'As the porter was confessedly in the same department with the stewardess, his negligence was that of a fellow servant. The contention of the plaintiff is that, as the carpenter was in the deck department and the stewardess in the steward's department, those were different departments in such a sense that the carpenter was not a fellow servant with the stewardess. But we think that, on the evidence, both the porter and the carpenter were fellow servants with the plaintiff. The carpenter had no authority over the plaintiff, nor had the porter. * * * There was nothing in the employment or service of the carpenter or the porter which made either of them any more the representative of the defendant than the employment and service of the stewardess made her such representative.' The division of the crew into departments was treated as evidently for the convenience of administration upon the vessel, but having no effect upon the question of fellow service." Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 358, 38 L. Ed. 1009.

The court left it as a question for the jury to determine, if they found that negligence existed, whether the injury was occasioned by the careless act of a servant not employed in the same department with the plaintiff. This ruling was excepted to by the defendant, and it was held to be erroneous. Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 379, 33 L. Ed. 656.

72. Armour v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 313, 28 L. Ed. 440.

Thus, carpenters and bricklayers, all of whom were employed and paid by the same master, and were working in the course of their employment at the same place and time, with an immediate common object, the erection of a building, are within the strictest limits of the rule of law upon the subject, fellow servants, one of whom cannot maintain an action for injuries caused by the negligence of another against their common master. Armour v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 313, 318, 28 L. Ed. 440, citing Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Randall v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. Ed. 1003.

An employer is liable to a servant for the negligence of a fellow servant, when his own negligence contributes to the injury. The exemption of the employer under the fellow servant rule is destroyed in such case. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 335, 44 L. Ed. 181; Quebec Steamship Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 L. Ed. 656.

If two concurring causes contribute to an accident to a servant, the fact that one of the efficient causes does not give rise to a right of recovery from the master, because of the fellow-servant rule, does not absolve him from responsibility for the cause of the accident for which he was liable. Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, 205 U. S. 60, 75, 51 L. Ed. 708, citing Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Hickey, 166 U. S. 521, 41 L. Ed. 1101.

For using in a negligent manner a defective appliance furnished by the master, the latter might be liable if a coemployee were thereby and in consequence thereof injured. As the master furnished the defective appliance, it would be no answer to say that it was negligently used. But, on the other hand, the master would not be responsible for the negligent use of a proper appliance.[75]

8. Liability of Master for Personal Negligence.—A servant is entitled to recover damages for injuries suffered through the personal fault or misconduct of his employer.[76]

9. Risks Not within Contract of Service.—But this presumption cannot arise where the risk is not within the contract of service, and the servant had no reason to believe he would have to encounter it.[77]

10. Servants Who Are or Are Not Fellow Servants—a. General Rule.—The general rule is that those entering into the service of a common master becomes thereby engaged in a common service and are fellow servants, and, prima facie, ployment as an engine driver for the defendant, a railroad company, was injured by the collision of the train on which he was with another train of the company. Held, that the court did not err in charging the jury that the company, if its negligence had a share in causing the injuries of the plaintiff, was liable, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of his fellow servant. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700, 27 L. Ed. 266.

If the negligence of a railroad company contributed to, that is to say, had a share in producing, the injury, the company is liable, even though the negligence of a fellow servant was contributory also. If the negligence of the company contribute to it, it must necessarily have been an immediate cause of, the accident, and it is no defense that another was likewise guilty of wrong. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700, 702, 27 L. Ed. 266.

Mines.—One of the efficient causes contributing to an accident to an employee in a mine was an order of the mine manager to such employee to go into a certain roadway in the mine, for which no recovery could be had under the pleadings in the case. The other cause of the accident was the neglect by the mine owner to perform his statutory duty to prevent the accumulation of the dangerous gases which led to the accident. It was held that because the order of the mine manager, under the pleadings, did not give rise to a right of recovery, it did not follow that therefore the owner was absolved from responsibility for the cause of the accident for which he was liable and that a recovery might be had against him. "If it were otherwise, principals would be released from all obligations to make reparations to an employee in a subordinate position for any injury caused by the wrongful conduct of the persons placed over him, whether they were fellow servants in the same common service or not. Such a doctrine would be subversive of all just ideas of the obligations arising out of the contract of service, and withdraw all protection from the subordinate employees of railroad corporations. These corporations, instead of being required to conduct their business so as not to endanger life, would, so far as this class of persons were concerned, be relieved of all pecuniary responsibility in case they failed to do it. A doctrine that leads to such results is unsupported by reason, and cannot receive our sanction." Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 217, 25 L. Ed. 612; Railroad Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall. 553, 558, 21 L. Ed. 739.

Ed. 739, where a boy was injured through dangerous machinery in doing an act which was not within the scope of his duty and employment, though done at the command of his immediate superior, this court, while sustaining the liability of the master, did so on the ground that the risk was not within the contract of service, and that the servant had no reason to believe that he would have to encounter such a danger." Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 388, 37 L. Ed. 772.

In Railroad Co. v. Fort, 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. Ed. 739, the plaintiff maintained his action because at the time of the injury he was not acting under his contract of service with the defendant; being a minor, he was performing, by direction of his

the common master is not liable for the negligence of one of his servants which has resulted in an injury to a fellow servant.[78]

b. Relation to Master.—Servants to be fellow servants must be in the employ of the same master.[79]

c. Common Employment.—The doctrine assumes that the servant causing the injury is in the same employment with the servant injured, that is, that both are engaged in a common employment.[80] It has not become necessary to define with any great precision what was meant by the words "common service" or "common employment," and perhaps it might be difficult beforehand to suggest any exact definition of them.[81] superior, work outside of and disconnected with the contract which his father had made for him with the defendant. Randall v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 483, 27 L. Ed. 1003.

F., a boy of tender years, had been engaged, by a company owning it, in a machine shop, as a workman or helper under the superintendence of C., and required to obey his orders. After being employed for a few months chiefly in receiving and putting away mouldings as they came from a moulding machine, the boy, by the order of C., ascended a ladder to a great height from the floor, among rapidly revolving and dangerous machinery, for the purpose of adjusting a belt by which a portion of the machinery was moved, and while engaged in the endeavor to execute the order had his arm torn from his body. The jury, by a special verdict, found that the order was not within the scope of the boy's duty and employment, but was within that of C.; that the order was not a reasonable one; that its execution was attended with hazard to life or limb, and that a prudent man would not have ordered the boy to execute it. Held, that the company was liable in damages for the injuries, and that the rule that the master is not liable to one of his servants for injuries resulting from the carelessness of another, when both are engaged in a common service, although the injured person was under the control and direction of the servant who caused the injury—whether a true rule or not—had no application to the case. Who, within the true sense of the rule, or upon grounds of public policy, are to be deemed fellow servants in the same common adventure or undertaking, is a question in reference to which much contrariety of opinion exists in the courts of the several states. The employer is not liable for an injury to one employee occasioned by the negligence of another engaged in the same general undertaking; it is not necessary that the servants should be engaged in the same operation or particular work; it is enough, to bring the case within the general rule of exemption, if they are in the employment of the same master, engaged in the same common enterprise, both employed to perform duties tending to accomplish the same general purposes, or, in other words, if the services of each in his particular sphere or department are directed to the accomplishment of the same general end. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 328, 44 L. Ed. 181, overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Dixon, 194 U. S. 338, 348, 48 L. Where Questions of "Subordination" or of "Different Departments" Involved.—"To hold the principal liable whenever there are graduations of rank between the person receiving and the person causing the injury, or whenever they are employed in different departments of the same general service, would result in frittering away the whole doctrine of fellow service. Cases arising between persons engaged together in the same identical service, as, for instance, between brakemen of the same train or two seamen of equal rank in the same ship, are comparatively rare. In a large majority of cases there is some distinction either in respect to grade of service, or in the nature of their employments. Courts, however, have been reluctant to recognize these distinctions unless the superiority of the person causing the injury was such as to put him rather in the category of principal than of agent, as, for example, the superintendent of a factory or railway, and the employments were so far different that, although paid by the same master, the two servants were brought no farther in contact with each other than as if they had been employed by different principals."[82]

d. Servants Off Duty or Where Contract of Service Terminated.—An employee not on duty is not a fellow servant with those engaged in the same common employment in which he is ordinarily engaged, so as to relieve the master from liability to him for injuries resulting from their negligence.[83]

B. Under State Statutes.—In some of the states the statutes in respect to the fellow-servant rule are declaratory of the common law as it exists in states which have not adopted the superior servant or separate department rule.[84] Some 83. Fletcher v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 168 U. S. 135, 138, 42 L. Ed. 411.

The plaintiff, a workman employed by the defendant railway company in its work shops, while returning from his day's work, stopped at the intersection of two streets while a repair train passed him. As the train passed, one of the workmen on board threw from the car on which he was standing a stick of bridge timber, which struck the ground and rebounded, struck the plaintiff and seriously injured him. It was the custom of the railroad company to allow the workmen on the repair train to bring back with them for their individual use sticks of refuse timber left over from their work after repairing the road. It was the constant habit of these men to throw off these pieces of timber while the train was in motion at such points on the road as were nearest their homes. The only caution given the men on the part of the servants or agents of the company was that they should be careful not to hurt any one in throwing the wood off. The foreman of the gang gave such instruction. The plaintiff sued the company to recover damages. It was held that the liability of the defendant to the plaintiff for the act in question is not to be gauged by the law applicable to fellow servants. The plaintiff having at the time of the accident finished his employment for the day, and left the work shop and grounds of the defendant, and being on a public highway in the city with the same rights as any other citizen, was not a fellow servant of the workmen on the train. Fletcher v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 168 U. S. 135, 42 L. Ed. 411.

In Packet Co. v. McCue, 17 Wall. 508, 21 L. Ed. 705, the plaintiff maintained his action because at the time of the injury he was not acting under his contract of service with the defendant; he had wholly ceased to be the defendant's servant. The North Dakota Civil Code, § 1130, does not relieve an employer from liability for injuries suffered by an employee in consequence of the negligence of a coservant, employed by the same employer in different department from that in which the injured employee is employed. In Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. Ed. 755, it appeared that a brakeman suffered an injury by reason of the fact that the brakes which he was called upon to apply were broken and out of order. There was a question as to the import and effect of a statute of Dakota, in which territory the accident took place, providing that "an employer is not bound to indemnify his employee for losses suffered by the latter in consequence of the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed, nor in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless he has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee," and that "an employer must, in all cases, indemnify his employee for losses caused of the state statutes abolish or modify the fellow-servant doctrine, especially in so far as it is applicable to railroads. The following states have such statutes which have been construed or applied by the supreme court of the United States: Illinois;[85] Iowa;[86] Kansas;[87] Texas.[88]

by the former's want of ordinary care." It was held, that these provisions of the Dakota code expressed the general law that an employer is responsible for the injury to his employees caused by his own want of ordinary care; that his selection of defective machinery, which is to be moved by steam power, is of itself evidence of a want of ordinary care, and allowing it to remain out of repair, when its condition is brought to his notice, or by proper inspection might be known, is culpable negligence. The cars, in that case, had been defective for years; the brakes were all worn out, and their condition had been called to the attention of the yardmaster, who had control of them while in the yard, and might have been ascertained, upon proper inspection, by the officer or agent of the company charged with the duty of keeping them in repair, yet nothing was done to repair either brakes or cars. It was held that in such circumstances, the company had not exercised ordinary care to keep the cars and brakes in good condition; and that, therefore, under the provisions of the statute, the company was bound to indemnify the plaintiff. New England R. Co. v. Conroy, 175 U. S. 323, 334, 44 L. Ed. 181, overruling Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. Ed. 787.

Under the mining act of Illinois of 1899, as construed by the supreme court of the state a mine manager and a mine examiner are vice principals of the mine owner, and are engaged in the performance of duties which the owner cannot delegate to others in such manner as to relieve himself from responsibility. Wilmington Star Min. Co. v. Fulton, 205 U. S. 60, 72, 51 L. Ed. 708.

86. Iowa.—Under § 1307 of the Iowa Code the wrongs for which a railroad company is to be liable must be wrongs connected with the use and operation of the railway on or about which the employees are employed. This statute is not confined to employees engaged in operating and moving trains and who are injured by such trains, and employees who, while in the discharge of their duty, are injured by trains used in operating the railway. An injury to an employee riding on or propelling a handcar, resulting from the negligence of a coemployee in the management and running of the handcar, falls within the provisions of the statute of Iowa on this subject. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Artery, 137 U. S. 507, 34 L. Ed. 747.

The suit was brought under § 1307, Code of Iowa, 1873.

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pontius, 157 U. S. 209, 39 L. Ed. 675, a bridge carpenter, employed by a railroad company, who was injured through the negligence of employees of the company while assisting in loading timber, taken from the false work used in constructing a bridge, on a car for transportation to another point on the company's road, was held to be an employee of the company within the meaning of the statute of Kansas, and the validity of that act was again affirmed. Tullis v. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co., 175 U. S. 348, 352, 44 L. Ed. 192, reaffirmed in St. Louis Merchants', etc., R. Co. v. Callahan, 194 U. S. 628, 48 L. Ed. 1157.

A bridge carpenter employed by a railroad and engaged at the time the accident occurred, not in building a bridge but in loading timber on a car for transportation over the line of defendant's road, is an employee of the company while so engaged, within the meaning of § 93, ch. 23, 1 Kan. Gen. Stat. 1889, p. 415. "Every railroad company organized or doing business in this state shall be liable for all damages done to any employee of such company in consequence of any negligence of its agents, or by any mismanagement of its engineers or other employees to any persons sustaining such damage." "The mere fact that the plaintiff's regular employment was as a bridge carpenter does not affect the case, nor does it matter that the road was newly constructed, nor whether it was in regular operation or not. The injury happened to the plaintiff while he was engaged in labor directly connected with the operation of the road, and the statute applies even though it should be given the construction counsel places on it." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Pontius, 157 U. S. 209, 210, 39 L. Ed. 675.

88. A brakeman brought an action against a railroad company for personal injuries sustained by falling from a car. A statute regulating the liability of ships for injuries to persons or property does not supersede the fellow-servant doctrine.[90]

IV. Actions.

A. What Law Governs.—In an action for injuries to a servant resulting from negligence of a coemployee the application of the fellow-servant doctrine depends upon the law of the place where the injury occurred or cause of action arose and not on the lex fori unless such law is in conflict with the public policy of the latter state.[91] board, which increased the danger and contributed to his fall. It was held that by the statute of Texas if there was negligence, the fact that it was the negligence of a fellow servant was not a defense. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Behymer, 189 U. S. 468, 47 L. Ed. 905.

It was the special duty of the foreman of a bridge gang to see that the track was clear for an approaching train, although it was also the duty of a man using tools when he got through with them to put them out of the way where a train would not strike them, and to see that the track was clear. A member of a bridge gang repairing a bridge was injured by being hit by a spike maul which had been left on the track through the negligence of the foreman and which was struck by the train and hurled with great force against the injured workman. It was held that the neglect of the foreman to perform such special duty is under the statute of Texas that of a vice principal and not a fellow servant. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Carlin, 189 U. S. 354, 47 L. Ed. 849.

89. A statute which provides that a bell or whistle shall be placed on every locomotive engine, and shall be rung or sounded by the engineman or fireman sixty rods from any highway crossing, and until the highway is reached, and that "the corporation owning the railroad shall be liable to any person injured for all damages sustained" by reason of neglect so to do, does not make the corporation liable for an injury caused by negligence of the fireman in this respect, to a fellow servant. "It does not supersede the general rule of law which exempts the corporation from liability to its own servants for the fault of their fellow servants." Randall v Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 109 U. S. 478, 485, 27 L. Ed. 1003.

93. Contributory negligence.—If the servant of a railroad company who has knowledge of defects in machinery gives notice thereof to the proper officer, and is promised that they shall be remedied, his subsequent use of it, in the well-grounded belief that it will be put in proper condition within a reasonable time, does not necessarily, or as matter of law, make him guilty of contributory negligence. It is a question for the jury whether, in relying upon such promise, and using the machinery after he knew its defective or insufficient condition, he was in the exercise of due care. The burden of proof, in such a case, is upon the company to show contributory negligence. Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612.

Adoption by vote of county, etc.—In part of the states the question whether the common-law rule or a state fence law shall prevail is determined by the vote of the county or other subdivision gence; and it is a question of fact for a jury, whether the circumstances exist which create such a duty.[3] This principle has been recognized and applied in cases of collisions at crossings of railroads and public highways;[4] and in other cases than those of the actual coincidence, at crossings, of public highways,[5] as, for instance, where the proprietor or occupier of land makes an excavation on his own land but adjoining a public highway, rendering the way unsafe to those who use it with ordinary care,[6] and of a railroad failing to fence its track within the limits of a city or a public park.[7] These cases all rest on the common-law rule that when there are different public easements to be enjoyed by two parties at the same time and in the same place, each must use his privilege with due care, so as not to injure the other.[8] As the ground of liability in these cases is that of a public nuisance, causing special injury, the rule, of course, does not apply where the structure complained of on the defendant's property, and the mode of its use, are authorized by law.[9]

A fence between public highways or grounds, such as a park, and a dangerous place serves, at least, as notice and signal of danger, if not as an obstacle and a prevention. For young children, such an impediment to straying might prove of value and importance in obtaining the security of their persons. Hayes v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 111 U. S. 228, 239, 28 L. 6. The proprietor and occupier of land making an excavation on his own land, but adjoining a public highway, rendering the way unsafe to those who use it with ordinary care, is guilty of negligence if he omit to provide a fence, barrier or railing requisite to make the way itself safe and convenient; and guilty of a public nuisance, even though the danger consisted in the risk of accidentally deviating from the road, and liable to an action for damages to one injured by reason thereof; for the danger thus created may reasonably deter prudent persons from using the way, and thus the full enjoyment of it by the public is, in effect, as much impeded as in the case of an ordinary nuisance to a highway. This doctrine has always been recognized in England, and it has also been generally adopted in this country. Hayes v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. Ed. 410.

"The enforcement of this rule in regard to excavations made by proprietors of lots adjacent to streets and public grounds in cities and towns, in the prosecution of building enterprises, and in the construction of permanent areas for cellar ways, is universally recognized as an obvious and salutary exercise of the common police powers of municipal government; and the omission to provide barriers and signals, prescribed by ordinance in such cases for the safety of individuals in the use of thoroughfares, is a failure of duty, charged with all the consequences of negligence, including that of liability for personal injuries of which it is the responsible cause. The true test is, as said by Hoar, J., in Alger v. City of Lowell, 3 Allen 402, 'not whether the dangerous place is outside of the way, or whether some small slip of ground not included in the way must be traversed in reaching the danger, but whether there is such a risk of a traveler, using ordinary care, in passing along the street, being thrown or falling into the dangerous place, that a railing is requisite to make the way itself safe and convenient.'" edge of the existence of this slack pit and its dangerous condition. The slack pit had no fence around it, nor was it guarded in any way, although a statute of Colorado required it to be fenced in such manner as to prevent loose cattle or horses from having access to it. The plaintiff, a lad about twelve years of age, who had no knowledge of the slack pit, being frightened by employees of the company, ran along a narrow uneven foot path extending from the coal mine to the depot and close to the slack pit, and in attempting to pass some persons on the bank near the edge of the pit, fell into the burning slack, and was badly burned. Suit was brought against the railway company to recover damages for the injuries thus sustained. It was held that the failure of the company to put a fence around the slack pit as required by the statute of Colorado was negligence and the plaintiff could recover for personal injuries sustained by him by reason thereof. I. Definition, Nature and Purpose.

A ferry in a strict technical sense is a continuation of the highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other, and is for transportation of passengers or of travelers with their teams and vehicles and such other property as they may carry or have with them.[1]

A ferry which is designed for the transportation of railroad cars only is unlike an ordinary ferry for the transportation across a river of persons, animals and freight, at intervals more or less regular, for fare or toll.[2]

Ancient ferries are ferries by prescription or a presumed grant.[3]

Nature of Franchise.—See post, "Nature and Extent of Franchise or Right," II, E.

II. Establishment, Maintenance and Operation.

A. Right of Individual to Establish.—No individual without a license can establish a ferry for general travel,[4] for it is a well-settled principle of common law that no man may set up a ferry for all passengers, without prescription, time out of mind, or a charter from the king.[5] He may make a ferry for his own use, or the use of his family, but not for the common use of all the king's subjects passing that way, because it doth in consequence tend to a common charge, and is become a thing of public interest and use;[6] and every man for his passage pays a toll, which is a common charge.[7] Every ferry ought to be under a public regulation,[8] viz, that it give attendance at due times, keep a boat in due order, and take but reasonable toll; for if the owner fail in these he is finable.[9]

Indictment for Neglect to Operate Ferry.—The owner of a ferry franchise is indictable for neglect to operate the ferry.[10]

B. Power to Establish or Grant Franchise and Mode of Exercise—1. In General.—The power of the states to regulate matters of internal police includes the establishment of ferries, entirely within the state.[11]

Riparian proprietor.—So if one owns the soil and landing places on both banks of a stream, he cannot use them for the purposes of a public ferry, except upon such terms and conditions as the body politic may from time to time impose; and this because the common good requires that all public ways shall be under the control of the public authorities. This privilege or prerogative of the king, who in this connection only represents and gives another name to the body politic, is not primarily for his profit, but for the protection of the people and the promotion of the general welfare. Ferry Not Extending across River.—See post, "Nature and Extent of Franchise or Right," II, E.

2. EXCLUSIVE FRANCHISE.—At common law the exclusive franchise to operate a ferry within designated limits might be conferred upon a particular person or persons.[12]

The legislature has the power to license ferries, and so to regulate them, that no rival ferries can be established within certain fixed distances.[13]

The United States have not in any manner attempted to interfere with the power of a state to grant exclusive ferry privileges across public waters between places within its own jurisdiction.[14]

Municipal Corporations.—If the legislature has aliened to a municipal corporation its whole power to establish and regulate ferries within the limits of the latter, the municipal body, in respect to this legislative or public trust, represents the former, or sovereign power, and may make grants of ferry rights in as ample a manner as the legislature;[15] but where the simple power to establish and regulate ferries within the corporate limits is conferred upon a municipal corporation, the corporation itself does not possess an exclusive power, and therefore cannot grant exclusive ferry rights to others.[16]

Power of Courts.—The power of a court to grant exclusive ferry privileges depends upon the laws of the particular states.[17]

Construction of Grants.—Exclusive rights to ferry franchises will never be presumed. Such right must be clearly expressed or necessarily implied.[18] In the absence of an express prohibition in the grant of a ferry franchise against the creation of rival ferries, or the construction of bridges, the legislature may grant rival ferry franchises or authorize the construction of free or toll bridges near an existing ferry, although the effect of so doing impairs or destroys the value of the existing franchises.[19]

17. Inferior courts of Georgia.—The legislature of Georgia has not conferred on the inferior courts of its several counties the power of contracting away the right of the state to establish such ferries in a particular locality as the everchanging wants of the public should in the progress of time require. It gave these courts the right to establish ferries but not to tie the hands of the public in respect to its future necessities. The right to establish one ferry and fix its rate of toll does not imply a power to bind the state or its instrumentalities not to establish another in case of necessity. Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. In 1838, the legislature of the territory of Iowa authorized Fanning, his heirs and assigns, to establish and keep a ferry across the Mississippi river, at the town of Dubuque, for the term of twenty

3. Delegation of Power by Legislature.—The delegation of power to license ferries to subordinate or inferior bodies does not deprive the legislature of the power of licensing ferries by direct legislation.[20]

4. Mode of Exercise.—City Council.—If a city council has the power to grant a ferry franchise it is not necessary that the council act by an ordinance in making such grant, but a contract made by the mayor under the sanction of the council is a valid exercise of the power.[21]

C. Persons to Whom Franchise Grantable.—Under the laws of Kentucky a ferry franchise is grantable only to riparian owners.[22]

D. Construction of Grant.—Nothing Passes by Implication.—In the grant of a ferry franchise by the sovereign power, the rule of construction is, that if the meaning of the words be doubtful, they shall be taken most strongly against the grantee and for the government, and therefore should not be extended by implication beyond the natural and obvious meaning of the words; and if these do not support the claim, it must fall.[23]

Interpretation Giving Grant Effect Adopted.—If the grant admits of two interpretations, one of which is more extended, and the other more restricted, so that a choice is fairly open, and either may be adopted without any violation of the apparent objects of the grant, if, in such case, one interpretation would render the grant inoperative, and the other would give it force and effect, the latter, if within a reasonable construction of the terms employed, should be adopted.[24]

Grant as a Contract.—The grant of a ferry franchise as a rule constitutes a contract between the state and the grantee, which is within the protection of the provision of the federal constitution prohibiting the states from passing any years; and enacted further, that no court or board of county commissioners should authorize any person to keep a ferry within the limits of the town of Dubuque. In 1840, Fanning was authorized to keep a horse ferry boat instead of a steamboat. In 1847, the general assembly of the state of Iowa passed an act to incorporate the city of Dubuque, the fifteenth section of which enacted that the "city council shall have power to license and establish ferries across the Mississippi river, from said city to the opposite shore, and to fix the rates of the same." In 1851, the mayor of Dubuque, acting by the authority of the city council, granted a license to Gregoire (whose agent Bogg was) to keep a ferry for six years from the 1st of April, 1852, upon certain payments and conditions. The right granted to Fanning was not exclusive of such a license as this. The prohibition to license another ferry did not extend to the legislature, nor to the city council, to whom the legislature had delegated its power. Nor was it necessary for the city council to act by an ordinance in the case, corporations can make contracts through their agents without the formalities which the old rules of law required. 24. Mills v. St. Clair County, 8 How. 569, 581, 12 L. Ed. 1201.

In the year 1819, the legislature of Illinois authorized Samuel Wiggins, his heirs and assigns, to establish a ferry on the east bank of the River Mississippi, near the town of Illinois, and to run the same from lands "that may belong to him," provided the ferry should be put into actual operation within eighteen months. At this time he had no land, but within the eighteen months acquired an interest in a tract of one hundred acres. In 1821, another act was passed, authorizing him to remove the ferry "on any land that may belong to him" on the said Mississippi River, under the same privileges as were prescribed by the former act. The words of this act, "on any land that may belong to him," must be construed to apply to the lands which then belonged to him, and not to such as he obtained after the passage of the act, viz, in 1822. Mills v. St. Clair County, 8 How. 569, 12 L. Ed. 1201.

law impairing the obligation of contracts.[25] The grant of a ferry franchise to a municipality is not within the protection of such constitutional provision.[26] As to exclusiveness of franchise, see ante, "Exclusive Franchise," II, B, 2.

E. Nature and Extent of Franchise or Right.—A ferry franchise is property entitled to the protection of the law. The privilege of establishing a ferry and taking tolls for the use of the same is a franchise, and belongs to the class of estates called incorporeal hereditaments;[27] and an estate in such a franchise, and an estate in land, rest upon the same principle,[28] being equally grants of a right or privilege for an adequate consideration.[29]

Extent.—At Common Law.—The franchise of a ferry extends beyond the landing places.[30]

A ferry is in respect of the landing place, and not of the water. The water may be to one and the ferry to another.[31]

A license to establish a ferry which does not extend across the river may be less valuable for that reason, but not less valid as far as it goes.[32]

Interstate Ferries.—See the title INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

F. Infringement of or Interference with Franchise or Right—1. WHAT CONSTITUTES.—A general act forbidding county courts to license additional ferries is not infringed by a subsequent act giving special right to a single county court to establish a particular ferry. No promise made by the legislature by the first act is broken by the second.[33] An act licensing a ferry and forbidding any

In Fanning v. Gregorie, "the arguments on file show that this objection was pressed with learning and ability. In the opinion delivered, the court seems to have assumed the validity of such a license, without in terms adverting to the question. Another question was fully discussed and expressly decided. This point does not appear in the report of the case." Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black 603, 630, 17 L. Ed. 191.

court or board of county commissioners to authorize any person to keep additional ferries within the limits of a town is not infringed by a subsequent act incorporating the town into a city and empowering the city council to license and establish ferries.[34]

Rights of commerce give no authority to their possessor to invade the ferry franchise of another without authority from the holder. The vitality of such a

It was provided by an act of the general assembly of Virginia, Acts 1839-1840, p. 58, ch. 72 "that it shall not be lawful for the court of any county to grant leave to establish a ferry over any watercourses within one-half mile, in a direct line, of any other ferry legally established over the same watercourse." A county court under a special law, passed in 1894, authorizing it to do so, established a ferry within less than half a mile of one established by the plaintiff under a prior license, granted under the general law of 1840. The contention of the plaintiff was that under the laws of Virginia, the license granted to him to establish a ferry created a contract between him and the state to the effect that no other ferry should be established within half a mile, and that the special act of 1894 and the proceedings of the court thereunder impaired the obligation of that contract. It was held that the only effect of the act of 1840, while in force, was to tie the hands of the county court. It operated in no manner as a restraint upon the legislature or as a contract upon its part that the state would not act whenever in its judgment it perceived the necessity for an additional ferry. The fact that in this case the special authority was given to the county court is immaterial. Williams v. Wingo, 177 U. S. 601, 603, 44 L. Ed. 905.

In Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co. v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 138 U. S. 287, 34 L. Ed. 967, "this very statute of Virginia of 1840 was under consideration, and it was said (p. 292): 'Here the prohibition of the act of 1840 was only upon the county courts, and that in no way affected the legislative power of the state.' The case of The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51, 18 L. Ed. 137 is not inconsistent." Williams v. Wingo, 177 U. S. 601, 603, 44 L. Ed. 905.

A ferry connecting Wheeling with Wheeling Island was established and maintained for many years, prior to the enactment of a general law by the state of Virginia, prohibiting county courts from licensing other ferries within a half mile in a direct line from an established ferry. In 1847 the defendant bridge company purchased a ferry and its rights. It was held that the general law of Virginia did not grant a perpetual monopoly or exclusive ferry franchise so as to prevent the establishment of rival ferries within the prohibited distance after the repeal of such general law; such law had in it nothing in the nature of a contract but was a gratuitous proceeding on the part of the legislature, by which a certain benefit was conferred upon existing ferries, but not accompanied by any condition that made the act take the character of a contract; and it was further held that the mere purchase by the defendant bridge company of the existing ferry rights and privileges added nothing to them and that the transfer from vendor to vendee gave them no additional force or validity. In Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. 524, 14 L. Ed. 1043, the plaintiff was by an act of the Iowa territorial legislature given authority to establish a ferry across the Mississippi River at the then town of Dubuque, and the act also provided that no court or board of county commissioners should authorize any other person to keep a ferry within the limits of the town. The city of Dubuque was thereafter incorporated, and under its general corporate powers entered into a contract with the defendant to run a steam ferryboat across the river. The plaintiff thereupon filed a bill to restrain the defendant from so doing. It was held that the first grant was not exclusive and the bill could not be maintained. Williams v. Wingo, 177 U. S. 601, 603, 44 L. Ed. 905.

In Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. 524, 533, 14 L. Ed. 1043, the court said: "Although the county court and county commissioners were prohibited from granting another license to Dubuque, yet this prohibition did not apply to the legislature: and as it had the power to authorize another ferry, the general authority to the council to 'license and establish ferries across the Mississippi River at the city,' enabled the corporation, in the exercise of its discretion, to grant a license, as the legislature might have done. * * * The restriction on the commissioners of the county does not apply, in terms, to the city council; and the court think it cannot be made to apply by implication." This case was cited with approval in Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co. v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 138 U. S. 287, 34 L. Ed. 967; and the above extract from the opinion quoted in Williams v. Wingo, 177 U. S. 601, 603, 44 L. Ed. 905. See, also, St. Clair County v. Interstate, etc., Transfer Co., 192 U. S. 454, 459, 48 L. Ed. 518.

franchise lies in its exclusiveness. The moment the right becomes common the franchise ceases to exist.[35]

Ferry Designed for Transportation of Railroad Cars.—A ferry franchise is not interfered with by a ferry which is designed for the transportation of railroad cars only.[36]

2. REMEDIES—a. Action for Damages.—The act of keeping a public ferry without license being illegal, when done "without lawful authority or warrant," is a nuisance, and case lies for damages consequent upon it, but the action does not lie, if the act, though unlawful, was not an interference with the right of the other, and within the limits of his prescription.[37]

b. Injunction.—Injunction lies to restrain continuous infringement or encroachment upon a ferry franchise.[38] An injunction to protect the exclusive privilege to a ferry does not conflict or interfere with the right of a boat to carry passengers or goods in the ordinary prosecution of commerce without the regularity or purpose of ferry trips; that remedy applies only to one which is run openly and avowedly as a ferry boat.[39]

G. Right to Collect Toll.—See ante, "Right of Individual to Establish," II, A.

H. Termination of Right.—Eminent Domain.—A ferry franchise is subject to the right of eminent domain in the state and may be condemned and taken on just compensation being made therefor.[40]

Abandonment and Assertion of Adverse Rights or User.—An exclusive right to maintain a ferry may be lost by abandonment, and the assertion of an adverse right or user by another person,[41] or by surrender.[42]

Grant of Bridge Franchise in Lieu of Ferry Right.—The authority of a legislature may probably supersede such a ferry as is public, and across a great public highway of a navigable river, by allowing a bridge over the same place.[43]

From the year 1681 to 1783, a franchise in the ferry over the Connecticut River belonged to the town of Hartford, situated on the west bank of the river. In 1783, the legislature incorporated the town of East Hartford, and granted to it one-half of the ferry during the pleasure of the general assembly. In 1802, a company was incorporated to build a bridge

Franchise Exercised by Municipality.—A ferry privilege to be exercised by a town as a mere public license may be discontinued by the legislature at any time.[44]

I. Laws Applicable, Regulation and Control.—The common law as to ferries was adopted and prevails in most of the states of the United States.[45]

Regulation and Control.—Ferries are subject to public regulation.[46] A state may regulate ferries under its police powers.[47]

Municipality.—A state may delegate its power to regulate ferries to a municipal corporation.[48]

J. Taxation or Imposition of License Fee.—A state has power to impose a license fee, either directly or through one of its municipal corporations, upon ferry keepers in the state.[49] When a state expressly grants to an incorporated city, the power "to license, tax and regulate ferries," the latter may impose a license tax on the keeper of ferries.[50] across the river, which, being erected, was injured and rebuilt in 1818, when the legislature resolved that the ferry should be discontinued. This act, discontinuing the ferry, is not inconsistent with that part of the constitution of the United States which forbids the states from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. There was no contract between the state and the town of East Hartford, by which the latter could claim a permanent right to the ferry. The nature of the subject matter of the grant, and the character of the parties to it, both show that it is not such a contract as is beyond the interference of the legislature. Besides, the town of East Hartford only held the ferry right during the pleasure of the general assembly, and in 1818 the latter expressed its pleasure that the ferry should cease. East Hartford v. Hartford Bridge Co., 10 How. 511, 13 L. Ed. 518.

In Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. Ed. 773, it was held, upon the facts of that case, that the ferry right which was owned by the grantee of a ferry franchise, was extinguished by the building of a bridge where the ferry had formerly been; the ferry, with all its privileges, was then at an end forever, and a compensation in money given in lieu of it.

2. File.—The act of congress of May, 1896, terminating the terms of office of all commissioners of the circuit courts and directing them to deposit all the records and official papers in the office of the circuit courts by which they were appointed, did not entitle clerks of the circuit courts to fees for filing the various papers, as no good purpose would have been subserved by the formal filing of these dockets and writings, which, in the ordinary course, never would have been forwarded to the clerk for filing, and, hence, the construction which attributes to the word "deposit," as used in the statute, a meaning synonymous with "filing," is strained. Final decision.—By the use of the word final in the act of June 12th, 1858, which declares that the 11th section of the general pre-emption law of 1841 shall "be so amended that appeals from the decision of the district officers, in cases of contest between different settlers for the right of pre-emption, shall hereafter be decided by the commissioner of the general land office, whose decision shall be final, unless appeal therefrom be taken to the secretary of the interior," it seems that nothing more was intended than to say that, with the single exception of an appeal to his superior, the secretary of the interior, his decision should exclude further inquiry in that department. But there does not appear, in the language used in this connection, any intention to give to the final decision of the department of the interior, to which the control of the land system of the government had been transferred, any more conclusive effect than what belonged to it without its aid. Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72, 82, 83, 20 L. Ed. 485. See the title PUBLIC LANDS.

"The use of the term 'final decisions' in § 1911 does not enlarge the scope of the jurisdiction of this court. It is only a substitute for the words 'final judgments and decrees' in § 702 and means the same thing." Harrington v. Holler, 111 U. S. 796, 28 L. Ed. 602. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 535.

Final disposition.—The words "final disposition" in § 2 of the act of June 25th, 1868, allowing the court of claims "at any time while any suit or claim is pending before or on appeal from the said court, or within two years next after the final disposition of any such suit or claim, on motion on behalf of the United States, to grant a new trial in any such suit or claim," mean the final determination of the suit on appeal (if an appeal is taken), or if none is taken, then its final determination in the court of claims. Ex parte Russell, 13 Wall. 664, 20 L. Ed. 632.

Final hearing.—The act of congress of 1867 authorizes the petition for removal from a state court to United States circuit court to be filed "at any time before the final hearing or trial of the suit." The hearing or trial here referred to, is the examination of the facts in issue. Hearing applies to suits in chancery and trials to actions at law. Vannevar v. Bryant, 21 Wall. 41, 43, 22 L. Ed. 476.

The act of March 2d, 1867, which allows removal of a suit from a state court in o the circuit court of the United States, in certain cases specified by it, "at any time before the final hearing or trial of the suit" is not of the same import as the language of the act of July 27th, 1866, on the same general subject—"at any time before the trial or final hearing." On the contrary, the word final in the first-mentioned act, must be taken to apply to the word "trial" as well as to the word "hearing." Accordingly, although a removal is made after a trial on merits, a verdict, a motion for a new trial made and refused, and a judgment on the verdict, yet it having been so made in a state where by statute the party could still demand, as of right, a second trial, such first trial is not a "final trial within the meaning of the act of congress; the party seeking to remove the case having demanded and having got leave to have a second trial under the said statute of the state. Insurance Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall. 214, 22 L. Ed. 68; Fisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 466, 35 L. Ed. 1079. See the title REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

1. Final judgments and decrees.—A final condemnation in an inferior court of admiralty, where a right of appeal exists, and has been claimed, is not a definitive condemnation, within the meaning of the 4th article of the convention with France, signed September 30th, 1800, the court saying: "A decree or sentence may be interlocutory or final, in the court which pronounces it, and receives its appellation from its determining the power of that particular court over the subject to which it applies, or being only an intermediate order, subject to the future control of the same court. The last decree of an inferior court is final, in relation to the power of that court, but not in relation to the property itself, unless it be acquiesced under." On any other construction, the word definitive would be rendered useless and inoperative. The Peggy, 1 Cranch 103, 108, 2 L. Ed. 49.

In § 989 of the Revised Statutes providing that when recovery is had against a collector or other officer of revenue for any act done by him, or for the recovery of money exacted or paid to him and by him paid into the treasury, in the performance of his official duty, and the court certifies that there was probable cause for the act done, or that he acted under the direction of the secretary of the treasury or other proper officer of the government, no excution shall issue against him but the amount so recovered shall upon final judgment, be provided for and paid out of the proper appropriation of the treasury, the final judgment referred to is the judgment as it stands after its affirmance by the supreme court, and after the court below has rendered such judgment as the mandate of the supreme court requires. Schell v. Cochran, 107 U. S. 625, 628, 27 L. Ed. 543.

2. Fine.—"A fine was in the form of a judgment of a court of record, at first in an actual, and afterwards in a fictitious suit by the conusee against the conusors to recover possession of the land; and derived its very name from its putting an end to that suit and to all other controversies concerning the same matter." IV. Enforcement.

A. Mode of Enforcement.—The mode in which fine shall be enforced, whether at the suit of a private party, or at the suit of the public, is merely a matter of legislative discretion.[4]

B. Action of Debt.—Almost every fine under a penal statute may be recovered by an action of debt, as well as by information.[5]

C. By Execution.—An execution may be ordered, by court, to issue against the property of a defendant upon whom a fine has been imposed.[6]

D. By Imprisonment—1. DISCRETION OF COURT.—When a party is convicted of an offense, and sentenced to pay a fine, it is within the discretion of the court to order his imprisonment until the fine shall be paid.[7]

2. CAPIAS PRO FINE.—At common law, whenever a fine and imprisonment constitute a part of the judgment upon a conviction in a criminal case, the judgment, if the party is in court, is, that he be committed to jail in execution of the sentence, and until the fine is paid. If he is not then in court, a special writ of capais pro fine issues against him; the exigency of which is, that his body be taken and committed to jail, until the fine is paid.[8]

3. CAPIAS AD SATISFACIENDUM.—Although the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum more commonly applies to civil suits, yet in some states the writ may be ordered to issue for the recovery of fines as in cases where similar writs are issued on judgments obtained in personal suits.[9] And where the officer makes a return on the writ, that he has taken the body of the party fined, he must either acknowledge in open court the receipt of the fine, or produce the body of the party to the court.[10]

4. Mode of enforcement is in the discretion of legislature.—Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 523, 29 L. Ed. 463.

The acts of congress of 27th of February and 3d of March, 1801, concerning the District of Columbia, have not changed the laws of Maryland and Virginia, adopted by congress as the laws of that district, any further than the change of jurisdiction rendered a change of laws necessary, and fines, arising from a breach of those laws, are to be sued for and recovered in the same manner as before the change of jurisdiction, mutatis nutandis. United States v. Simms, 1 Cranch 252, 2 L. Ed. 98.

5. Enforcement by action of debt.—Adams v. Woods, 2 Cranch 336, 341, 2 L. Ed. 297. See the title DEBT, THE ACTION OF, vol. 5, p. 205.

6. Execution against property of defendant.—Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 574, 8 L. Ed. 786; Levy Court v. Ringgold, 5 Pet. 451, 8 L. Ed. 188. See the title EXECUTIONS, ante, p. 84.

The "act concerning the District of Columbia," passed 3d of March, 1801, does not require the marshal to apply to the district attorney for executions, in all cases of fines levied by the circuit court, and make him liable for neglecting to do so, if no execution issued. Levy Court v. Ringgold, 5 Pet. 451, 8 L. Ed. 188.

7. Enforcement by imprisonment.—Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. Ed. 877; Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 574, 8 L. Ed. 786.

In another section of the act of Maryland of the 20th of April, 1777 (§ 4), "there is a proviso, that nothing therein contained shall be construed to extend to prevent the several courts, as they might heretofore lawfully do, from committing any person from the nonpayment of any fine, if they shall deem it expedient so to do. This proviso completely establishes the antecedent practice in Maryland to have been like that at the common law, to commit the offender for payment of the fine, and leaves it at the discretion of the court to order it in any future case. By necessary implication, it affirms that without such order, the offender is not detainable in jail for the fine." Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 575, 8 L. Ed. 786.

"Where the party convicted is already in custody, when the sentence is passed, the party is to be deemed in custody until the fine is paid, without any award of a commitment in the sentence, or the issuing of any capias ad satisfaciendum." Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 578, 8 L. Ed. 786.

8. Capias pro fine.—Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 573, 8 L. Ed. 786.

9. Writ of capias ad satisfaciendum may issue for fines.—Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 574, 8 L. Ed. 786. See the title EXECUTION AGAINST THE BODY AND ARREST IN CIVIL CASES, ante, p. 80.

V. Payment and Satisfaction.

A. Effect of Payment.—When a court has imposed fine and imprisonment, where the statute only confers power to punish by fine or imprisonment, and the fine has been paid, it cannot, even during the same term, modify the judgment by imposing imprisonment instead of the former sentence.[11]

B. Under Bankrupt Act.—A fine is not a debt, so that a person upon whom one has been imposed is discharged from payment under the bankrupt act.[12]

VI. Disposition of Fines.

What disposition shall be made of fines is a matter of legislative discretion,[13] and it is generally regulated by statute.[14] And it may be provided that the fine or a share thereof be given to the informer,[15] or the person aggrieved by the act for which the fine was imposed.[16]

13. Disposition of fines a matter of legislative discretion.—Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 523, 29 L. Ed. 463; United States v. Murphy, 16 Pet. 203, 10 L. Ed. 937.

The fine imposed on the person who shall be convicted of the offense of stealing on the high seas, on board a vessel of the United States, is part of the punishment, in furtherance of public justice; rather than an indemnity or compensation to the owner. From the nature of an indictment and the sentence thereon, the government alone has the right to control the whole proceedings, and execution of the sentence; even after verdict, the government may not choose to bring the party up for sentence; and if sentence is pronounced, and the fine is imposed, the owner has no authority to interfere in the collection of it, any more than the informer or prosecutor; and the fine, therefore, must be deemed receivable by the government, and the government alone. United States v. Murphy, 16 Pet. 203, 10 L. Ed. 937.

The levy court of Washington county are not entitled to one-half of all the fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed by the circuit court in cases of common law, and under the acts of congress, as well as the acts of assembly of Maryland, adopted by congress as the law of the District of Columbia. Levy Court v. Ringgold, 5 Pet. 451, 8 L. Ed. 188.

14. Disposition of fine regulated by statute.—United States v. Simms, 1 Cranch 252, 258, 2 L. Ed. 98; United States v. Connor, 138 U. S. 61, 65, 34 L. Ed. 860.

15. Fine given to informer.—United States v. Connor, 138 U. S. 61, 65, 34 L. Ed. 860. See, generally, the titles PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES; REVENUE LAWS.

Informer cannot recover fine after repeal of act allowing him the fine.—The act of July 13, 1866 (14 Stat. 145, c. 184), provided that an informer was entitled to a share of the fine imposed for a violation of the internal revenue laws. This act was repealed by another in 1872. Where an action was brought under the former act for such a share of a fine, it was held that if the amount had not been fixed by judgment or compromise or by its having been paid before the passage of the act of 1872, such claim could not be recovered in after the date of the last act. United States v. Connor, 138 U. S. 61, 65, 34 L. Ed. 860.

16. Given to person aggrieved.—United States v. Simms, 1 Cranch 252, 258, 2 L. Ed. 98.

"By the laws of Virginia, an officer is liable to a heavy fine, for not returning an execution which came to his hands to be served, or for retaining in his hands money levied on such execution. This goes to the party injured, and on his motion, the judgment for the fine is to be rendered. It would be going a great way, to construe this act of congress as making such a fine recoverable for the use of the United States; and yet this would be the consequence of construing it to extend to fines and penalties accruing by law, not to government, but to individuals." United States v. Simms, 1 Cranch 252, 258, 2 L. Ed. 98.

Liability by Common Law.—"At common law, every man appears to have been obliged, by the custom of the realm, to keep his fire safe so that it should not injure his neighbor; and to have been liable to an action if a fire, lighted in his own house, or upon the land, by the act of himself, or of his servants or guests, burned the house or property of his neighbor, unless its spreading to his neighbor's property was caused by a violent tempest or other inevitable accident which he could not have foreseen."[1]

4. Liability of railroads.—The earliest statute which declares railroad corporations to be absolutely responsible, independently of negligence, for damages by fire communicated from their locomotive engines to property of others, was passed in Massachusetts in 1840, soon after such engines had become common. In England, at the time of the passage of that statute, it was undetermined whether a railroad corporation, without negligence, was liable to a civil action, as at common law, for damages to property of others by fire from its locomotive engines; and the result that it was not so liable was subsequently reached after some conflict of judicial opinion, and only when the acts of Parliament had expressly authorized the corporation to use locomotive engines upon its railroad, and had not declared it to be responsible for such damages. From the time of the passage of the Massachusetts statute of 1840 to the present time but, in compensation, are given an insurable interest in any building along the route.[5] Such statutes are remedial in character,[6] and are not unconstitutional.[7]

Degree of Care.—The determination of an issue, as to whether the destruction of property by fire communicated by a locomotive was the result of negligence on the part of a railroad company, depends upon the facts shown as to whether or not it used such caution and diligence as the circumstances of the the validity of that and similar statutes has been constantly upheld in the courts of every state of the Union in which the question has arisen. In the federal supreme court, the constitutionality of such a statute has never been directly drawn into judgment. But it appears to have been assumed in Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 472, 23 L. Ed. 356, and it rests upon principles often affirmed here. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 22, 41 L. Ed. 611. destructive element, which often escapes

"Fire, while necessary for many uses of civilized man, is a dangerous, volatile and in the form of sparks, capable of being wafted afar through the air, and of destroying any combustible property on which they fall; and which, when it has once gained headway, can hardly be arrested or controlled. Railroad corporations, in order the better to carry out the public object of their creation, the sure and prompt transportation of passengers and goods, have been authorized by statute to use locomotive engines propelled by steam generated by fires lighted upon those engines. It is within the authority of the legislature to make adequate provision for protecting the property of others against loss or injury by sparks from such engines. The right of the citizen not to have his property burned without compensation is no less to be regarded than the right of the corporation to set it on fire. To require the utmost care and diligence of the railroad corporations in taking precautions against the escape of fire from their engines might not afford sufficient protection to the owners of property in the neighborhood of the railroads. When both parties are equally faultless, the legislature may properly consider it to be just that the duty of insuring private property against loss or injury caused by the use of dangerous instruments should rest upon the railroad company, which employs the instruments and creates the peril for its own profit, rather than upon the owner of the property, who has no control over or interest in those instruments." St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 26, 41 L. Ed. 611.

The statute applies to an injury to such buildings and property which is caused by fire spreading from other buildings to which it was first communicated by the locomotive. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356.

The fact that the destroyed property is located near the line of the railroad does not deprive the owners of the protection of the statute, certainly if it is placed where it is under a license from the defendant. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 472, 23 L. Ed. 356.

Where the statute of a state provides, that, "when an injury is done to a building or other property by fires communicated by a locomotive engine of any railroad corporation, the said corporation shall be responsible in damages for such injury," and have an insurable interest in such property "along its route," held, that the phrase "along its route" means in proximity to the rails upon which the locomotive engines run; and that the corporation is liable for such an injury to buildings or other property along its route, whether they are outside of the lines of its roadway, or lawfully within those lines. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356. See, generally, the title RAILROADS.

5. The statute of Missouri of March 31, 1889, which makes the railroad company liable in damages for property so destroyed, gives it, for its protection against such damages, an insurable interest in the property in danger of destruction, and the right to obtain insurance thereon in its own behalf; and it may obtain insurance upon all such property generally, without specifying any particular property. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 26, 41 L. Ed. 611.

6. "The statute is not a penal one, imposing punishment for a violation of law; but it is purely remedial, making the party, doing a lawful act for its own profit, liable in damages to the innocent party injured thereby, and giving to that party the whole damages, measured by the injury suffered." St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 27, 41 L. Ed. 611.

A statute of Vermont making railroads liable for property destroyed by fire was resigned to be a remedial one, and it is to be liberally construed. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 472, 23 L. Ed. 356.

7. The statute of Missouri of March 31, 1887, by which every railroad corporation owning or operating a railroad in the state is made responsible in damages for property of any person injured or destroyed by fire communicated by its locomotive engines; and is declared to have an insurable interest in property along its route, and authorized to insure such property, for its protection against such damages; is not an arbitrary, unreasonable and unconstitutional exercise of legislative power, imposing an absolute and oner-case demanded or prudent men ordinarily exercise, and not upon the usual conduct of other companies in the vicinity.[8]

Proximate Cause.—A finding that negligence, or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury by fire is not warranted, unless it appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been forseen in the light of the attending circumstances.[9] Where there is no intermediate efficient cause, the original wrong must be considered as reaching to the effect, and proximate to it.[10]

Evidence.—Evidence is admissible which goes to show that a fire could not have been caused by a different instrument than the one alleged.[11]

Presumptions.—Negligence may be presumed when the evidence warrants such presumption.[12]

ous liability for the consequences of doing a lawful act, and of conducting a lawful business in a lawful and careful manner; nor does it violate the constitution of the United States, by depriving the railroad company of its property without due process of law, by denying to it the equal protection of the laws, and by impairing the obligation of the contract previously made between it and the state by its incorporation under general laws authorizing it to convey passengers and freight over its railroad by the use of locomotive engines. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 5, 41 L. Ed. 611. See, generally, the titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 4, p. 1; DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 5, p. 499.

8. Degree of care.—Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356. See, generally, the title NEGLIGENCE.

9. Proximate cause.—Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256. See, generally, the title NEGLIGENCE.

"These circumstances, in a case like the present, are the strength and direction of the wind, the combustible character of the elevator, its great height, and the proximity and combustible nature of the sawmill and the piles of lumber. , Most of these circumstances were ignored in the request for instruction to the jury. Yet it is obvious that the immediate and inseparable consequences of negligently firing the elevator would have been very different if the wind had been less, if the elevator had been a low building constructed of stone, if the season had been wet, or if the lumber and the mill had been less combustible. And the defendants might well have anticipated or regarded the probable consequences of their negligence as much more far reaching than would have been natural or probable in other circumstances. We do not say that even the natural and probable consequences of a wrongful act or omission are in all cases to be chargeable to the misfeasance or nonfeasance. They are not when there is a sufficient and independent cause operating between the wrong and the injury." Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 475, 24 L. Ed. 256.

10. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256.

"If a building be set on fire by negligence, and an adjoining building destroyed without any negligence of the occupants of the first, no one would doubt that the destruction of the second was due to the negligence that caused the burning of the first. Yet in truth, in a very legitimate sense, the immediate cause of the burning of the second was the burning of the first. The same might be said of the burning of the furniture in the first. Such refinements are too minute for rules of social conduct." Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 476, 24 L. Ed. 256.

Where a jury found, in substance, that the burning of a mill and some lumber was caused by the negligent burning of an elevator, and that it was the unavoidable consequence of that burning, it was in effect, a finding that there was no intervening and independent cause between the negligent conduct of the defendants and the injury to the plaintiff. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 476, 24 L. Ed. 256.

11. Evidence.—In an action against a railroad to recover the price of cotton which was destroyed while stored near its tracks, evidence of the surrounding circumstances and conditions, which a process of exclusion would have tended to establish, that the burning of the cotton could not have been caused other than by the locomotive in question would be clearly relevant. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 289, 47 L. Ed. 1057. See, generally, the title EVIDENCE, vol. 5, p. 1004.

12. Presumptions.—An instruction is correct which states "that evidence of a railroad company allowing combustible materials to accumulate upon its track and right of way which is liable to take fire from sparks escaping from passing engines and communicate it to adjacent property, is sufficient to warrant the jury in imputing negligence to the company." Eddy v. Lafayette, 163 U. S. 456, 466, 41 L. Ed. 225. See, generally, the titles INSTRUCTIONS; PRESUMPTIONS AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

An instruction is correct which states

Right to Destroy Property to Prevent Spread of Fires.—Either public officers or private persons may raze houses to prevent the spreading of a conflagration.[13] This right rests on public necessity, and no one is bound to compensate for or to contribute to the loss, unless the town or neighborhood is made liable by express statute.[14]

"that evidence showing that the fire originated from sparks of a passing engine is prima facie proof of negligence, and the burden shifts on the railway company to show that it was guilty of no negligence." Eddy v. Layafette, 163 U. S. 456, 466, 41 L. Ed. 225.

13. Right to destroy property to prevent spread of fire.—Ralli v. Tropp, 157 U. S. 386, 405, 39 L. Ed. 742.

"At the common law every one had the right to destroy real and personal property, in cases of actual necessity, to prevent the spreading of a fire, and there was no responsibility on the part of such destroyer, and no remedy for the owner." Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16, 18, 25 L. Ed. 980.

14. Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 386, 405, 39 L. Ed. 742.

"The putting out of fires which are in danger of spreading is for the benefit of the whole public, and for the protection of the property of all. The danger is so great and imminent that it is especially one of those cases in which the public safety must be preferred to private interests. Salus populi suprema lex. It is the public good, the general welfare, that justifies the destruction of neighboring buildings to prevent the spreading of a fire which as yet rages in one building only. The duty of protecting, so far as may be, all property within the state against destruction by fire, is a public and governmental duty, which rests upon the government of the state; and it does not cease to be a duty of that character because the state has delegated it to, or permitted it to be performed by, a municipal corporation. When entrusted by the legislature to a municipal corporation, a political division of the state, it is not for the peculiar benefit of that corporation or division, but for its benefit in common with the whole public. A fire department is established in a municipality, not merely for the protection of buildings and property within the municipality itself, but equally for the protection of buildings and property beyond its limits, to which a fire originating within those limits may be in danger of spreading. Moreover, the necessity and appropriateness of the course and measures to be taken to stay a conflagration must be promptly determined, in the first instance, by those charged with the performance of the duty at the time of the exigency; and often cannot be as accurately judged of long after the fact. The members of the fire department of a city, therefore, whether appointed by the municipal corporation or otherwise, are not mere agents or servants of the corporation, but are public officers charged with a public service; and for their acts or their negligence in the performance of this service no action lies against the corporation, unless expressly given by statute." Workman v. New York City, 179 U. S. 552, 586, 45 L. Ed. 314.

"In Bowditch v. Boston (1879), 101 U. S. 16, 25 L. Ed. 980, it was adjudged that no action would lie, either at common law or by statute, against the city of Boston to recover damages for the destruction of a building, blown up under a general order of the chief engineer of the city to prevent the spreading of a conflagration; that the action, not being maintainable to common law, could only be supported by an express statute; and that the statutes of Massachusetts, as construed by the highest court of the state, did not authorize such an action against the city, except for the destruction of a building by specific order of three firewards or engineers acting jointly. In support of the position that the action would not lie at common law, this court relied on the ancient rule, as stated by Coke, that 'for the commonwealth a man shall suffer damage; as, for saving of a city or town, a house shall be plucked down if the next be on fire; and a thing for the commonwealth every man may do without being liable to an action.'" Workman v. New York City, 179 U. S. 552, 584, 45 L. Ed. 314.

"The precise question whether a municipal corporation is liable to an action at law for injuries caused by negligence of members of its fire department has never been decided or considered by this court. But the principles affirmed and illustrated in the authorities already cited forbid the maintenance of a private action against a municipal corporation for injuries caused by the negligence of members of a fire department, while engaged in the performance of their official duties." Workman v. New York City, 179 U. S. 552, 585, 45 L. Ed. 314.

"The duty of the state to protect the property of all from destruction by fire covers vessels in its harbors, as well as buildings within its territory. The authority of the fire department and its members as to both kinds of property is derived from the municipal law, and not from the maritime law. Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 386, 419, 420, 39 L. Ed. 742. All the shipping, foreign and domestic, in the port, is under the same safeguards, and subject to the same risks. Prompt, decisive and unembarrassed action of the firemen is necessary to the protection of both buildings and vessels from the dangers of a conflagration. The necessity of allowing a municipal fireboat to proceed on her way to put out a fire affords a special reason for not allowing her, while so occupied, to be seized on a libel in rem. But all the reasons for not maintaining an action of this kind against the city in a court of common law apply with undiminished force to a libel against the city in personam in a court of admiralty." 1. Fireworks.—Where a clause in a policy provided that fireworks, among other things, should be specially written in the policy, it would seem that fireworks are not included under the name of fire crackers, and it has been held that evidence is rightfully refused to prove that fireworks constitute "an article in the line of a German jobber and importer." First.—The words in the act of March, 1875, providing in cases of diverse citizenship for removal of causes from state to federal courts, limiting the time within which the application for a removal must be made—"before or at the term at which said cause could be first tried, and before the trial thereof"—necessarily meant the

I. Fishery Distinguished from Oystery.

There is a distinction clearly held up, in many cases to be found in the books, between an oystery and a fishery, in the common use of the term. The one applying to the use of land under the water, which is peculiarly adapted to the growing of oysters, and to be used for that purpose, in the cultivation of oysters, as other lands are used for the purpose to which they are particularly adapted; whereas, a fishery, in common acceptation, has reference to the use of the water for floating fish; and this is a very obvious and natural distinction.[1]

II. Kinds of Fisheries.

A several fishery is the exclusive right to fish in one's own waters, or is derived therefrom by grant; a common of fishery is the right to fish in the waters of another.[2]

III. Rights and Property in Fish and Fisheries.

A. Property in Fish and Fisheries.—Fishing rights when legally acquired are rights of property, not mere privileges.[3] The right is a subject of private ownership, and when held by a good title is a vested right, entitled to public protection and legislative regulation and control.[4]

B. Source of Right.—The exclusive right of fishery has its source in the ownership of the bank of the stream.[5]

C. In Navigable Waters.—By the American Revolution the people of each state, in their sovereign character, acquired the absolute right to all their navigable waters, and the soil under them. The shores of navigable waters and the soil under them were not granted by the constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the states respectively.[6] And new states have the same first trial, whether it resulted in a verdict or not, and although the verdict and judgment may have been set aside; because the express requirement was that the application for removal must, in any event, be made before or at the term at which said cause could be first tried. Subject to the paramount right of navigation, the regulation of which in relation to foreign and interstate commerce has been granted to the United States, each state owns the beds of all tidewaters within its jurisdiction, and may appropriate rights of sovereignty and jurisdiction over this subject as the original ones.[7] But the public right of fishery in navigable waters is held by the people of the state in their sovereign character, as a public trust.[8] In England, the dominion and property in navigable waters is held by the king in his sovereign and trust character, for the common benefit of the people.[9] The people possess a public common of piscary, and may not, in general, without injury to their rights, be deprived thereof.[10] Since Magna Charta, it is doubtful whether the king or any particular subject can gain a proprietary right, exclusive of the common right of fishery in the general public.[11] The American colonists enjoyed in common the benefits derived from navigable waters.[12] Under the charters granted to the different proprietaries of the colonies, the rights of fishery in navigable waters passed to such proprietaries as one of the incidents of the powers of government, and were held by them in the same manner as the public waters of England were held by the crown.[13] In none of these charters was the right them, to be used by its citizens as a common for taking and cultivating fish, if navigation be not thereby obstructed. McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 248.

The soil below low-water mark in the Chesapeake Bay, within the boundaries of Maryland, belongs to the state, subject to any lawful grant of that soil by the state or the sovereign power which governed its territory before the Declaration of Independence. But this soil is held by the state not only subject to, but in some sense in trust for, the enjoyment of certain public rights, among which is the common liberty of taking fish, as well shell fish as floating fish. 12. In American colonies.—"In no one of the colonies has the soil under its navigable waters, and the rights of fishery for shell fish or floating fish, been severed by the letters patent from the powers of government. In all of them, from the time of the settlement to the present day, the previous habits and usages of the colonists have been respected, and they have been accustomed to enjoy in common, the benefits and advantages of the navigable waters, for the same purposes, and to the same extent, that they have been used and enjoyed, for centuries, in England." Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 367, 414, 10 L. Ed. 997.

13. In New York.—See Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 367, 10 L. Ed. 997.

In New Jersey.—The soil under the public navigable waters of East New Jersey belonged to the state and not to the proprietaries. Russell v. Jersey Co., 15 How. 426, 14 L. Ed. 757.

In Maryland.—"The appellants' contention is that the property in the soil under the river Potomac passed to Lord Baltimore and his grantees and that it passed, not as one of the regalia of the crown, or as a concomitant of government, but as an absolute proprietary interest, subject to every lawful public use, but not the less, on that account, a hereditament, and the subject of lawful ownership, and of the right of full and unqualified possession to fishery ever severed from the powers of government.[14]

D. In Nonnavigable Waters.—Fishing rights in large streams, though not navigable, may be regarded as public rights.[15] Persons owning the whole of the soil constituting the bed and banks of such streams are entitled to the whole use and profits of the water opposite their land as a fishery, subject to the implied condition that they shall so use their own right as not to injure the concomitant right of another riparian owner, and to such regulations as the legislature of the state shall prescribe.[16] Where such a proprietor owns the land on one side only of the stream, his right to the land and to the use of the water as a fishery extends only to the middle thread of the stream, at common law, and is subject to the same conditions and regulations as when the ownership includes the whole soil over which the water of the stream flows.[17]

E. In Lakes and Ponds.—"In England proper there are so few lakes and ponds of large size, and so many fresh water streams and rivers, that in speaking of interior or fresh waters it was natural to refer to the latter without mentioning the former."[18] As many features of the common law with regard to the rights of riparian owners were borrowed directly from the civil law, it would not be strange if the rule relating to lakes and ponds came from the same source. Under the civil law, if the proprietor owns both banks of the lake, he has the exclusive right of fishery therein, subject to legislative regulation.[19] "Where a lake is very long in comparison with its width, the method applied to rivers and streams would probably be most suitable for adjusting riparian rights in the lake bottom along its sides, and the use of converging lines would only be required at its two ends."[20]

F. In Waters of Hawaiian Islands.—The organic act of the Territory of Hawaii of April 30, 1890, repealing all laws of the Republic of Hawaii which when that public use shall have ceased. We need not enter into a discussion of this proposition, because the doctrine on which it is based has been heretofore adversely decided by this court in several leading and well-considered cases." 15. In nonnavigable waters.—Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 506, 21 L. Ed. 133.

Rivers, though not navigable even for boats or rafts, and even smaller streams of water, may be and often are regarded as public rights, subject to legislative control, as the source for furnishing a valuable supply of fish, suitable for food and sustenance. Fisheries of the kind, even in waters not navigable, are so far public rights that the legislature of the state may ordain and establish regulations to prevent obstructions to the passage of the fish, and to promote the usual and uninterrupted enjoyment of the right by the riparian owners. Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 506, 21 L. Ed. 133.

16. Where proprietor owns both sides of stream.—Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 506, 21 L. Ed. 133; Hardin v. Jordon, 140 U. S. 371, 388, 35 L. Ed. 428. See, also, Russell v. Jersey Co., 15 How. 426, 432, 14 L. Ed. 757.

A proprietor who owned both banks of a watercourse of a large stream, and the whole soil over which the water flows, where the stream is not navigable, may claim the exclusive right of fishing, subject, however, to legislative regulation. Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 506, 21 L. Ed. 133.

In lakes and ponds.—This is the law as to all fresh waters, including lakes and ponds as well. Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 388, 35 L. Ed. 428.

The right of public fishery is never mentioned in English decisions except in connection with tidewaters, where the title to the land is in the crown. It is never said that this right exists in lakes or ponds, or in any other fresh waters. Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 389, 35 L. Ed. 428.

The colonial ordinance of Massachusetts, adopted in 1641, provided that great ponds containing more than ten acres of land, and lying in common, though within the bounds of a town, should be free for fishing and fowling. conferred exclusive fishing rights, subject to vested rights, and requiring all claimants to such right to start actions within two years, did not affect certain fishing rights created by the act of the Republic of Hawaii of 1846, "of public and private rights of piscary." The act of 1846 created a vested right, within the saving of the organic act, in the owner of an ahupuaa to the adjacent fishing grounds within a coral reef.[21]

G. Seal Fisheries.—Seal fisheries are a branch of commerce, and the governmental powers exercised in their regulation cannot be delegated or contracted away.[22] But the United States government may grant the privilege of fishing for seals to private persons, and may charge a rental therefor, which may be reduced, in case the government should restrict the number of seals permitted to be killed to a less number than that agreed upon at the time of granting the privilege.[23]

H. Grant of Fishing Rights—1. By Patent.—No particular words are necessary to convey a right of fishery, and a patent, granting an ahupuaa in the Hawaiian Islands, which states that "a fishing right is also attached to this

21. In Hawaiian waters.—Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 154, 157, 48 L. Ed. 916; Carter v. Hawaii, 200 U. S. 255, 50 L. Ed. 470.

"The right claimed is a right within certain metes and bounds to set apart one species of fish to the owner's sole use, or, alternatively, to put a taboo on all fishing within the limits for certain months and to receive from all fishermen one-third of the fish taken upon the fishing grounds. A right of this sort is somewhat different from those familiar to the common law, but it seems to be well known to Hawaii, and, if it is established, there is no more theoretical difficulty in regarding it as property and a vested right than there is regarding any ordinary easement or profit a prendre as such. The plaintiff's claim is not to be approached as if it were something anomalous or monstrous, difficult to conceive and more difficult to admit. Moreover, however anomolous it is, if it is sanctioned by legislation, if the statutes have erected it into a property right, property it will be, and there is nothing for the courts to do except to recognize it as a right." Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 154, 158, 48 L. Ed. 916.

The land commission of Hawaii was established to determine the title to lands as against the Hawaiian government. In practice it treated the fisheries as not within its jurisdiction, and it would seem to have been right in its view. Carter v. Hawaii, 200 U. S. 255, 257, 50 L. Ed. 470.

22. Seal fisheries.—North American Commercial Co. v. United States, 171 U. S. 110, 137, 43 L. Ed. 98.

23. Grant of privilege.—Under an agreement between the United States and a company organized for the purpose of carrying on seal fisheries, by which the United States should receive a per annum rental, in a fixed sum, during the term of the contract, in consideration for the privilege of permitting the killing of an agreed number of seals each year, and also a certain sum for each seal killed and shipped, which also contain a provision that, in case the government limited the number permitted to be killed to a less number than that fixed, the rental should be reduced, the court held that in case of restriction of the number of seals killed that the per annum rental may be reduced, but that the per capita would not be. North American Commercial Co. v. United States, 171 U. S. 110, 43 L. Ed. 98.

"The privilege leased was the exclusive right to take fur seal, but it was subject, and expressly subjected, from the beginning, to whatever regulations of the business the United States might make. If those regulations reduced the catch, the company was protected by a reduction of the rental, and paid taxes and per capita only on the number taken. The other expenses to which it bound itself were part of the risk of the venture." North American Commercial Co. v. United States, 171 U. S. 110, 137, 43 L. Ed. 98.

The reduction in the amount of rental should be made proportionate to the reduction in the number permitted to be taken, regardless of the number actually taken. In making the reduction in the number of seals permitted to be killed it is immaterial whether or not the secretary of the treasury acts in compliance with the will of the government, expressed in a treaty with foreign nations, or in accordance with his own judgment. By the act of 1874 the secretary of the treasury is empowered to reduce the number of seals permitted to be killed, and in exercising this right he acts at his discretion. North American Commercial Co. v. United States, 171 U. S. 110, 43 L. Ed. 98.

Where the original agreement contained no provision for increasing the number which might be killed, this number is not increased by subsequent legislation. The restriction contained in the act of 1870, Rev. Stat., § 1962, remains in force, in this regard, despite the act of May 24, 1874, amendatory thereof, and which removes the restrictions in regard to the number that may be taken at certain places and the months during which land in the adjoining sea" defining it by boundaries, passes the fishery right although the habendum refers only to the "granted land."[24]

2. By General Law.—A general law may grant titles to fisheries as well as a special law.[25]

3. As Incident to Land under Water.—When the sovereign grants land under water, which cannot in its natural state be subjected to any of the uses to which dry land may be devoted, such a grant may be made to give an exclusive right of fishery.[26]

I. Termination of Right.—The exclusive right of fishery in nonnavigable waters is not divested by the condemnation of the land for milling purposes, unless the words of the grant indicate that such was the intention of the legislature.[27]

J. Protection of Right.—The adjoining landowner may prevent all other persons from participating in his several, or exclusive, right of fishery, and has a right of action against any who usurps the exercise of it without his consent.[28] A person who has the right of common fishery may set up such right against the owner of the water by the plea of common fishery.[29]

K. Rights of Nonresidents.—A state may prohibit the citizens of other states from fishing in its waters.[30]

"The only difference between this case and Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 154, 48 L. Ed. 916, is that in this the fishery is not described in the royal patent, and that, apart from the question of prescription, upon which we shall say nothing, the plaintiffs have to rely upon the statutes alone." Action in nature of bill to quiet title.—In this case, an action at law, somewhat like a bill to quiet title, to establish the plaintiff's right to a several fishery of a peculiar sort, between the coral reef and the ahupuaa of Moanalua on the main land of the Island of Oahu was allowed. "We think it must be regarded as established that, as between nations, the minimum limit of the territorial jurisdiction of a nation over tidewaters is a marine league from its coast; that bays wholly within its territory not exceeding two marine leagues in width at the mouth are within this limit; and that included in this territorial jurisdiction is the right of control over fisheries, whether the fish be migratory, free-swimming fish, or free-moving fish, or fish attached to or embedded in the soil. The open sea within this limit is, of course, subject to the common right of navigation; and all gov-

C. In Nonnavigable Waters.—Fishing rights in large streams, though not navigable, are regarded as public rights and subject to legislative control.[33]

D. Obstruction of Streams.—The right of fishery is equally entitled to legislative protection with the right of milling on nonnavigable waters.[34] Neither the exclusive right of fishery nor the right to dam a stream for milling purposes, confers the right to prevent the free passage of fish up and down the stream.[35] Although the right to dam the stream is conferred by a legislative act condemning the land to the use of another for mill purposes, unless the words of the grant conferring the authority to construct the dam plainly indicate that such was the intention of the legislature, the grantee cannot obstruct the passage of fish.[36]

E. Time and Method of Taking Fish.—A state may, under the exercise of its police power, preserve from destruction the fisheries within its jurisdicernments, for the purpose of self-protection in time of war or for the prevention of frauds on its revenue, exercise an authority beyond this limit." Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 258, 35 L. Ed. 159. And see proceedings of the Halifax Commission of 1877, under the Treaty of Washington of May 8, 1871, Executive Document No. 89, 45th Congress, 2d session, Ho. Reps. pp. 120, 121, 166.

The maritime belt is that part of the sea which, in contradistinction to the open sea, is under the sway of the riparian states, which can exclusively reserve the fishery within their respective maritime belts for their own citizens, whether fish, or pearls, or amber, or other products of the sea. Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U. S. 1, 52, 50 L. Ed. 913.

33. In nonnavigable waters.—Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 506, 21 L. Ed. 133.

"Public rights, in all jurisdictions, are subject to legislative control, and it is settled law in Massachusetts, and has been for a century and a half, including her colonial history, that the right of fishery in such rivers as the Connecticut and Merrimac, even above the point where they are navigable for boats or rafts, and the right to erect and maintain dams to create water power for mill purposes, are public rights, and that the owners of such rights are bound by such reasonable regulations as the state may make and ordain for their protection and enjoyment." Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 514, 21 L. Ed. 133.

34. Obstruction of streams.—Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 507, 21 L. Ed. 133.

35. Dams.—Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 512, 21 L. Ed. 133.

"Ownership of the banks and bed of the stream * * * gives to the proprietor the exclusive right of fishery, opposite his land, as well as the right to use the water to create power to operate mills, but neither the one nor the other right nor both combined confer any right to erect obstructions in the river to prevent the free passage of the fish up and down the river at their accustomed seasons." Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 512, 21 L. Ed. 133.

36. Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 507, 21 L. Ed. 133.

Fishways.—There is an implied obligation to construct passage ways for fish over dams in large streams. Such implied obligation may, however, be abrogated by the express terms of the charter of the corporation that built the dam. Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 520, 21 L. Ed. 133.

Under the laws of Massachusetts, where the charter of a manufacturing corporation empowers it to build a dam across a large stream, but does not contain any provision negativing the implied obligation to construct passage ways for fish, though subjecting the corporation to damages for injury to the fishery rights of adjoining landowners above the dam, and the charter is subject to amendment and repeal, the state may thereafter compel the corporation to construct and maintain passage ways for fish over such dam, although the damages provided for have been paid. "That corporation, or any other which purchases its dam under the authority of a subsequent statute, may be constitutionally required by the legislature to construct a fishway in the dam to the satisfaction of commissioners appointed by the legislature for the purpose." Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 21 L. Ed. 133.

Although the charter may have exempted the corporation from the duty to construct and maintain passage ways for fish over its dam in favor of upper riparian fisheries, yet the lower riparian fishery owners may compel the performance of such duty. Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 523, 21 L. Ed. 133.

Who may complain of obstruction.—Where a fishery is injured by the erection of a dam in the Schuylkill River, whereby the passage of fish is prevented, not only may the owners of land contiguous to the river complain of the obstruction, but all others near it, who may have been accustomed to receive fish thence, or to fish with an angle or hoop-net. Willson v. Blackbird Creek Marsh Co., 2 Pet. 245, 252b, 7 L. Ed. 412.

Effect of provision for damages.—The provision obligating the milling company to pay damages for injury to fishery

tion, by restricting the catching of them to certain seasons,[37] or preventing the use of exhaustive methods of fishing, and a state law prohibiting fishing with nets,[38] and declaring such nets to be a nuisance and subject to forfeiture, is not unconstitutional.[39]

F. Penalties and Forfeitures.—A state may declare nets used unlawfully for fishing purposes a nuisance and forfeited,[40] and it has the right to protect this fishery by inflicting the penalty of forfeiture upon the vessel employed in violating its fishing laws,[41] although the vessel which is forfeited is enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade of the United States under an act of congress.[42]

G. Power of State to Regulate—1. IN NAVIGABLE WATERS.—In the distribution of powers between the general and state governments, the right to the fisheries and the power to regulate the fisheries on the coasts and in the tidewaters of the several states, were left, by the constitution of the United States, with the states, subject only to such powers as congress may justly exercise in the regulation of commerce, interstate and foreign;[43] and if congress does not assert by affirmative legislation its right or will to assume the control of fisheries in such waters, the right to control such fisheries must remain with the state which contains such waters.[44] The state cannot regulate rights to riparian owners, does not exempt the company from the duty to build passage ways for fish. Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 521, 21 L. Ed. 133.

37. Of time and method of catching fish.—Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 138, 38 L. Ed. 385. See, also, McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 248.

38. "The duty of preserving the fisheries of a state from extinction, by prohibiting exhaustive methods of fishing, or the use of destructive instruments as are likely to result in the extermination of the young as well as the mature fish, is as clear as its power to secure to its citizens, as far as possible, a supply of any other wholesome food." Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 139, 38 L. Ed. 385.

39. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. Ed. 385.

The main and only real difficulty connected with the act in question is in its declaration that any net, etc., maintained in violation of any law for the protection of fisheries, is to be treated as a public nuisance, "and may be abated and summarily destroyed by any person, and it shall be the duty of each and every protector aforesaid and every game constable to seize, remove, and forthwith destroy the same." The legislature, however, undoubtedly possessed the power not only to prohibit fishing by nets in these waters, but to make it a criminal offense, and to take such measures as were reasonable and necessary to prevent such offenses in the future. It certainly could not do this more effectually than by destroying the means of the offense. If the nets were being used in a manner detrimental to the interests of the public, we think it was within the power of the legislature to declare them to be nuisances, and to authorize the officers of the state to abate them. Where the property is of little value, and its use for the illegal purpose is clear, the legislature may declare it to be a nuisance, and subject to summary abatement, without judicial detention. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 139, 38 L. Ed. 385. See Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. 71, 15 L. Ed. 269.

Such a law is not repugnant to the constitution as interfering with the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the judicial power of the United States. Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. 71, 74, 75, 76, 15 L. Ed. 269; The Malek Adhel, 2 How. 210, 233, 11 L. Ed. 239; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 261, 35 L. Ed. 159; United States v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. 336, 386, 4 L. Ed. 404.

43. Power of state to regulate.—Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 258, 35 L. Ed. 159.

Subject to the paramount right of navigation, the regulation of which in relation to foreign and interstate commerce has been granted to the United States, each state owns the beds of all tidewaters within its jurisdiction, and may appropriate them, to be used by its citizens as a common for taking and cultivating fish, if navigation be not thereby obstructed. The right which the citizens of the state thus acquire is a property right and not a mere privilege or immunity of citizenship. McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 248; Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S. 155, 173, 38 L. Ed. 669; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. 71, 74, 15 L. Ed. 269; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 367, 10 L. Ed. 997.

44. When congress does not act.—Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 266, 35 L. Ed. 159.

"We do not consider the question whether or not congress would have the fisheries so as to affect the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States.[45] The state of Maryland can regulate fisheries in Chesapeake Bay.[46]

2. In Interstate Rivers.—It may be doubted whether a state can obstruct the migration of fish in an interstate river. The question has, however, not been decided.[47]

3. Under Compact between States.—A state, which, under an agreement with another state, has no right to fish in border waters, cannot regulate the fisheries therein.[48]

V. Validity of Fishing Compacts between States.

An agreement between two states in regard to fisheries in border waters does not fall within the inhibition of the articles of confederation forbidding any treaty, etc., between the different states without consent of congress, and is valid.[49]

VI. Fishing Vessels as Prize of War.

right to control the menhaden fisheries which the statute of Massachusetts assumes to control; but we mean to say only that, as the right of control exists in the state in the absence of the affirmative action of congress taking such control, the fact that congress has never assumed the control of such fisheries is persuasive evidence that the right to control them still remains in the state." Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 266, 35 L. Ed. 159.

45. Cannot so regulate as to affect admiralty jurisdiction.—Upon the question of the admiralty jurisdiction the court said: "But we consider it to have been settled by this court, in United States v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. 336, 4 L. Ed. 404, that this clause in the constitution did not affect the jurisdiction, nor the legislative power of the states, over so much of their territory as lies below high-water mark, save that they parted with the power so to legislate as to conflict with the admiralty jurisdiction or laws of the United States. As this law conflicts neither with the admiralty jurisdiction of any court of the United States conferred by congress, nor with any law of congress whatever, we are of opinion it is not repugnant to this clause of the constitution." Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 261, 35 L. Ed. 159.

46. Maryland in Chesapeake Bay.—The soil below low-water mark in the Chesapeake Bay, within the boundaries of Maryland, belongs to the state, subject to any lawful grants of that soil by the state or the sovereign power which governed its territory before the Declaration of Independence. Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. 71, 15 L. Ed. 269.

"The state holds the proprietv of this soil for the conservation of the public rights of fishery thereon, and may regulate the modes of that enjoyment so as to prevent the destruction of the fishery. In other words, it may forbid all such acts as would render the public right less valuable, or destroy it altogether. This power results from the ownership of the soil, from the legislative jurisdiction of the state over it, and from its duty to preserve unimpaired those public uses for which the soil is held." Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. 71, 75, 15 L. Ed. 269.

In Buzzard's Bay.—Fisheries in such waters as Buzzard's Bay have never been the subject of treaty or congressional regulation. Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 35 L. Ed. 159.

47. In interstate rivers.—A charter may doubtless be granted to a milling corporation to build a dam across a river whose whole course is within the state granting the franchise, "with a provision exempting the corporation from all obligation to construct such fishery for the free passage of the fish, as the enterprise of erecting a dam to create power to operate mills is so far public in its nature that it is competent for the legislature to exercise the power of eminent domain to accomplish the purpose if suitable provision is made to compensate the owners of the property or rights condemned under that power, but it may be more doubtful whether the legislature of a state can make a contract with such a corporation authorizing them to construct a dam across a river flowing through two or more states, which shall permanently exempt the grantees from all such obligation and destroy forever the rights of fishery in the river throughout its whole course from its source to its confluence with tidewaters." Holyoke Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 500, 522, 21 L. Ed. 133.

48. Under compact between states.—No clause of the compact between Maryland and Virginia having given any right to Maryland to fish in Pocomoke River, there is no reason why Maryland should be allowed to interfere in any way by legislation or regulation for the preservation of its fish. Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S. 155, 175, 38 L. Ed. 669.

The general rule of the common law undoubtedly is, that whatever is once annexed to the freehold, becomes part of it, and cannot be afterwards removed, except by him who is entitled to the inheritance.[3] This rule, however, never was inflexible; and without exceptions.[4] It was construed most strictly between executor and heir, in favor of the latter, and more liberally between tenant for life and in tail, and remainderman or reversioner, in favor of the former, and with much greater latitude between landlord and tenant, in favor of the tenant.[5] A more extensive exception to the rule has been, of fixtures erected for the purpose of trade.[6] Fixtures which were erected to carry on trade and manufactures

1. Fitting out.—Under the act of congress punishing fitting out of vessels with intent to employ them in the slave trade, any preparations for a slave voyage which clearly manifest or accompany the illegal intent, even though incomplete and imperfect, and before the departure of the vessel from port do yet constitute a fitting out, within the purview of the statute; and if the vessel actually sailed for the purpose of employment in the slave trade, her fitment was complete, for all purposes of the act. United States v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. 460, 472, 6 L. Ed. 693. See the title SLAVERY AND INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE.

The conversion, within the United States, of a foreign merchant vessel into a cruiser to act against an enemy of the vessel's country, but one peaceful towards the United States, constitutes a fitting out of the vessel, within the meaning of the United States statute prohibiting any person to fit out and arm any ship or vessel with the intent to cruise upon a foreign power with whom the United States is at peace. United States v. Guinet, 2 Dall. 321, 328, 1 L. Ed. 398. See the title NEUTRALITY.

2. Fixed by ordinance.—The statute of April 10, 1872, of Illinois, authorized city councils to contract with any person or corporation to construct and maintain waterworks "at such rates as may be fixed by ordinance, and for a period not exceeding thirty years." It was held that the words "fixed by ordinance" might be construed to mean by ordinance once for all, to endure during the whole period of thirty years; or by ordinance from time to time as might be deemed necessary; and that of the two constructions, that must be adopted which is most favorable to the public, not that one which would so tie the hands of the council that the rates could not be adjusted as justice to both parties might require at a particular time. What constitutes fixtures for trade purposes.—The question whether fixtures erected for the purposes of trade, are or are not removable by the tenant, does not depend upon the form or size of the building; whether it has a brick foundation or not, or is one or two stories high; or has a brick or other chimney; the sole question is, whether it is designed for the purposes of trade, or not. Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. 137, 7 L. Ed. 374.

FLOAT.—A float is a grant of a quantity of land, to be located within a certain tract or territory, whether of limited extent, marked by certain bounds, or anywhere in the state.[3]

FLOATING ELEVATOR.—Floating elevators are primarily boats. Some are scows, and have to be towed from place to place by steam tugs; but the majority are propellers. When the floating elevator arrives at the ship and makes fast alongside of her, the canal boat carrying the grain is made fast on the other side of the elevator. The machinery of the elevator is then set in motion, the grain is elevated out of the canal boat, received and weighed in the elevator, and discharged into the ship.[4]

FLOCKS.—The term "flocks," as used in the revenue laws, is defined as "woolen or cotton refuse, old rags, etc., reduced to a degree of fineness by machinery, and for stuffing upholstered furniture."[5]

2. For.—The preposition for means of itself duration when it is put in connection with time and as all of us use it in that way in every day conversation, it cannot be presumed that the legislature did not mean to use it in the same way in making a statute that public notice of the time and place of sale of real property for taxes due to a city should be given by advertisement inserted in some city newspaper, "once in each week for at least twelve successive weeks," and in such case it must be advertised for twelve full weeks, or eighty-four days. Early v. Homans, 16 How. 610, 616, 14 L. Ed. 1079; Leach v. Burr, 188 U. S. 510, 512, 47 L. Ed. 567.

In the District of Columbia on probate of a will publication is required in case any party in interest is not found, the statute providing that the court shall order a publication at least twice a week for a period of not less than four weeks of a copy of the issues and notification of trial in some newspaper of general circulation in the District of Columbia, and may order such other publication as the case may require. It was held that two publications in each successive day from the date of the order of the court, which was Friday, was sufficient under the statute, the court saying: "But the language of this statute is not 'for four weeks,' but 'for a period of not less than four weeks,' and the words of the order must be construed in the light of the statute. A like difference was called to the attention of the court in Early v. Homans, 16 How. 610, 14 L. Ed. 1079, where the publication was to be 'once in each week, for at least twelve successive weeks,' and commenting thereon it was said (p. 617): 'The preposition for means of itself duration when it is put in connection with time, and as all of us use it in that way, in our everyday conversation, it cannot be presumed that the legislator, in making this statute, did not mean to use it in the same way. Nature and Object of Statutes.—The general purpose of these statutes is, that, not regarding the actual condition of the title to the property, where any person is in the peaceable and quiet possession of it, he shall not be turned out by the strong hand, by force, by violence, or by terror. The party so using force and acquiring possession may have the superior title or may have the better right to the present possession, but the policy of the law in this class of cases is to prevent disturbances of the public peace, to forbid any person righting himself in a case of that kind by his own hand and by violence, and to require that the party who has in this manner obtained possession shall restore it to the party from whom it has been so obtained,[2] and then, when the parties are in statu quo, or in the same position as they were before the use of violence, the party out of possession must resort to legal means to obtain his possession, as he should have done in the first instance. This is the philosophy which lies at the foundation of all these actions of forcible entry and detainer, which are declared not to have relation to the condition of the title, or to the absolute right successive weeks is as definite a designation of time, according to our division of it, as can be made. When we say that anything may be done in twelve weeks, or that it shall not be done for twelve weeks, after the happening of a fact which is to precede it, we mean that it may be done in twelve weeks or eighty-four days, or, as the case may be, that it shall not be done before.'" Leach v. Burr, 188 U. S. 510, 512, 47 L. Ed. 567. See the titles SUMMONS AND PROCESS; TIME.

For her use.—Where in a case of collision the injured boat was sunk, and the plaintiffs declared for a total loss; but it came out in evidence, that she was raised and repaired, and again commenced running the river and on this state of facts the jury was charged that damages should be given for raising the boat and for repairing her; also damages in addition, "for her use, during the time necessary to make the repairs and fit her for business," "the expression for her use, must mean either the clear profits of her probable earnings; or, how much she could have been hired for to others during the time of her detention." Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. 101, 113, 14 L. Ed. 68, Justice Catron in a dissenting opinion.

For matter of form.—See FORM.

For the interest.—Where the bond of a railroad company providing that in case the net earnings should not in any one year be sufficient to enable the company to pay certain per cent. interest on outstanding bonds, then script might, at the option of the company, be issued for the interest, the term for the interest means in place of the interest, and under the terms of the bond the company was bound to pay the interest on the day it was due or else issue script, on the failure of the sufficiency of net earnings to pay the full interest. Texas, etc., Ry. Co. v. Marlor, 123 U. S. 687, 701, 31 L. Ed. 303.

For the use.—Where streets and public squares are declared to be conveyed "for the use of the United States forever," these words vest an absolute unconditional fee simple in the United States. They are the very words which by law are required to vest an absolute unconditional fee simple in the United States. They are the appropriate terms of art to express an unlimited use in the government. Potomac Steamboat Co. v. Upper Potomac Steamboat Co., 109 U. S. 672, 680, 27 L. Ed. 1070, citing Van Ness v. Washington, 4 Pet. 232, 7 L. Ed. 842.

1. Force.—As used in code of Louisiana, see Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U. S. 707, 728, 30 L. Ed. 776.

3. Nature and object of statutes.—Iron Mountain, etc., Railroad v. Johnson, 119 U. S. 608, 611, 30 L. Ed. 504.

Where a contractor has completed but has not received payment for a part of a railroad, and has been ejected with force and violence by the railroad company, he may recover the possession under the statutes of Arkansas relating to forcible entries and detainers, and questions as to the validity of the contract are immaterial. Iron Mountain, etc., Railroad v. Johnson, 119 U. S. 608, 30 L. Ed. 504.

of possession, but to compelling the party out of possession, who desires to recover it of a person in the peaceable possession, to respect and resort to the law alone to obtain what he claims.[2a]

Indictment and Inquisition.—It has been held that mere surplusage[3] or informality in expression will not vitiate an indictment or inquisition.[4]

Evidence.—Where the defendant in an action of unlawful detainer put in evidence a lease from the owner of the property, which lease had been assigned to him, the plaintiff may put in evidence a judgment canceling and setting aside the lease because made by one incompetent.[5]

Verdict.—In Oregon a verdict does not vitiate the judgment, which does not state, in terms, that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the property described in the complaint, or any part thereof; or does not state the nature or duration of his estate in the property.[6]

FOR COLLECTION.—As to endorsements "for collection," see the titles BANKS AND BANKING, vol. 3, p. 66; BILLS, NOTES AND CHECKS, vol. 3, p. 295.

3. Indictment.—In an early Pennsylvania case an indictment was objected to on two grounds: 1. For that the indictment stated, "that the prosecutor was seized in his demesne as of fee," without saying when he was seized; so that it might be he was seized at the time of the indictment found, and not at the time of the forcible entry. 2. For that the indictment stated, "that he was seized in his demesne as of fee," and "his peaceable possession thereof as aforesaid continued until, etc.," which is repugnant and inconsistent, inasmuch as he could not be both seized and possessed at the same time. But the court overruled both objections: And McKean, C. J., said, that the words, "his peaceable possession thereof as aforesaid," were surplusage, and ought to be rejected. Respublica v. Shryber, 1 Dall. 68, 1 L. Ed. 401. See the title INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, PRESENTMENTS AND COMPLAINTS.

4. Inquisition.—In a Pennsylvania case an inquisition stated, "that N. B. was possessed in his demesne as of fee, etc., and continued so seized and possessed, until the defendant did enter, and him the said N. B. thereof disseised," etc. It was objected, that the prosecutor is stated to have been only possessed of the premises, whereas the evidence proved him to have been seised. But the court held that though there was some informality in the expressions, the stating that the prosecutor was disseised necessarily implied a previous seisin. I. Definitions and General Considerations.

A. Definition.—All corporations in states other than the state of their creation are deemed to be foreign corporations.[1]

B. As Citizens.—Foreign corporations are not citizens within the meaning of the privilege and immunity clause of the federal constitution.[2]

C. As Persons.—See the titles CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 644; COURTS, vol. 4, p. 949; REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

D. Officers and Agents.—A foreign corporation may, by its conduct, be held to have impliedly ratified the acts of its agent done in its behalf, although the agent may have exceeded the powers originally given him.[3]

E. Stock and Stockholders.—By subscribing to stock in a foreign corporation, defendant subjected itself to the laws of such foreign country in respect to the powers and obligations of such corporation.[4]

5. Existence out of state granting charter.—"In Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 588, 10 L. Ed. 274, Chief Justice Taney said: 'It is very true that a corporation can have no legal existence out of the boundaries of the sovereignty by which it is created. It exists only in contemplation of law, and by force of the law; and where that law ceases to operate, and is no longer obligatory, the corporation can have no existence. By such consent, express or implied, it may transact there any business not ultra vires, and, like a natural person, may have a special or constructive residence; Galveston Railroad v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. 459, 476, 20 L. "But although it must live and have its being in that state only, yet it does not by any means follow that its existence there will not be recognized in other places; and its residence in one state creates no insuperable objection to its power of contracting in another. This statement has been often reaffirmed by this court, with some change of phrase, but always retaining the idea that the legal existence, the home, the domicile, the habitat, the residence, the citizenship of the corporation, can only be in the state by which it was created, although it may do business in other states whose laws permit it." Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co., 145 U. S. 444, 449, 36 L. Ed. 768, quoting from Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 588, 10 L. Ed. 274; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 10 L. A corporation cannot change its residence or its citizenship. It can have its legal home only at the place where it is located by or under the authority of its incorporation.[7]

b. Reincorporation or License.—This may be by virtue of being made a corporation of the state where it seeks to do business, or a license or special authority granted it by that state.[8]

2. Power to Exclude or Expel.—a. In General.—A corporation created by one state cannot, with some exceptions, do business in another state without the latter's consent, express or implied,[9] with certain limited exceptions, namely, charter; but it may by its agents transact business anywhere, unless prohibited by its charter or excluded by local laws. Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 378, 24 L. Ed. 853.

"Unlike a natural person, it cannot change its domicile at will, and, although it may be permitted to transact business where its charter does not operate, it cannot on that account acquire a residence there." Insurance Co. v. Francis, 11 Wall. 210, 216, 20 L. Ed. 77. See Railroad Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 610, 37 L. Ed. 292; Tioga Railroad v. Blossburg, etc., Railroad, 20 Wall. 137, 148, 22 L. Ed. 331. See post, "Power to Exclude, or Expel," II, A, 2.

7. Law of state of incorporation.—Korn v. Mutual Assur. Society, 6 Cranch 192, 3 L. Ed. 195. The circumstance, that the law of Virginia has limited a Virginia company to the bounds of the state, in performing its functions, could only prevent it from making new contracts in the District of Columbia, subsequent to the separation thereof, and until it had received additional powers, but could not release it from its liability to individuals with whom it had previously contracted there.

8. Reincorporation or license.—A corporation, created by the laws of one state, may carry on business in another, either by virtue of being created a corporation by the laws of the latter state also, as in Railroad Co. v. Vance, 96 U. S. 450, 24 L. Ed. 752; Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Alabama, 107 U. S. 581, 27 L. Ed. 518; Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 27 L. Ed. 780; Stone v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. Ed. 636, and Graham v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 118 U. S. 161, 30 L. Ed. 196. Or by virtue of a license, permission or authority, granted by the laws of the latter state, to act in that state under its charter from the former state. Martin v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 151 U. S. 673, 677, 38 L. Ed. 311; Railroad Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 82, 20 L. Ed. 354; Railroad Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 118 U. S. 290, 30 L. Ed. 83; Goodlett v. Louisville, etc., Railroad, 122 U. S. 391, 30 L. Ed. 1230; Marye v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 127 U. S. 117, 32 L. Ed. 94. See post, "License, Deposit or Payment of Tax," II, A, 4, b.

By the concurrent acts of the legislature of Kentucky in 1846, and of the legislature of Ohio in 1849, the Covington, etc., Bridge Company was made a corporation of each state, and authorized to fix rates of toll. The original acts of incorporation constituted a contract between the corporation and both states, which could not be altered by the one state without the consent of the other, as by changing the rate of toll contrary to its provisions. Per the minority opinion of Justices Fuller, Field, Gray and White, concurring specially in the judgment in Covington, etc., Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 223, 38 L. Ed. 962; Covington, etc., Elevated Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 224, 38 L. Ed. 970. As to dual incorporation and adoption of foreign corporation, see the title CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 651.

Without affecting property rights.—As a state has the power to exclude foreign corporations it cannot be said to deprive them of any property right by excluding them from doing business within the state National Council U. A. M. v. State Council, 203 U. S. 151, 163, 51 L. Ed. 132.

Nor is the case affected by the fact that the state has granted to a corporation of its own creation of a somewhat similar name and organized for a similar purpose the exclusive right of issuing charters to subordinate branches or councils within the state. Since the state has the right to exclude the foreign concern absolutely, it is of no consequence to that organization what powers the state may vest in its own creature. National Council U. A. M. v. State Council, 203 U. S. 151, 163, 51 L. Ed. 132.

10. Rule and exceptions stated.—"The principle that the right of a foreign corporation to engage in business within a state other than that of its creation, depends solely upon the will of such other state, has been long settled, and many phases of its application have been illustrated by the decisions of this court. Whilst there are exceptions to this rule, they embrace only cases where a corporation created by one state rests its right to enter another and to engage in business therein upon the federal nature of its business. As, for instance, where it has derived its being from an act of congress, and has become a lawful agency for the performance of governmental or quasi governmental functions, or where it is necessarily an instrumentality of interstate commerce, or its business constitutes such commerce, and is, therefore, solely within the paramount authority of congress. In these cases, the exceptional business is protected against interference by state authority. The reasons upon which the exceptions to the general rule are based have been often explained. "The only limitation upon this power of the state to exclude a foreign corporation from doing business within its limits, or hiring officer for that purpose, or to exact conditions for allowing the corporation to do business or hire offices there, arises where the corporation is in the employ of the federal government, or where its business is strictly commerce, interstate or foreign. As to limitations on discretion in imposing terms, see post, "Discretion of Legislature," II, A, 4, a.

"These exceptions do not touch the general doctrine declared as to corporations not carrying on foreign or inter-

those of other states, or foreign countries.[11]

Expulsion.—Likewise the right to exclude a corporation from entering a state in the first instance includes the right of expulsion after it has once entered and a statute expelling such a corporation from the state does not, so far as the mere right of doing business within the state is concerned deprive it of any property right, for the simple reason that it cannot extend to any such right except with the consent of the state.[11a] And a single foreign corporation, especially one unique in character, may be expelled by special act.[12]

b. Federal Corporations.—A state, at least after it had given its consent to a federal corporation to enter into its territory and construct its road, and such consent had been acted on, could not, by hostile legislation, hamper and restrict that company in the management and control of its railroad, nor by judicial decisions of its courts transform a corporation formed by national legislation for national purposes and interstate commerce into one of local character, with state commerce, or not employed by the government. As to these corporations, the doctrine of Paul v. Virginia applies." Pembina Consolidated Silver Min., etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 186, 31 L. Ed. 650. See, also, post, "General Rule of Comity," II, A, 3.

Has not citizenship rights of its members.—A foreign corporation cannot of right demand as a constitutional right the privilege of contracting and doing business in another state; the only rights it can claim are the rights which are given to it in its character as a corporation, and not the rights which belong to its members as citizens of a state. Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. Ed. 274. See ante, "As Citizens," I, B.

11. Power of discrimination.—See Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. Ed. 972, where it was said that "the power of a state to discriminate between her own corporations and those of other states desirous of transacting business within her jurisdiction being clearly established, it belonged to the state to determine as to the nature or degree of discrimination, 'subject only to such limitations on her sovereignty as may be found in the fundamental law of the Union.' "The state is not prohibited from discriminating in the privileges it may grant to foreign corporations as a condition of their doing business or hiring offices within its limits, provided always such discrimination does not interfere with any transaction by such corporations of interstate or foreign commerce. It is not every corporation, lawful in the state of its creation, that other states may be willing to admit within their jurisdiction or consent that it have offices in them; such, for example, as a corporation for lotteries. And even where the business of a foreign corporation is not unlawful in other states the latter may wish to limit the number of such corporations, or to subject their business to such control as would be in accordance with the policy governing domestic corporations of a similar character;" i. e., without denial of the equal protection of the laws to persons within its jurisdiction. "The state of Virginia had the undoubted right to exclude a Pennsylvania corporation and to forbid its constituting branches within the Virginia boundaries. rights and powers restricted by views of policy applicable to state organizations.[13]

c. Corporations Engaged in Interstate and Foreign Commerce.—The power of a state to exclude foreign corporations from transacting business within its limits does not extend to corporations engaged in foreign and interstate commerce.[14]

Foreign Insurance Companies.—Insurance is not commerce. Therefore, a state may exclude foreign insurance companies from doing business within its limits.[15]

d. Necessity for State Action to Exclude.—Admission.—But no citizen of a state can enjoin a foreign corporation from pursuing its business. Until the state acts in its sovereign capacity, individual citizens cannot complain. The state must determine for itself when the public good requires that its implied assent to the admission shall be withdrawn.[16]

3. General Rule of Comity—a. Rule Stated.—By the doctrine of comity between states in relation to corporations, which has been steadily maintained, and has been recognized by the federal supreme court in many instances,[17] and which, in the absence of positive direction to the contrary, obtains through the states and territories of the United States, corporations created in one state or territory are permitted to carry on any lawful business in another.[18]

b. Limitations.—But this comity is presumed from the silent acquiescence of the state. Whenever a state sufficiently indicates that contracts which derive their validity from its comity are repugnant to its policy, or are considered as injurious to its interests, the presumption in favor of its adoption can no longer be made.[19]

c. Charter as Law of Existence.—But wherever it goes for business, it carries its charter, as that is the law of its existence.[20] No state need allow the cor-

"Foreign corporations wishing to do business with our citizens, and localizing that business within our state through local boards, must comply with the laws of this state. They cannot, under such circumstances, enforce here stipulations in contracts allowed by the law of the state which created them, if these stipulations violate our laws or public policy. The case at bar is within the ruling of New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. Ed. 1116. The decision of the supreme court is, that plaintiff in error had become "localized" in the state, had accepted the laws of the state as a condition of doing business there, and could not, nor could defendant in error, "abrogate by attempted contract stipulations" those laws. See Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Warren, 181 U. S. 73, 45 L. Ed. 755. In Chattanooga Nat. Bldg., etc., Ass'n v. Denson, 189 U. S. 408, 47 L. Ed. 870, "we recognized the right of a state to impose conditions upon foreign corporations doing business in the state to the extent of holding the contracts of the corporation void which were entered into in violation of the conditions. There is nothing inconsistent with these views in Bedford v. Eastern Bldg., etc., Ass'n, 181 U. S. 227, 45 L. Ed. 834. In that case there was a consummated contract, and we held invalid a law enacted subsequently that made the enforcement of the contract depend upon the performance of onerous conditions." porations of other states to do business within its jurisdiction unless it chooses, with perhaps the exception of commercial corporations; but if it does, without limitation, express or implied, the corporation comes in as it has been created.[21] But this does not apply to provisions of law in statutes of the state of domicile, unless same are adopted and made a part of a contract with such foreign corporation. The lex loci contractu governs.[22] But a person dealing with a foreign corporation cannot be affected by verbal minutiæ in the charter of the company, without their being brought to his knowledge. The charter is a document on file in the office of the comptroller of another state, and a person dealing with the company, in his own state, cannot be expected to know its precise terms.[23]

4. Terms of Admission—a. Discretion of Legislature—(1) General Rule.—A state may impose upon a foreign corporation, as a condition to coming into or doing business within its territory, any terms, conditions, and restrictions, which it may think proper, that are not repugnant to the constitution or laws of the United States.[24] For the absolute power of exclusion includes the right

"Every corporation necessarily carries its charter wherever it goes, for that is the law of its existence. It may be restricted in the use of some of its powers while doing business away from its corporate home, but every person who deals with it everywhere is bound to take notice of the provisions which have been made in its charter for the management and control of its affairs both in life and after dissolution." A corporation of one country may be excluded from business in another country (Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357), but, if admitted, it must, in the absence of legislation equivalent to making it a corporation of the latter country, be taken, both by the government and those who deal with it, as a creature of the law of its own country, and subject to all the legislative control and direction that may be properly exercised over it at the place of its creation." "If they are recognized and permitted to do business without limitation, express or implied, they carry with them wherever they go all their chartered rights, and may claim all their chartered privileges which can be used away from their legal home. Their charters are the law of their existence, and are taken wherever they go. By doing business away from their legal residence they do not change their citizenship, but simply extend the field of their operations. They reside at home, but do business abroad." Railroad Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 11, 26 L. Ed. 643.

The policy of Alabama does not deny to the corporations of other states the ordinary comity between nations, but it permits such a corporation to make those contracts which from their nature and subject matter, are consistent with its policy, and are allowed to individuals. In making such contracts, a corporation, no doubt, exercises its corporate franchises. But it must do this, whenever it acts as a corporation, for its existence is a franchise. It was not decided in the case of Insurance Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. Ed. 365, that the state of Wisconsin had not the power to impose terms and conditions as preliminary to the right of an insurance company to appoint agents, keep offices, and issue policies in that state. On the contrary, the case of Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357, where it is held that such conditions may be imposed, was cited with approval. Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 539, 24 L. Ed. 148.

If consistent with federal constitution.—Generally speaking, a state may prescribe conditions of admission of foreign corporation to do business, if consistent with the rights, privileges and immunities granted or protected by the federal constitution. Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 269, 43 L. Ed. 432; Blake v. McClung, 176 U. S. 59, 44 L. Ed. 371. See ante, "Power to Exclude or Expel," II, A, 2; post, "Limitations," II, A, 4, a, (2).

25. Same.—Pembina Consolidated Silver Min., etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 186, 31 L. Ed. 650, citing Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. Ed. 972; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. Ed. 222; Philadelphia Fire Ass'n v. New York, 119 U. Such assent may, as a matter of course, be granted upon such terms and conditions as those states may think proper to impose. They may exclude the foreign corporation entirely; they may restrict its business to particular localities, or they may exact such security for the performance of its contracts with their citizens as in their judgment will best promote the public interest. The whole matter rests in their discretion. Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 181, 19 L. Ed. 357; Pembina Consolidated Silver Min., etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. Ed. 342; Pembina Consolidated Silver Min., etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 185, 31 L. Ed. 650; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York State, 143 U. S. 305, 315, 36 L. Ed. 164.

Equal protection of laws.—And this without any denial of the equal protection of the laws to persons within its jurisdiction. Pembina Consolidated Silver Min., etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 189, 31 L. Ed. 650; American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 94, 45 L. Ed. 102; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 34 L. Ed. 394. See, also, ante, "Power to Exclude or Expel," II, A, 2.

26. Obedience to lawful regulations.—The right of a foreign corporation to carry on business in a state, might be deemed subject to the condition of obeying the regulations prescribed in the legislation of the state. As was said in Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 566, 43 L. Ed. 552, that "which a state may do with corporations of its own creation it may do with foreign corporations admitted into the state. * * * The power of a state to impose conditions upon foreign corporations is certainly as sumed to have constructive notice.[27] And the power to impose comprehends the right to enforce, and to prevent its citizens from contracting, within its jurisdiction, with corporations not complying therewith.[28]

Means and Motive Immaterial.—As the state has the right to exclude such company, the means by which she causes such exclusion, or the motives of her action, are not the subject of judicial inquiry.[29]

"Doing Business" Construed.—The contention that the prohibition against the doing of any business in the state by a foreign corporation, except upon the prescribed condition, includes the doing of any single and isolated act of business whatever, thus broadly stated, cannot be sustained.[30]

(2) Limitations.—But such terms and conditions must not be repugnant to the constitution and laws of the United States, or the rules of public law between the states, or natural justice.[31] Any statute, requiring the foreign cor-extensive as the power over domestic corporations, and is fully explained in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297." Dayton Coal, etc., Co. v. Barton, 183 U. S. 23, 24, 46 L. Ed. 61; Stone v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 116 U. S. 307, 347, 29 L. Ed. 636; Whitfield v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., 205 U. S. 489, 495, 51 L. Ed. 895. See post, "Regulation and Control," II, A, 8.

Transaction of business by agents.—"The state, having the power to impose conditions on the transaction of business by foreign insurance companies within its limits, has the equal right to prohibit the transaction of such business by agents of such companies, or by insurance brokers, who are to some extent the representatives of both parties." Nutting v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 553, 556, 46 L. Ed. 324; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. Ed. 832.

27. Notice of terms.—Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 264, 43 L. Ed. 432, per Brewer, J., dissenting.

28. Enforcement.—And as a necessary consequence it has the right to enforce any conditions imposed by its laws as preliminary to the transaction of business within its confines by a foreign corporation, whether the business is to be carried on through officers or through ordinary agents of the company, and also the further right to prohibit a citizen from contracting within its jurisdiction with any foreign company which has not acquired the privilege of engaging in business therein, either in his own behalf or through an agent empowered to that end. Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 656, 39 L. Ed. 297; Nutting v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 553, 556, 46 L. Ed. 324. See, also, Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 586, 41 L. Ed. 832; Noble v. Mitchell, 164 U. S. 367, 41 L. Ed. 472.

Yet the power does not and cannot extend to prohibiting a citizen from making contracts outside of the limits and jurisdiction of the state, and which are also to be performed outside of such jurisdiction. Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 591, 41 L. Ed. 832.

In such a case as the facts here present, the policy of the state in forbidding insurance companies which had not complied with the laws of the state from doing business within its limits cannot be so carried out as to prevent the citizen from writing such a letter of notification as was written by the plaintiffs in error in the state, when it is written pursuant to a valid contract made outside the state and with reference to a company which is not doing business within its limits. Allegeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 593, 41 L. Ed. 832.

Illustrations.—A state has the right to impose conditions, not in conflict with the constitution or the laws of the United States, to the transaction of business within its territory by an insurance company chartered by another state, or to exclude such company from its territory, or, having given a license, to revoke it, with or without cause. Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148. See the title INSURANCE.

29. Means or motive immaterial.—Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148; Cable v. United States Life Ins. Co., 191 U. S. 288, 307, 48 L. Ed. 188.

And the discounting by a corporation in its own state, of a note sent it from another state for such purpose, does not constitute carrying on business in such other state within the meaning of its laws relative to foreign corporations. Bamberger v. Schoolfield, 160 U. S. 149, 167, 40 L. Ed. 374. See, also, post, "Maintenance of Office, and Agent for Service of Process," II, A, 4, c; "Filing Charter," II, A, 4, f.

31. "A state has the right to prohibit a foreign corporation from doing business within its borders, unless such prohibition is so conditioned as to violate some provision of the federal constitution. Among the later authorities on that proposition are Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165

poration, as a condition precedent to obtaining a permit to do business within the state, to surrender a right and privilege secured to it by the constitution and laws of the United States, is unconstitutional and void, and can give no validity or effect to any agreement or action of the corporation in obedience to its provisions.[32] And the power of the state to impose conditions upon foreign corporations doing business in the state, although recognized and affirmed many times, manifestly cannot be exercised to discharge the citizens of the state from their contract obligations.[33]

b. License, Deposit, or Payment of Tax.—The state may require a license to be obtained first, and a deposit of money or securities to be made; or a tax to be

Although, generally speaking, the state has the power to prescribe the conditions upon which foreign corporations may enter its territory for purposes of business, such a power cannot be exerted with the effect of defeating or impairing rights secured to citizens of the several states by the supreme law of the land. Blake v. McClung, 176 U. S. 59, 63, 44 L. Ed. 371, reaffirming S. C. 172 U. S. 239, 255, 43 L. Ed. 432. See, also, Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 664, 39 L. "As said by this court in Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451: 'These conditions must be deemed valid and effectual by other states and by this court, provided they are not repugnant to the constitution or laws of the United States, or inconsistent with those rules of public law which secure the jurisdiction and authority of each state from encroachment by all others, or that principle of natural justice which forbids condemnation without opportunity for defense.'" Property rights.—"It is true, of course, that an unconstitutional law no more binds foreign corporations than it binds others. Carroll v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 199 U. S. 401, 409, 50 L. Ed. 246. And no doubt a law specially directed against a foreign corporation might be unconstitutional for instance, as depriving it of its property without due process of law. See Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 260, 43 L. Ed. 432. But when the so-called property consists merely in the value that there might be in extending its business or membership into a state, that property, it hardly needs to be said, depends upon the consent of the state to let the corporation come into the state." Such a right is acquired by a citizen of a state, by his subscription to the stock of a building and loan association lawfully doing business in the state under the laws then in force, which could not be invalidated or impaired by subsequent acts of the state legislature requiring the performance of certain acts by such corporation for the continuance of its business then, which were never complied with. 34. License tax.—It may make the grant or privilege dependent upon the payment of a specific license tax, or a sum proportioned to the amount of its capital used within the state. New York State v. Roberts, 171 U. S. 658, 661, 43 L. Ed. 323; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York State, 143 U. S. 305, 36 L. Ed. 164. Ed. 649.

Where a corporation does not come within any of the exceptions, therefore, the recognition of its existence even to the limited extent of allowing it to have an office within its limits for the use of its officers, stockholders, agents, and employees, was a matter dependent on the will of the state. It could make the grant of the privilege conditional upon the payment of a license tax, and fix the sum according to the amount of the authorized capital of the corporation. The absolute power of exclusion includes the right to allow a conditional and restricted exercise of its corporate powers within the state. License and deposit.—A state statute which enacts that no insurance company not incorporated under the laws of the state passing the statute, shall carry on its business within the state without previously obtaining a license for that purpose; and that it shall not receive such license until it has deposited, with the treasurer of the state, bonds of a specified character to an amount varying from thirty to fifty thousand dollars, according to the extent of the capital employed, is not in conflict with that clause of the constitution of the United States which declares that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states," nor with the clause which declares that congress shall have power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states." Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357. See, also, Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 539, 24 L. Ed. 148.

The case of Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. Ed. 357, affirmed and applied to a case where the state by certain statutes authorized the state officers to grant to foreign insurance companies, upon complying with certain terms, a license to transact the business of insurance within the state, and then, by other statutes incorporating cities, made it obligatory on such foreign companies transacting business within those cities to pay them a pro rata on all their premiums, and declaring it unlawful in the companies otherwise to do business in them, authorized those cities to sue and recover it from the companies for the city's use. Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. 410, 19 L. Ed. 972. See the title INSURANCE.

"In Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297, conditions upon a foreign corporation were considered, and a statute of California sustained, making it a misdemeanor for a person in that state to procure insurance for a resident in the state from an insurance company not incorporated under its laws, and which had not filed a bond required by the law of the state." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 46, 44 L. Ed. 657.

License and tax distinguished.—A license imposed by a municipal corporation upon a foreign corporation for the privilege of doing a purely city business, authority to impose same being conferred by state statute, is not a condition upon which the right to do business depends, but is a tax, as shown by the case of Home Ins. Co. v. City Council, 93 U. S. 116, 122, 23 L. Ed. 825, where it was held, citing License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 462, 18 L. Ed. 497, that the license in question must be regarded as nothing more than a tax; and that the license, when issued, was only a receipt for the tax, and not a grant of an authority to conduct business on condition of paying the license. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Charleston, 153 U. S. 692, 695, 38 L. Ed. 871. See, also, the titles LICENSES; TAXATION.

Any doing of business sufficient.—And merely doing a portion of its business in the state subjects it to the taxing power of the state, and an admission, in an answer in equity of the foreign corporation, that it did carry on business in the state, is conclusive on the corporation. A condition that it shall accept as sufficient the service of process on its agents or persons specially designated, in actions and suits against it, may be express or implied, and assent thereto may be presumed from doing business in the state under such a requirement. St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 356, 27 L. Ed. 222. See, also, Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 21, 51 L. Ed. 345; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. It may be admitted that any state may by its laws require, as a condition precedent to the right of a corporation to be organized, or to transact business, within its territory, that it shall appoint an agent there on whom process may be served; or even that every stockholder in the corporation shall appoint an agent upon whom, or designate a domicile at which, service may be made within the state, and that, upon his failure to make such appointment or designation, the service may be made upon a certain public officer, and that judgment rendered against the corporation after such service shall bind the stockholders, whether within or without the state. In such cases, the service is held binding because the corporation, or the stockholders, or both, as the case may be, must be taken to have consented that such service within the state shall be sufficient and binding; and no individual is bound by the proceedings who is not a stockholder. Wilson v. Seligman, 144 U. S. 41, 45, 36 L. Ed. 338, citing Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 24 L. Ed. 853; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 735, 24 L. Ed. 565.

Where the state puts all nonresident domestic corporations, which elect to have their places of business and works outside of the state, and all foreign corporations coming into the state, on the same footing in respect of the service of process, and the law operates on all these alike, such a classification is reasonable and not open to constitutional objection. St. Mary's Franco-American Petroleum Co. v. West Virginia, 203 U. S. 183, 191, 51 L. Ed. 144, citing Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 563, 43 L. 36. Must be reasonable.—Such condition must not, however, encroach upon that principle of natural justice which requires notice of a suit to a party before he can be bound by it. It must be reasonable, and the service provided for should be only upon such agents as may be properly deemed representatives of the foreign corporation. The decision of this court in Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451, sustains these views. St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 356, 27 L. Ed. 222.

As the suit in the Pennsylvania court was upon a contract, a personal judgment against a foreign corporation, only upon notice to the insurance commissioner, without any legal notice to the defendant association and without its having appeared in person, or by attorney or by agent in the suit, is void as wanting in due process of law. Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 23, 51 L. Ed. 345.

37. Filing stipulation.—Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 21, 51 L. Ed. 345; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co., 139 U. S. 223, 35 L. Ed. 154.

"Undoubtedly, it was competent for Pennsylvania to declare that no insurance corporation should transact business within its limits without filing the written stipulation specified in its statute. Ed. 297, and authorities cited; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 45, 44 L. Ed. 657." Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 21, 51 L. Ed. 345. See the title INSURANCE.

An affirmative provision requiring the filing by a foreign corporation, with the secretary of state, of a copy of its articles of incorporation, and of an authority for the service of process upon a designated officer or agent in the state, might not be an unreasonable or objectionable requirement, if standing alone, but it should not be coupled with an illegal stipulation. Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 197, 30 L. Ed. 915. See the title SUMMONS AND PROCESS.

38. Fee requirement.—Nor does the replied with by designating the "general manager" as such agent residing at its principal place of business, without giving his name.[39] But a single act or contract does not constitute carrying on business within the state under such a statute;[40] nor a transaction coming within the definition of commerce between the states.[41]

d. Consent to Be Sued.—See post "Liability to Suit," III, B. One of the conditions upon which a foreign corporation may be admitted to do business within a state, is, that it consent to be used in its courts.[42]

e. Condition against Removal of Actions to Federal Courts.—A state may require a foreign corporation doing business therein by its sufferance, to forego its right to resort to the federal courts, under penalty of revocation of its license if it resorts to such courts,[43] although the requirement of an agreement to abstain from resort to such courts, as a condition precedent to admission to do quirement of the payment of ten dollars to the auditor for the use of the state, as a fee for such service, amount to a taking of property without due process, or an unjust discrimination. St. Mary's Franco-American Petroleum Co. v. West Virginia, 203 U. S. 183, 192, 51 L. Ed. 144.

39. General manager as agent.—The death or resignation of the incumbent would not long interfere with the bringing of suits against the corporation. Had there been, when the certificate was filed, no such officer of the corporation as a general manager, there would have been ground to contend that it had not performed the condition essential to its authority to do business in the state. Goodwin v. Colorado Mortgage Investment Co., 110 U. S. 1, 6, 28 L. Ed. 47.

40. What constitutes doing business in state.—A constitutional provision forbidding foreign corporations to carry on business in the state unless they have one or more known places of business within the state, and resident agents upon whom process may be served, contemplates some continuity of transactions, and does not refer to a single act or contract. Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 733, 28 L. Ed. 1137.

And it was held in Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 197 U. S. 407, 415, 49 L. Ed. 810, that a fire insurance company which issues its policies upon real estate and personal property situated in another state is as much engaged in its business when its agents are there under its authority adjusting the losses covered by its policies as it is when engaged in making contracts to take such risks. See the title INSURANCE.

But under the state decisions of Alabama, any act in the exercise of corporate functions is forbidden to a foreign corporation not complying with the law. The taking of a note and mortgage for a loan, by a foreign building and loan association, held to constitute a doing of business in the exercise of corporate functions, regardless of the form and terms of the papers, where the loan was negotiated and carried into effect in Alabama. Chattanooga Nat. Bldg., etc., Ass'n v. Denson, 189 U. S. 408, 47 L. Ed. 870. See, also, ante, "Discretion of Legislature," II, A, 4, a; post, "Effect of Noncompliance with Terms," II, A, 5.

In Board of Trade v. Hammond Elevator Co., 198 U. S. 424, 49 L. Ed. 1111, it was held that the evidence showed that there was a doing of business within the state. See the title SUMMONS AND PROCESS.

41. Interstate commerce.—Where a merchant doing business in Alabama made a note to a Tennessee firm to which he was indebted and sent the note to Tennessee, where it was discounted by a corporation which had succeeded to the firm, such discount there by the Tennessee corporation did not constitute a carrying on of business in Alabama by such foreign corporation without a known place of business and authorized agent therein, contrary to § 2, art. 14, of the Alabama Constitution, and the Act of 1886-7, pp. 102, 104, as they did not and could not interfere with matters of commerce between the states and do not apply to such transactions as this. business, is illegal, and such agreement void.[44]

f. Filing Charter.—A state may require of foreign corporations as a condition precedent to doing business within it, the filing of a copy of the charter with Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 199, 30 L. Ed. 915; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 254, 43 L. Ed. 432, and Dayton Coal, etc., Co. v. Barton, 183 U. S. 23, 25, 46 L. Ed. 61, and said to be immaterial there to discuss it.

The legislature of Wisconsin enacted that if any foreign insurance company transferred a suit brought against it from the state courts to the federal courts, the secretary of state should revoke and cancel its license to do business within the state. An injunction to restrain him from so doing, because such a transfer is made, cannot be sustained. The suggestion that the intent of the legislature is to accomplish an illegal result, to wit, the prevention of a resort to the federal courts, is not accurate. The effect of this decision is that the company must forego such resort, or cease its business in the state. The latter result is here accomplished. Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148.

The corporation, said the court, in Railroad Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. Ed. 354, "cannot migrate, but may exercise its authority in a foreign territory upon such conditions as may be prescribed by the law of the place. One of these conditions may be that it shall consent to be sued there. If it do business there, it will be presumed to have assented, and will be bound accordingly." Railway Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 285, 20 L. Ed. 571; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 376, 24 L. Ed. 853; Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 22, 51 L. Ed. 345.

It was held in Railroad Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. Ed. 354, that a foreign corporation may be suable in the District of Columbia where it has in effect consented to be sued there, in consideration of its being permitted by congress to exercise therein its corporate powers and privileges. Then, after an examination of the statute granting the right to extend the road, it was said (p. 84): "We entertain no doubt that it made the company liable to suit where this suit was brought, in all respects as if it had been an independent corporation of the same locality." This language was cited with approbation, and adopted as a correct exposition of the law by Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, in Railway Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 20 L. Ed. 571. See, also, Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 376, 24 L. Ed. 853. See, also, post, "Liability to Suit," III, B.

It was said in Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 199, 30 L. Ed. 915, that the point of the decision in the Doyle case seems to have been that, as the state had granted the license, its officers would not be restrained by injunction, by a court of the United States, from withdrawing it. All that there is in the case beyond this, and all that is said in the opinion which appears to be in conflict with the adjudication in Insurance Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. Ed. 365, must be regarded as not in judgment.

But the quære in the Cable case is answered in the negative by the decision of the court in Security Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Prewitt, 202 U. S. 246, 255, 50 L. Ed. 1013, reaffirming the Doyle case and distinguishing the Barron case.

44. As condition precedent.—Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148.

The court reaffirms the decision in Insurance Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. Ed. 365, that an agreement to abstain in all cases from resorting to the courts of the United States is void as against public policy, and that a statute of Wisconsin, requiring such an agreement, is in conflict with the constitution of the United States. Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148. See, also, Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 207, 36 L. Ed. 943; Cable v. United States Life Ins. Co., 191 U. A corporation is a citizen of the state by which it is created, and in which its principal place of business is situated, so far as its right to sue and be sued in the federal courts is concerned, and within the clause of the constitution extending the jurisdiction of the federal courts to controversies between citizens of different states. The right to remove a cause into the federal courts upon the same terms and under like circumstances as to foreign corporations as citizens, is a right guaranteed to it by the constitution of the United States, and a state statute which requires of a foreign corporation, as a condition precedent to the right to transact business within the state, a stipulation that it would not remove into the federal court certain suits, which it would follow, by the laws of the United States, it otherwise had a right to remove, is unconstitutional and void. And if this invalid provision is not separable from the remainder, the whole is void. Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 30 L. Ed. 915, approving Insurance Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. Ed. 365, distinguishing Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed.

the secretary of state, or other officer, and also the payment of a fee therefor.[45]

5. Effect of Noncompliance with Terms.—As to removal of actions, see ante, "Condition against Removal of Actions to Federal Courts," II, A, 4, e. Unless the conditions imposed by a state upon the doing of business by foreign corporations within its borders be complied with, the prohibition may be absolute.[46]

Imposition of Personal Liability.—A state may validly impose a personal liability upon the officers and agents of foreign corporations doing business therein without complying with its lawful requirements.[47]

Effect on Contracts.—The highest court of a state (Alabama) having held that any act in the exercise of corporate functions is forbidden to a foreign corporation which has not complied with the constitution and statute as to admission, and that the contracts hence resulting are illegal and cannot be enforced in the courts, the federal court should follow it.[48]

45. Filing copy of charter.—Diamond Glue Co. v. United States Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, 47 L. Ed. 328.

As to effect of noncompliance, see post, "Power to Sue," III, A.

The validity of such a statute is not affected by the fact that it applied to partnerships as well as corporations, if that part of it was void, as it was separable and independent. Diamond Glue Co. v. United States Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, 617, 47 L. Ed. 328.

As to proof of filing, see the title CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, pp. 767, 768.

"Doing business."—A contract by which it was agreed that a foreign corporation should supervise the plans for a glue factory in Wisconsin, to be built by the other party on a site to be selected within sixty days; that it should have the management of the manufacturing in the same and should operate it, etc., and should furnish and keep it supplied with a superintendent, etc., called for a carrying on of business in Wisconsin by the plaintiff at a time when to carry it on without filing a copy of the plaintiff's charter was forbidden by the laws of the state. Diamond Glue Co. v. United States Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, 613, 47 L. Ed. 328. See Connecticut Mut. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 611, 43 L. Ed. 569.

A prohibition of the doing of business after a statute goes into effect is not retroactive with regard to that business, even though the business be done in pursuance of an earlier contract, and the statute does not impair the obligation of a contract made after its enactment but before it went into effect. Diamond Glue Co. v. United States Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, 614, 47 L. Ed. 328.

46. In general.—The state can impose such conditions as it pleases upon the doing of any business by foreign companies within its borders, and unless the conditions be complied with the prohibition may be absolute. The cases upon this subject are cited in the opinion of the court in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297. Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 583, 41 L. Ed. 832.

Where a state statute provides for the forfeiture of the permit of a foreign corporation which may violate any of the provisions of the statute, and the act in force when the appellant entered the state informed it that for a violation of its terms the permit to do business here would be forfeited, this provision of the law was as much a part of the obligation, and as binding upon the corporation, as if it had been expressly made part of the permit. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 47, 44 L. Ed. 657.

The Texas statute of 1889, so providing, was a condition upon the plaintiff in error within the power of the state to impose, and whatever its limitations were upon the power of contracting, whatever its discriminations were, they became conditions of the permit and were accepted with it, and the statute was not repealed by the act of 1895. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 47, 44 L. Ed. 657.

47. Personal liability.—The provisions of the constitution and statutes of the state of Colorado, that no foreign corporation should do business in the state without having a known place of business and a resident agent upon whom process might be served, and that all officers and agents of such corporations doing business within the state without having complied with the requirements of the state constitution and statutes should be personally liable, jointly and severally, upon all contracts entered into on behalf of such corporation, were held to be valid so far as they did not directly affect foreign or interstate commerce. Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 288, 33 L. Ed. 317; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 732, 28 L. Ed. 1137.

Conveyance of Property.—But a conveyance of land to the corporation in the state in which it is so doing business, is not necessarily invalid.[49]

Effect on Right to Sue.—See post, "Power to Sue," III, A.

6. Presumption and Effect of Acceptance of Terms.—The acceptance by a foreign corporation of the terms prescribed by the law of the state may be presumed from the fact of its doing business there, and it will be bound ac-

Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. Ed. 317, was but the interpretation of a particular statute, and there is not a word in it which denies or questions the power of a state to make void the contracts of a foreign corporation which is doing business in the state in violation of its laws. Chattanooga Nat. Bldg., etc., Ass'n v. Denson, 189 U. S. 408, 416, 47 L. Ed. 870.

"It is urged by petitioner that it thought it had complied with the law of Alabama, and it was not an intentional offender against it, and, therefore, should not be 'repelled from court.' But the latter consequence has been decided to result from noncompliance with the statute, and we cannot grant an exemption from it. The statute makes no distinction between an inadvertent and a conscious violation of its provisions, and a familiar legal maxim precludes a defense based on that distinction. Nor can the payment of the license fee be urged as a justification for omitting to comply with the statute. Such payment was one condition to be performed by a foreign corporation; the designation of a known place of business and an authorized agent was another, and was of so much importance as to be enjoined by the constitution of the state." Chattanooga Nat. Bldg., etc., Ass'n v. Denson, 189 U. S. 408, 416, 47 L. Ed. 870.

Exclusion of penalty by implication.—But usually, where no penalty for noncompliance was provided, except the suspension of civil remedies in the state, none others will be implied, and the purpose will be construed to be, not to avoid contracts, but to provide effective supervision and control of the foreign corporation. Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. Ed. 317; Allen v. Alleghany Co., 196 U. S. 458, 465, 49 L. Ed. 551.

No penalty is imposed upon foreign corporations by Rev. Stat. of Arisona (1887) for failure to file the appointment of an agent under § 348, though in the next section, 349, it is declared that "every act done by it, prior to the filing thereof, shall be utterly void," and the only disability which such failure entails is its incompetence to enforce its rights by suit. Henrietta Min., etc., Co. v. Johnson, 173 U. S. 221, 224, 43 L. Ed. 675.

Time of making of contract.—Where, by the clear terms of a state statute, the invalidity of a contract of a foreign corporation doing business within the state without complying with its provisions, does not depend upon the place where, or the time when, it is to be performed, but upon its being "made in this state after Jan. 1, 1899," a contract made before that date is valid although to be performed afterwards; and a contract made elsewhere than in the state is valid, although to be performed in the state. Holder v. Aultman, 169 U. S. 81, 89, 42 L. Ed. 669.

Where a contract of a foreign corporation, after being drawn up and signed by its local agent in the state, and assented to and signed by the other party in the state, contained a distinct stipulation that it was not to be valid unless not only countersigned by the corporation's general manager in that state, but also approved at its principal office in its home state, the contract became a valid and binding one between the parties for the first time when it was so approved at such principle home office. It cannot be considered as "made" within the meaning of the statute in question, at any earlier time or other place, so as to be avoided thereby. Holder v. Aultman, 169 U. S. 81, 91, 42 L. Ed. 669.

49. Acquisition of land.—Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 283, 288, 33 L. Ed. 317.

The constitution of Colorado relating to foreign corporations declares that "no foreign corporation shall do any business in this state without having one or more known places of business, and an authorized agent or agents in the same, upon whom process may be served." Art. XV, § 10. And it is provided by statute that foreign corporations shall, before they are authorized or permitted to do any business in Colorado, take certain steps, and no foreign or domestic corporation established or maintained in any way for pecuniary profit of its stockholders or members shall purchase or hold real estate in the state, except as provided for in this act. Thus the acquisition of real estate is not prohibited by these provisions, and they do not declare absolutely or wholly void, as to all persons, and for every purpose, a conveyance of real estate to a foreign corporation which has not previously done what is required before it can rightfully carry on business in the state. Nor do they declare that the title to such property shall remain in the grantor, despite his conveyance. The only penalty imposed by the statutes of Colorado upon a foreign corporation carrying on business in the state before acquiring the right to do so, being a personal liability upon cordingly.[50] And where a corporation entered a state as vested with the corporate power to do so, and contracted as in the possession of the power as a corporation existing in and under the laws of the state, and the state appears to have been content, the contract, not being necessarily beyond the scope of the powers of the corporation, must, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be deemed valid.[51]

7. Revocability of License and Change of Terms.—Revocability.—A license to a foreign corporation to enter a state does not involve a permanent right to remain. Subject to the laws and constitution of the United States, full power and control over its territories, its citizens, and its business, belong to the officers, agents and stockholders, that must be presumed exclusive of all others. Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 289, 33 L. Ed. 317. See, also, Allen v. Alleghany Co., 196 U. S. 458, 464, 49 L. Ed. 551.

Precisely what was meant by the words "except as provided for in this act," is difficult to tell, since the act does not indicate any particular mode in which a foreign corporation may acquire real estate in Colorado. But perhaps the reasonable interpretation of the statute is that a foreign corporation shall not purchase or hold real estate in Colorado, for purposes of its business, until it first acquires, in the mode prescribed by the local law, the right to do business in that state. Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 288, 33 L. Ed. 317.

One who asserts title under a quitclaim deed from the corporation's grantor, made after the property had passed, by the sale under the deed of trust, from the corporation, cannot, in law, occupy any better position than the original grantor would have done if he had himself brought this action. If the legislature had intended to declare that no title should pass under a conveyance to a foreign corporation purchasing real estate before it acquires the right to engage in business in the state, and that such a conveyance should be an absolute nullity as between the grantor and grantee, leaving the grantor to deal with the property as if he had never sold it, that intention would have been clearly manifested. Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 289, 33 L. Ed. 317.

See quære as to the validity and force of the provisions of the law of congress requiring a foreign corporation to take certain steps before doing business in a territory (congress having permitted corporations, whether formed within or without that territory, to explore for and hold mining claims on the public domain. McKinley v. Wheeler, 130 U. S. 630, 32 L. Ed. 1048), or whether, if they were valid, any parties except the government of the territory can allege a disregard of them, to defeat the title of the corporation to its property (Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. Ed. 317). It is sufficient in this case to say that such incompetency cannot be considered unless set up in the pleadings in the court below. A failure to comply with the provision of the law will not be presumed in the absence of any allegation on the subject. The objection cannot be urged for the first time in the federal supreme court. Dahl v. Montana Copper Co., 132 U. S. 264, 266, 33 L. Ed. 325. See post, "To Acquire, Hold and Transfer Property," II, B, 2.

50. Presumptive acceptance of terms.—Railway Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 285, 20 L. Ed. 571; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. Ed. 222. See, also, Philadelphia Fire Ass'n v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 123, 30 L. Ed. 342, per Harlan, J., dissenting; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 24 L. Ed. 853; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 608, 37 L. Ed. 292; Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 38 L. Ed. 773; Merchants Heat, etc., Co. v. Clow, 204 U. S. 286, 289, 51 L. Ed. 488; Old Wayne Mut. S. 612, 50 L. Ed. 620; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 47 L. Ed. 987.

Whatever the limitations on the power of contracting, whatever the discriminations, contained in a statute imposing conditions on the doing of business by a foreign corporation within the state, they are conditions of the permit and were accepted with it. Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Warren, 181 U. S. 73, 76, 45 L. Ed. 755; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 44 L. Ed. 657; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 397, 44 L. Ed. 1116.

But while the highest considerations of public policy demand that a foreign corporation, entering a state in defiance of a statute which lawfully prescribes the terms upon which it may exert its powers there, should be held to have assented to such terms as to business there transacted by it, it would be going very far to imply such assent as to business transacted in another state, although citizens of the former state may be interested in such business, and it is not implied. Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 22, 51 L. Ed. 345.

"The power of the state as to foreign corporations does not depend upon their being outside of its jurisdiction. Those within the jurisdiction, in such sense as they ever can be said to be within it, do not acquire a right not to be turned out except by general laws. A single foreign corporation, especially one unique in character, like the national council of a beneficial organization, might be expelled from a state by a special act of the legislature. It equally could be restricted in the more limited way. National Council U. A. M. v. States Council, 203 U. S. 151, 163, 51 L. Ed. 132, citing Security Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Prewitt, 202 U. S. 246, 50 L. Ed. 1013.

53. Same.—Statutes prescribing the terms upon which a foreign corporation may do business in a state, reflect and execute the general policy of the state upon matters of public interest, and each subsequent legislature has equal power to legislate upon the same subject. The legislature has power at any time to repeal or modify the act granting such permission, making proper provision when necessary in regard to the rights of property of the company already acquired, and protecting such rights from any illegal interference or injury. Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 42 L. Ed. 553. "As these statutes involve public interests, legislation regarding them are necessarily public laws, and as stated in Newton v. Commissioners, 100 U. S. 548, 559, 25 L. Ed. 710: 'Every succeeding legislature possesses the same jurisdiction and power with respect to them as its predecessors. The latter have the same power of repeal and modification which the former had of enactment, neither more nor less. All occupy, in this respect, a footing of perfect equality. This must necessarily be so in the nature of things. It is vital to the public welfare that each one should be able at all times to do whatever the varying circumstances and present exigencies touching the subject involved may require. A different result would be fraught with evil.'" Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 621, 43 L. Ed. 569, reaffirmed in Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Birch, 200 U. As to appointment of resident agent.—When the legislature of a state therefore permitted a foreign company to do business within the state on appointing an agent therein upon whom process might be served, and when in pursuance of such provisions the company entered the state and appointed the agent, no contract was thereby created which would prevent the state from thereafter passing another statute in regard to service of process, and making such statute applicable to a company already doing business in the state. In other words, no contract was created by the fact that the company availed itself of the permission to do business within the state under the provisions of the first act. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 622, 43 L. Ed. 569.

56. License and contract distinguished.—American Smelting, etc., Co. v. Colorado, 204 U. S. 103, 111, 51 L. Ed. 393.

The state statute in this case, § 499 (Mills Annotated Statutes of Colorado), after making provision for the performance of certain conditions by a foreign corporation entering the state, continued: "and such corporations shall be subject to all the liabilities, restrictions and duties which are or may be imposed upon corporations of like character organized under the general laws of this state, and shall have no other or greater powers." A filing fee was required, proportionate to the capital stock, but no annual license tax was then provided for. American Smelting, etc., Co. v. Colorado, 204 U. S. 103, 105, 51 L. Ed. 393.

"A provision in a statute of this nature subjecting a foreign corporation to all the liabilities, etc., of a domestic one of like character must mean that it shall not be subjected to any greater liabilities than are imposed upon such domestic corporation. The power to impose different liabilities was with the state at the outset. It could make them greater or less than in case of a domestic corporation, or it could make them the same. Having the general power to do as it pleased, when it enacted that the foreign corporation upon coming in the state should be subjected to all the liabilities of domestic corporations, it amounted to the same thing as if the statute has said the foreign corporation should be subjected to the same liabilities. In other words the liabilities, restrictions and duties imposed upon domestic corporations constitute the measure and limit of the liabilities, restrictions and duties which might thereafter be imposed upon the corporation thus admitted to do business in the state. It was not a mere license to come in the state and do business therein upon payment of a sum named, liable to be revoked or the sum increased at the pleasure of the state, without further limitation. It was a clear contract that the liabilities, etc., should be the same as the domestic corporation, and the same treatment in that regard should be measured out to both. If it were desired to increase the liabilities of the foreign, it could only be done by increasing those of the domestic, corporation at the same time and to the same extent." American Smelting, etc., Co. v. Colorado, 204 U. S. 103, 113, 51 L. Ed. 393.

By the admission of the foreign corporation into the state, with its rights to do business therein by the payment of the amount of money required for such purpose under the then existing law, a contract between the state and itself was thereby made that it should be permitted to remain therein during the term of life which the state by law allowed to corporations created by it (which was twenty years), without being again subjected to further exaction of money for what it had once paid for, viz, the right to remain and transact business in that state. Undoubtedly, if the corporation violated the laws of the state properly applicable to it, or if otherwise it gave just cause for its expulsion, it could not insist upon such a contract as a defense. American Smelting, etc., Co. v. Colorado, 204 U. S. 103, 111, 51 L. Ed. 393.

"Nor is this a case where the power given by the state constitution to the general assembly to alter, amend or annul a charter is applicable. The act does not alter the charter or annul or amend it. It simply increases the taxation which up to the time of its enactment had been imposed on all foreign corporations doing business in the state." American Smelting, etc., Co. v. Colorado, 204 U. S. 103, 114, 51 L. Ed. 393.

See, however, Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 620, 43 L. Ed. 569, where the act prescribing the terms as to appointment of agent for service of process, etc., was held to create no contract on acceptance by the foreign corporation, but to constitute a mere license given by the state, which it was entirely competent to change at any time.

government.[57] The state has the clear right to regulate its own creations, and, a fortiori, foreign corporations permitted to transact business within its borders.[58] The power to exclude embraces the power to regulate, to enact and enforce all legislation in regard to things done within the territory of the state which may be directly or incidentally requisite in order to render the enforcement of the conceded power efficacious to the fullest extent, subject always, of course, to the paramount authority of the constitution of the United States.[59] But the regulations must be reasonable.[60]

Conveying and Encumbering Property.—But when a corporation sells or encumbers its property, incurs debts or gives securities, it does business, and a statute regulating such transactions does not regulate the internal affairs of the corporation. And it is certainly within the power of a state to say what reme-

A private corporation of another state has no right to do business in Pennsylvania without the permission of that state, and it is, therefore, subject at all times to such reasonable regulations as may be prescribed by Pennsylvania, whether those regulations relate to taxation or to the business or property of the company in that commonwealth. 60. Reasonableness.—But it is said that while regulations prescribed after the construction of the road, applicable to railroad companies doing business in the state, should be deemed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when those acts were passed, and, therefore, not in violation of the agreement under which the company entered the state for the purpose of transacting business there, and that it should not be assumed that the state intended to surrender or bargain away its authority to establish such regulations, such regulations must be reasonable. To compel a foreign corporation to act, in the state of its creation, as an assessor and collector of taxes due in another state from residents of that state, is unreasonable. New York, etc., R. If one state in order to collect taxes assessed upon bonds issued by its own corporations and held by its resident citizens, could require those corporations to deduct the required amount from the interest when the coupons are presented by holders known, at the time by the corporation paying the interest, to be residents of that state—and it may be admitted, in this case, that the state, if not restrained by a valid contract to which it was a party, could establish such a regulation—it does not follow that the state may impose upon foreign corporations, because of their doing business in that state with its permission given for a valuable consideration, any duty in respect to the mode in which they shall perform their obligations in other states. B. Powers—1. In General.—Dependent on Laws of State Where Exercised.—Every power which a corporation exercises in another state depends for its validity upon the laws of the sovereignty in which it was exercised, and a corporation can make no valid contract, without the sanction, express or implied, of such sovereignty, unless a case should be presented in which the right claimed by the corporation should appear to be secured by the constitution of the United States.[62] But if its laws or policy do not forbid, such powers may be freely exercised.[63] A contrary public policy must be expressed in some affirmative way, and is not to be inferred from silence.[64]

Ed. 117, the corporations which complained of the tax assessed, under a Pennsylvania statute, upon their loans held by residents of Pennsylvania, were Pennsylvania corporations. No question arose in either of those cases as to the authority of Pennsylvania to make a corporation of another state an assessor or collector of taxes assessed by or under the authority of Pennsylvania against residents of Pennsylvania. Nor does the present case involve any question as to the extent to which the state may tax property within its limits belonging to the railroad company. New York, etc., R. 61. Mode of conveying property.—Williams v. Gaylord, 186 U. S. 157, 165, 46 L. Ed. 1102.

There is no doubt of the power of the state to so prescribe the mode of ratification by the stockholders of a corporate mortgage, not only from its power over the manner of conveyance and the disposition of property situated within the state, but from its power over foreign corporations doing business within the state. Castner v. Coffman, 178 U. S. 168, 176, 44 L. Ed. 1021; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297. Nor can we contest that power though we might, if we were permitted to exercise an independent judgment, construe the statute as only illustrative and not as exhaustive of the manner of ratification. Williams v. Gaylord, 186 U. S. 157, 167, 46 L. Ed. 1102. See the title MORTGAGES AND DEEDS OF TRUST.

62. Laws of state controlling.—Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 129, 10 L. Ed. 382; Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 588, 10 L. Ed. 274. See, also, Holder v. Aultman, 169 U. S. 81, 89, 42 L. Ed. 669. And see post, "Effect of Noncompliance with Terms," II, A, 5

"By the laws of Alabama, a contract made in that state by the agents of a corporation created by the law of another state is valid. This point was fully considered and decided in the case of the Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. Ed. 274, and cannot now be considered as open for argument in this court." Tombigbee R. Co. v. Kneeland, 4 How. 16, 17, 11 L. Ed. 855.

63. Comity rule.—There is no reason for excluding from the protection of the law the contracts of foreign corporations, when they are not contrary to the known policy of the state nor injurious to its interest; it is nothing more than the admission of the existence of an artificial person, created by the law of another state, and clothed with the power of making certain contracts; it is but the usual comity of recognizing the laws of another state. Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Ruyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 10 L. Ed. 382; Pinney v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 144, 149, 46 L. Ed. 125. See ante, "General Rule of Comity," II, A, 3.

The prohibition of certain specified contracts by foreign corporations, contained in the state laws, is, by necessary implication, an admission that other contracts may be made by foreign corporations within the state, and that no legislative permission is necessary to give the validity. Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 591, 10 L. Ed. 274. See ante, "Existence Out of State Granting Charter, and Comity Rule," II, A, where this question was necessarily treated.

64. Prohibition must be express.—"If the policy of the state or territory does not permit the business of the foreign corporation in its limits, or allow the corporation to acquire or hold real property, it must be expressed in some affirmative way; it cannot be inferred from the fact that its legislature has made no provision for the formation of similar corporations, or allows corporations to be formed only by general law. Telegraph companies did business in several states before their legislatures had created or authorized the creation of similar corporations; and numerous corporations existing by special charter in one state are now engaged, without question, in business in states where the creation of corporations by special enactment is forbidden." Cowell v. Springs Co., 100 U. S. 55, 59, 25 L. Ed.

Limited by Incorporating Act.—The limitation of the powers of a domestic corporation, both in extent and manner of execution, to those conferred by the incorporating act, has even a broader application to foreign corporations.[65]

Extraterritorial Action of Directors.—See the title OFFICERS AND AGENTS OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS.

Repeal of Prohibition against Taking Realty Mortgage as Impairment of Contract or Vested Right.—See the titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 4, p. 418; IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

2. TO ACQUIRE, HOLD, AND TRANSFER PROPERTY.—In General.—Foreign corporations are, by general comity, permitted to acquire, hold and transfer property equally with individuals.[66]

Land.—A corporation may hold land in another territory so long as the local authorities do not object.[67]

Rule of construction.—When a court is called upon to declare that contracts entered into within the state by a foreign corporation are void, upon the ground that they conflict with the policy of the state, the line of that policy should be very clear and distinct, to justify the court in sustaining the defense. Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 597, 10 L. Ed. 274. See ante, "Limitations," II, A, 3, b.

Ed. 575, where it is said that trusts of the same kind as those permitted to domestic corporations, will not be interferred with, although to be carried out in a foreign state by a foreign corporation in regard to property within the District of Columbia.

"The general power of a corporation to hold property in states other than the one which incorporated it (in the absence of statutory prohibition in such states), is firmly established." United Lines Tel. Co. v. Boston Safe Deposit, etc., Co., 147 U. S. 431, 447, 37 L. Ed. 231.

The Code of Louisiana in 1853, declared "that all persons may dispose of or receive by donations, inter vivos or mortis causa, except such as the law declares expressly incapable." C. C., 1456. There is no distinction between corporations and natural persons in the power to receive by donation, nor do we find any discrimination between domestic and foreign corporations, except, perhaps in a single article. "Donations may be made in favor of a stranger, when the laws of his country do not prohibit similar dispositions in favor of a citizen of his state." C. C., 1477. Semble, that this article does not apply to all the citizens or corporations of the states of the Union. The constitutional relations between the citizens of the different states are those of equality, in reference to the subject of this article. McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. 367, 413, 14 L. Ed. 732, citing Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 520, 10 L. Ed. 274.

Thus a New York corporation created for the express purpose of purchasing and holding coal lands in the state of Pennsylvania can only hold the lands so purchased by and with the consent, express or implied, of the state of Pennsylvania. Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 130, 10 L. Ed. 382, cited approvingly in McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. 367, 413, 14 L. Ed. 732.

But a foreign corporation, forbidden by the laws of the state creating it, to acquire lands there, by devise, could not, by that mode, take lands in Illinois, in the absence of a statute of that state assenting thereto. Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352, 359, 25 L. Ed. 888.

See Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. Pawlett, 4 Pet. 480, 7 L. Ed. 927, where it was held that in the record, there was abundance to establish the right of the corporation to hold the land in controversy; it was given to them by the royal charter of 1761, which created the town of Pawlet; the society was named among the grantees, as "the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts," to whom one share was given. This was a plain recognition by the crown of the existence of the corporation, and

Effect of Division of Country.—The property rights of a British corporation in America were unaffected by the Revolution, where the rights of an individual in the same circumstances would have been unaffected.[68]

Right of Objection.—But if there is any defect of power in a foreign corporation to acquire real estate, only the state can raise the question.[69]

III. Actions and Suits by and against.

In federal courts, see the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 861.

A. Power to Sue.—While a state has the power to restrict the right of a foreign corporation to sue in its courts,[70] and it is plain that the New York restriction upon suits by foreign corporations against foreign corporations is not affected by either § 1 or §. 2 of Article IV,[71] unless so restricted a foreign corporation may sue in the courts of a state.[72] Again, a corporation, created by the

of its capacity to take; it would confer the power to take the land, even if it had not previously existed.

69. State alone can object.—"It is not necessary to inquire into the right of the plaintiff as a foreign corporation to take and hold title to real estate in Colorado, a question which, in some of its aspects, was before this court in the case of Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 33 L. Ed. 317, for if, by so doing, any laws of the state are violated, the state is the one to challenge the act (Delvin on Deeds, § 127, and cases cited in note), and it does not lie in the mouth of the agent of the corporation to raise the question." Seymour v. Slide, etc., Gold Mines, 153 U. S. 523, 525, 38 L. Ed. 807. See the title CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 621.

Where land in Illinois was conveyed to a New York corporation, the children and heirs at law of the grantor, who file their bill to set aside the conveyance upon the ground that it was against the public policy of Illinois, cannot raise the question that the grantee acquired a larger quantity of lands than its charter allowed. Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352, 25 L. Ed. 888, distinguishing Carroll v. City of East St. Louis, 67 Ill. 568 and Starkweather v. American Bible Society, 72 Id. 50.

The supreme court of Pennsylvania having decided, that a corporation has, in that state, a right to purchase, hold and convey land, until some act is done by the government, according to its own laws, to vest the estate in itself, the estate may remain in a corporation so purchasing or holding lands; but such estate is defeasible by the commonwealth. This being the law of Pennsylvania, it must govern in a case where land in Pennsylvania had been purchased by a corporation created by the legislature of New York, for the purpose of supplying coal from Pennsylvania to the city of New York. Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch 603, 621, 3 L. Ed. 453, cited with approbation. Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 10 L. Ed. 382.

As to discrimination against nonresidents, see Chemung Canal Bank v. Lowery, 93 U. S. 72, 23 L. Ed. 806." Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co. No. 1, 191 U. S. 373, 375, 48 L. Article IV, § 1, of the federal constitution establishes a rule of evidence rather than of jurisdiction. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 291, 32 L. Ed. 239; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 36, 47 L. Ed. 366. The constitution does not require the state of New York to give jurisdiction to the supreme court against its will. If the plaintiff can find a court into which it has a right to come, then the effect of the judgment is fixed by the constitution and the act in pursuance of it which congress has passed. Rev. Stat., § 905. But the constitution does not require the state to provide such a court. Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co. No. 1, 191 U. S. 373, 374, 48 L. Ed. 225. laws of another state, can sue in Alabama, upon a contract made in that state.[73] And the right to sue may be made conditional on compliance with certain requirements as to filing a copy of the charter, etc.[74]

B. Liability to Suit.—In General.—It is well settled that a corporation of one state doing business in another is suable where its business is done, if the laws make provision to that effect. It has been so held many times.[75] This has resulted from statutes passed, to remedy the inconvenience and injustice of compelling persons dealing with foreign corporations to resort to the courts of distant states when suits against them became necessary.[76] And the liability of a

74. Failure to comply with terms.—A state statute (Wisconsin) which forbade corporations organized otherwise than under the laws of that state to transact business in the state until they should have filed a copy of their charter with the secretary of state, made a failure to comply with any of the provisions of the section subject the corporation to a fine, and provided further that every contract made by such corporation affecting the personal liability thereof or relating to property within the state before compliance with the section should be wholly void on its behalf, but should be enforceable against it. A fee of twenty-five dollars was to be paid for filing the charter. It did not impair or affect the obligation of a contract of such foreign corporation which had not complied therewith made subsequent to its taking effect and involving necessarily the transaction of business in such state; and it could not sue upon the same, but the defense of its noncompliance with the law was valid and effectual as a bar to the action. See, also, the title VENUE.

A corporation, existing only by virtue of a law of one state, cannot be deemed to pass personally beyond the limits of that state. Bank v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. Ed. 274. But it does not necessarily follow that a valid judgment could be recovered against it only in that state. A corporation may sue in a foreign state, by its attorney there; and if it fails in the suit, be subject to a judgment for costs. And so if a corporation, though in Indiana, should appoint an attorney to appear, in an action brought in Ohio, and the attorney should appear, the court would have jurisdiction to render a judgment, in all respects as obligatory as if the defendant were within the state. The inquiry is, not whether the defendant was personally within the state, but whether he, or someone authorized to act for him in reference to the suit, had notice and appeared; or, if he did not appear, whether he was bound to appear or suffer a judgment by default. "Formerly it was held that a foreign corporation could not be sued in an action for the recovery of a personal demand outside of the state by which it was chartered. The principle that a corporation must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot, as said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney, migrate to another sovereignty, coupled with the doctrine that an officer of the corporation does not carry his functions with him when he leaves his state, prevented the maintenance of personal actions against it. There was no mode of compelling its appearance in the foreign jurisdiction. Legal proceedings there against it were, therefore, necessarily confined to the disposition of such property belonging to it as could be there found; and to authorize them legislation was foreign corporation to be sued in a particular jurisdiction need not be distinctly expressed in the statutes of that jurisdiction, but may be implied from a grant of authority in those statutes to carry on its business there.[77]

Effect of Withdrawal or Expulsion.—And the withdrawal of the corporation from the state, accompanied by withdrawal of the authority conferred on an officer or person in the state to accept service of process, or the involuntary cancellation of its license to do business in the state, will not prevent it from being sued in the state courts, on causes of action arising out of its business therein, after such withdrawal or ouster, and service on such officer or person is sufficient.[78]

Personal Judgment.—But in a suit where no property of a corporation is within the state, and the judgment sought is a personal one, it is a material inquiry to ascertain whether the foreign corporation is engaged in doing business within the state.[79] necessary." St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 354, 27 L. Ed. 222.

"This doctrine of the exemption of a corporation from suit in a state other than of its creation was the cause of much inconvenience, and often of manifest injustice. * * * To meet and obviate this inconvenience and injustice, the legislatures of several states interposed, and provided for service of process on officers and agents of foreign corporations doing business therein. Whilst the theoretical and legal view, that the domicile of a corporation is only in the state where it is created, was admitted, it was perceived that when a foreign corporation sent its officers and agents into other states and opened offices, and carried on its business there, it was, in effect, as much represented by them there as in the state of its creation. As it was protected by the laws of those states, allowed to carry on its business within their borders, and to sue in their courts, it seemed only right that it should be held responsible in those courts to obligations and liabilities there incurred." St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 355, 27 L. Ed. 222.

As to character of service necessary, see ante, "Maintenance of Office, and Agent for Service of Process," II, A, 4, c. See, also, the titles, JUDGMENTS AND DECREES; SUMMONS AND PROCESS.

Appearance and effect.—See the title APPEARANCES, vol. 2, p. 429.

"The state of Michigan permits foreign corporations to transact business within her limits. Either by express enactment, as in the case of insurance companies, or by her acquiescence, they are as free to engage in all legitimate business as corporations of her own creation. Her statutes expressly provide for suits being brought by them in her courts; and for suits by attachment being brought against them in favor of residents of the state." St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 357, 27 L. Ed. 222.

In England, the liability of a foreign corporation doing business in England to be subjected to suit in those courts, by service made upon one of its principal officers residing and representing it within the realm, has been fully established by recent decisions. Barrow Steamship Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S. 100, 109, 42 L. Ed. 964.

Tennessee act construed.—"On the 29th of March, 1887, an act was passed by the legislature of Tennessee, entitled 'An act to subject foreign corporations to suit in this state' (Acts 1887, p. 386), which defendant in error contends should control here; but in Telephone Co. v. Turner, 88 Tennessee (4 Pickle) 265, it was held that this act did not apply to foreign corporations having an office and resident agent in the state, and already subject to suit, but only to such foreign corporations as engaged in business in the state without such office and agent; that it was not a limitation but an enlargement of the jurisdiction over foreign corporations; and that §§ 2831, 2832, 2833 and 2834 of the code regulated the mode in which corporations might be sued, and applied equally to domestic and foreign corporations having an office or agency and a resident local agent in the county in which suit was brought. We perceive no reason for declining to accept the conclusions of the supreme court of the state upon this subject, and the act of 1887 need not, therefore, be considered." Kansas City, etc., R. Attachment.—And the state laws usually provide for attachment in favor of residents against foreign corporations, as in Michigan.[80]

Dissolved Corporation.—No suit can be maintained against a dissolved foreign corporation, except under some special statute.[81]

Exemption from Statutes of Limitation.—See the title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS AND ADVERSE POSSESSION.

C. Jurisdiction.—Federal Circuit Courts.—Many states have provided by statute that a foreign corporation making contracts within the state shall appoint an agent residing therein, upon whom process may be served in actions upon such contracts. The federal supreme court has often held that wherever such a statute exists, service upon an agent so appointed is sufficient to support jurisdiction of an action against the foreign corporation, either in the courts of the state, or, when consistent with the acts of congress, in the courts of the United States held within the state; but it has never held the existence of such a statute to be essential to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States.[82]

D. Allegation and Proof of Incorporation.—See the titles CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 621; COURTS, vol. 4, p. 861; PLEADING; REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Proof of Incorporation.—As the statutes under which a foreign (British) corporation was incorporated were the basis of the plaintiff's corporate existence, and its right to bring this action, they must undoubtedly be proved as facts.[83]

E. Parties.—The general principle that all parties to be affected by the decision must be made parties, either actually or by representation, applies to suits against a foreign corporation.[84]

The doctrine of Pennoyer v. Neff applies, in all its force, to personal judgments of state courts against foreign corporations. IV. Insolvency, Winding Up, Dissolution and Reorganization.

A. Jurisdiction.—To Decree a Forfeiture against Foreign Corporation.—Neither the courts of this country, nor the local legislature where the lands lie, can adjudge a forfeiture of the franchises of the foreign corporation, or of its property.[85]

B. Control over Assets within Jurisdiction.—A state may, by its courts, retain within its limits the assets of a foreign corporation, in order that justice may be done to its own citizens; and, by appropriate action of its judicial tribunals, see to it that its own citizens are not unjustly discriminated against by reason of the administration in other states of the assets there of an insolvent corporation doing business within its limits. But it may not discriminate against citizens of other states.[86]

C. Effect of Charter Provisions.—Charter provisions as to its dissolution bind all persons dealing with a foreign corporation doing business in their state, and upon its dissolution they must submit thereto.[87]

D. Reorganization.—Every person who deals with a foreign corporation impliedly subjects himself to such laws of the foreign government, affecting the powers and obligations of the corporation with which he voluntarily contracts, as the known and established policy of that government authorizes.[88]

V. Taxation.

See the title TAXATION.

85. To forfeit foreign (British) corporate charter.—Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. 464, 5 L. Ed. 662.

The act of legislature of Vermont, of the 30th of October, 1794, granting the lands in that state, belonging to "The Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts," to the respective towns in which the lands lie, is void, and conveys no title under it. Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. 464, 5 L. Ed. 662.

Were the courts or a state to exercise it, and decree a forfeiture of the franchises of the corporation, or the removal of the trustees, the plaintiffs would not be less a corporation, clothed with all its corporate rights and franchises. But this exemption of the corporation from the jurisdiction of a foreign court to forfeit its franchises, or to interfere in its management of the charity, cannot destroy, or in any manner affect, its civil rights, or its capacity to hold and enjoy the property legally vested in it. Society for the Propagation of the Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. 464, 482, 5 L. Ed. 662. See, generally, the title CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 621.

86. Control and administration of assets within jurisdiction.—Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 257, 43 L. Ed. 432, reaffirmed in Blake v. McClung, 176 U. S. 59, 61, 44 L. Ed. 371.

Preference of citizens of state in distribution of assets of foreign corporation as denial of privilege of citizens of other states.—See the title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 4, p. 475, et seq.

But foreign corporations who are creditors cannot complain of such discrimination, as they are not citizens in the meaning of this clause of the federal constitution. As to them such discrimination is legal. Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 259, 43 L. Ed. 432, reaffirmed in Blake v. McClung, 176 U. S. 59, 65, 44 L. Ed. 371. See the title CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, p. 647.

87. Binding force of charter provisions.—Where, by the charter of a corporation, if a dissolution was decreed, its property passed by operation of law to the superintendent of the insurance department of the state, and he was charged with the duty of winding up its affairs, every policy holder and creditor in another state is charged with notice of this charter right which all interested in the affairs of the corporation can insist shall be regarded. When they contracted with the Missouri corporation, impliedly they agreed that if the corporation was dissolved under the Missouri laws, the superintendent of the insurance department of the state should represent the company in all suits instituted by them affecting the winding up of its affairs. Relfe, therefore, became, by operation of law, the successor of the corporation in the litigation these appellees instituted in Louisiana. Relfe v. Rundle, 103 U. S. 222, 226, 26 L. Ed. 237.

1. Foreign country.—"If we look to lexicographers, as well as approved writers, for the use of the term foreign, it may be applied with strictest propriety to the Cherokee nation. In the general sense, it is applied to any person or thing belonging to an entire nation or country. * * * In a political sense, we call every country foreign, which is not within the jurisdiction of the same government. * * * And it may be laid down as a general rule, that when used in relation to countries, in a political sense, it refers to the jurisdiction or government of the country." Porto Rico.—The term foreign country, defined by Chief Justice Marshall to be one exclusively within the sovereignty of the foreign nation, and without the sovereignty of the United States, no longer included the Island of Porto Rico after the ratification of its cession to the United States; and an imported cargo of sugar from Porto Rico was not subject to duty under the Dingley Act, declaring that "there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries" certain duties therein specified, though congress had not embraced Porto Rico within the Customs Union. I. Scope of Title.

In this title, for the purpose of convenience in treatment, and to avoid confusion, the subject of foreign judgments has been divided into two general classes. In the first of these are included judgments rendered in the courts of a state of this country, or of a federal court sitting in such state; and it is intended to treat generally thereunder the conclusiveness and effect of such judgments, especially when sued upon in other tribunals of this country; the manner of authenticating such judgments, and the method of enforcement. In the second class, or foreign judgments proper, the same treatment is intended to be given to the judgments of foreign countries. For a full treatment of the effect of such judgments, of either class, as res adjudicata, see the title RES ADJUDICATA.

II. Judgments, Records and Judicial Proceedings of Courts of Other States.

A. Status as Distinguished from Domestic Judgments or Judgments of Foreign Countries.—Cases may be found in which it held that the judgment of a state court when introduced as evidence in the tribunals of another state, are to be regarded in all respects as domestic judgments. On the other hand, another class of cases are to be found in which it is held that such judgments in the courts of another state are foreign judgments, and that as such the judgment is open to every inquiry to which other foreign judgments may be subjected under the rules of the common law.[1] It would seem however, that neither of these lines of decisions are entirely correct. Such judgments are certainly not foreign judgments under the constitutional and statutory provisions giving them due faith and credit in other courts within the United States,[2] and their exemption from re-examination on the merits or impeachment for fraud in obtaining them would seem to furnish the only points of difference between them and judgments recovered in a foreign country.[3] Nor are they domestic judgments in every sense, because they are not the proper foundation of final process, except in the state where they were rendered;[4] and also because they are open to inquiry as to the jurisdiction of the court and notice to the defendant.[5] In all other respects, however, such judgments have the same faith and credit as domestic judgments.[6]

B. Operation and Conclusiveness—1. In Absence of Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.—The decisions of the United States supreme court have clearly recognized that judgments of a foreign state are prima facie evidence only,[7] and that, but for the constitutional and legislative provisions, now existing, judgments of a state of the Union, when sued upon in another state, would have no greater effect.[8]

2. Under Provisions in Articles of Confederation, Constitution and Federal Statutes as to Full Faith and Credit—a. Provisions Stated.—Provisions in Articles of Confederation.—After the War of the Revolution and the Declaration of Independence, when the confederation was being formed, it was foreseen by the framers of that document that the powers necessary to be given to the confederacy, and the rights to be given to the citizens of each state, in all the states, would produce such intimate relations between the states and citizens that the former would no longer be foreign to each other, in the sense that they had been, as dependent provinces; and that, for the prosecution of rights in courts, it was proper to put an end to the uncertainty upon the subject of the effect of judgments obtained in the different states. Accordingly, in the articles of confederation, there was this clause: "Full faith and credit shall be given in each of these states to the records, acts and judicial proceedings of the courts and magistrates of every other state."[9]

Constitutional Provisions.—When the present constitution of the United States was formed the same clause was introduced into it, with but a slight variation, making it more comprehensive, to the effect that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other state; and congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof."[10] their separation from the mother country, was clearly set forth by Chief Justice Parsons, speaking for the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, in 1813, and by Mr. Justice Story in his commentaries on the constitution of the United States, published in 1833. Both those eminent jurists declared that by the law of England the general rule was that foreign judgments were only prima facie evidence of the matter which they purported to decide; and that by the common law, before the American Revolution, all the courts of the several colonies and states were deemed foreign to each other, and consequently judgments rendered by any one of them were considered as foreign judgments and their merits re-examinable in another colony, not only as to the jurisdiction of the court which pronounced them, but also as to the merits of the controversy, to the extent to which they were understood to be re-examinable in England. And they noted that, in order to remove that inconvenience, statutes had been passed in Massachusetts, and in some of the other colonies, by which judgments rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in a neighboring colony could not be impeached. Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 465; Mass. Stat. 1773-4, c. 16, 5 Prov. Laws, 323, 369; Story on the Constitution (1st Ed.), §§ 1301, 1302; (4th Ed.), §§ 1306, 1307." Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 181, 40 L. Ed. 95.

"In the case of Hitchcock v. Aicken, 1 Caines 460, all the judges seem to have treated those judgments as foreign in the courts of New York; and the only point of difference between them grew out of the construction of the first section of the fourth article of the constitution of the United States, and the act of congress of the 26th of May, 1790, ch. 38, respecting the effects of those judgments, and the credit to be given to them in the courts of the sister states. It would seem, from a note to the case of Bartlet v. Knight, 1 Mass. 430, where a collection of state decisions on the same subject is given, that these judgments had, generally, if not universally, been considered as foreign by the courts of many of the states." Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. 586, 7 L. Ed. 528.

A judgment was obtained in a court of Massachusetts in a foreign attachment. An action of debt was brought on this judgment in Pennsylvania between the same parties. It was held by the Pennsylvania supreme court that this judgment was not conclusive evidence of the debt. Phelps v. Holker, 1 Dall. 261, 264, 1 L. Ed. 128.

Provisions of Federal Statute in Pursuance of Power Conferred by Constitution.—The act of congress of May 26, 1790, now § 905 of the United States Revised Statutes, passed in pursuance of the express authority of the first section of the fourth article of the constitution of the United States, prescribes the manner in which the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state shall be authenticated and proved,[11] and enacts that "the said records and judicial proceedings, so authenticated, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from which they are taken."[12] them;"[13] and had three distinct objects: First, to declare, and by its own force establish, that full faith and credit should be given to the judgments of every other state; second, to authorize congress to prescribe the manner of authenticating them; and third, to authorize congress to prescribe their effect when so authenticated.[14] These provisions of the constitution and of the laws of the United States, in the exercise of the powers conferred by such constitutional provision, are necessarily to be read in the light of some established principles which they were not intended to overthrow. They give no effect to judgments of a court which had no jurisdiction of the subject matter or of the parties.[15] They confer no new jurisdiction on the courts of any state; and therefore do not authorize them to take jurisdiction of a suit or prosecution of such a penal nature, that it cannot, on settled rules of public and international law, be entertained by the judiciary of any other state than that in which the penalty was incurred.[16] Such provisions establish a rule of evidence rather than of jurisdiction;[17] and 14. Objects of constitutional provision.—Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123, citing Story on the Constitution, §§ 1307, 1308.

In Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 194 U. S. 48, 48 L. Ed. 870, the court in speaking of article 4 of the constitution, said: "It only prescribes a rule by which courts, federal and state, are to be guided when a question arises in the progress of a pending suit as to the faith and credit to be given by the court to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of a state other than that in which the court is sitting."

Faith and credit given by constitution of its own force, and independently of legislation.—When the constitution of the United States declares that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other state, and provides that congress may, by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof, the latter clause, as it relates to judgments, was intended to provide the means of giving to them the conclusiveness of judgments upon the merits, when it is sought to carry them into judgments, by suits in the tribunals of another state. The authenticity of the judgment, and its effect, depend upon the law made in pursuance of the constitution; the faith and credit due to it as the judicial proceeding of a state, is given by the constitution, independently of all legislation. McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177.

15. Give no effect to judgments of courts not having jurisdiction.—Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123. See post, "Inquiry as to Jurisdiction," II, B, 2, b, (4), (b). And see, generally, the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

16. Confer no new jurisdiction, etc.—Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123. See post, "Judgments for Penalties," II, B, 2, b, (5), (b).

"In the words of Mr. Justice Story, cited and approved by Mr. Justice Bradley speaking for this court, 'the constitution did not mean to confer any new power upon the states, but simply to regulate the effect of their acknowledged jurisdiction over persons and the things within their territory. It did not make the judgments of other state domestic judgments to all intents and purposes, but only gave a general validity, faith and credit to them as evidence. No execution can issue upon such judgments without a new suit in the tribunals of other states. And they enjoy not the right of priority or lien which they have in the state where they are pronounced, but that only which the lex fori gives to them by its own laws in their character of foreign judgments.' Ed. 184; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897.

"The legislation of congress amounts to this, that the judgment of another state shall be record evidence of the demand, and that the defendant, when sued on the judgment, cannot go behind it and controvert the contract, or other cause of action, on which the judgment is founded; that it is evidence of an established demand, which standing alone, is conclusive between the parties to it. This is the whole extent to which congress has gone. As to what further 'effect' congress may give to judgments rendered in one state while making such judgments a debt of record, not examinable on the merits,[18] do not put the judgments of other states upon the footing of domestic judgments, to be enforced by execution;[19] but they leave the manner in which such judgments may be enforced to the law of the state in which they are sued on, pleaded, or offered in evidence.[20] But when duly pleaded and proved in a court of that state, they have the effect of being not merely prima facie evidence, but conclusive proof, of the rights thereby adjudicated;[21] and a refusal to give them the force and effect, in this respect, which they had in the state in which they were rendered, denies to the party a right secured to him by the constitution and laws of the United States.[22]

(2) By Whom and to What Records and Judicial Proceedings Faith and Credit Must Be Accorded—(a) In General.—Under the constitution and the federal statute in pursuance thereof, the measure of faith and credit therein provided for is to be accorded in every court within the United States to the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state or territory, or of any country and sued on in another does not belong to this inquiry; we have to deal with the law as we find it, and not with the extent of power congress may have to legislate further in this respect." Bank v. Dalton, 9 How. 522, 13 L. Ed. 242.

Application of similar construction to provision in articles of confederation.—In James v. Allen, 1 Dall. 188, 1 L. Ed. 93, the court of common pleas of Philadelphia County, in passing upon the question whether the discharge of the person of the defendant from imprisonment in another state under the insolvent law of such state, would entitle him to a like discharge in a Pennsylvania court, said: "The articles of confederation, which direct that full faith and credit shall be given in one state to the records, acts and judicial proceedings of the others, will not admit of the construction contended for, otherwise executions might issue in one state upon the judgments given in another; but seem chiefly intended to oblige each state to receive the records of another as full evidence of such acts and judicial proceedings."

18. Effect as making judgment a debt of record.—McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177; Metcalf v. Watertown, 153 U. S. 671, 38 L. Ed. 861; Lynde v. Lynde, 181 U. S. 183, 45 L. Ed. 810.

"McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 327, 10 L. Ed. 177, is an early and leading case on the subject cited, and largely quoted from by counsel for defendant. The statute of limitations of Georgia involved in that case required 'actions of debt upon judgments obtained in courts other than the courts of this state' to be brought 'within five years next after the judgments shall have been obtained,' and an action having been brought in the circuit court of the United States for the District of Georgia upon a judgment rendered in a court of the state of South Carolina, it was held that the statute could be pleaded in bar thereof. Mr. Justice Wayne delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating that judgments recovered in one state 'are record evidence of a debt, or judgments of record, to be contested only in such way as judgments of record may be, and consequently are conclusive upon the defendant in every state, except for such causes as would be sufficient to set aside the judgment in the courts of the state in which it was rendered;' but that a plea of the statute of limitations was 'well settled to be a plea to the remedy, and consequently that the lex fori must prevail.'" Metcalf v. Watertown, 153 U. S. 671, 38 L. Ed. 861.

19. Do not make judgments of other states domestic judgments enforceable by execution.—Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 47 L. Ed. 366; Lynde v. Lynde, 181 U. S. 183, 45 L. Ed. 810; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177. See, generally, the titles EXECUTIONS, ante, p. 84; JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

In the payment of the debts of a testator, or intestate, in Georgia, the judgment of another state, whatever may have been the subject matter of the suit, cannot be put upon the footing of judgments rendered in the state; it can only rank as a simple-contract debt, in the appropriation of the assets of the estate of a deceased person to the payment of debts. McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177.

20. Manner of enforcement dependent on laws of state in which sued on, pleaded, or offered in evidence.—Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, when properly authenticated.[23] In other words, the local effect of such records and judicial proceedings must be recognized everywhere throughout the United States.[24]

(b) Judgments of State Courts in Other States or Territories.—In General.—Under the constitutional and statutory provisions already set out, full faith and credit is required by the very words thereof to be given to the judgments of a state or territory in all the other states,[25] or territories,[26] subject to the qualification that such judgments are open to inquiry as to the jurisdiction of the court which gave them, and as to notice to the defendant.[27]

23. By whom and to what records, etc., faith and credit required to be given.—Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3, 27 L. Ed. 346. See ante, "Provisions Stated," II, B, 2, a.

The act of May 26, 1790 (1 U. S. Stat. 122), as it originally stood, after providing the mode by which they should be authenticated, declared that "the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States, as they have by law or usage, in the courts of the state from which the said records are, or shall be taken." By the supplementary act of March 27, 1804, § 2 (2 U. S. Stat. 298), it is declared, that the provisions of the original act of May 26th, 1790, shall apply as well to the records and courts of the respective territories of the United States and countries subject to the jurisdiction of the United States as to the records and courts of the several states. Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411.

A judgment of a parish court of Louisiana, rendered within the sphere of its jurisdiction, is binding upon the courts of the several states and of the United States. Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 458, 34 L. Ed. 1054.

Application to courts of District of Columbia.—In Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411, which was a case of error to the circuit court for the District of Columbia, in an action of debt upon a judgment of the supreme court of the state of New York, it was objected that the act of congress relating to the full faith and credit to be given to records and judicial proceedings did not apply to courts of the District of Columbia. It was held, however, that the words of the act afforded a decisive answer to this objection, as they extended "to every court within the United States."

24. Local effect of proceedings must be recognized throughout the United States.—Hancock Nat. Bank v. Farnum, 176 U. S. 640, 44 L. Ed. 619. See ante, "General Statement as to Purpose and Effect," II, B, 2, b, (1). And see post, "Extent of Faith and Credit Required to Be Given," II, B, 2, b, (3).

25. Judgment of state courts in other states or territories.—United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. Ed. 563; Harding v. Harding, 198 U. S. 317, 49 L. Ed. 1066. See ante, "Provisions Stated," II, B, 2, a.

Where a judgment is rendered in a state court which has jurisdiction to give the judgment, it should be recognized in the courts of all states and a refusal to recognize such judgment is a denial of the clause of the constitution that "full faith and credit" be given the laws and judgments, etc., of each state. Harris v. Balk, 198 U. S. 215, 221, 49 L. Ed. 1023.

Meaning of "state" as used in constitution.—"'Full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings, of every other state.' Art. 4, § 1. Full faith shall be given in or throughout the territory of each state. By whom? By the sovereign state, by its agencies and authorities. To what is faith and credit to be given? To the acts of the political organization known as the state. Not only this, but to all its agencies, to the acts of its executive, to the acts of its courts of record. The expression 'state,' in this connection, refers to and includes all these agencies; and it is to these agencies that the legislation of congress under this authority has been directed, and it is to the question arising upon the agencies of the courts that the questions have been judicially presented. Hampton v. McConnell, 3 Wheat. 234, 4 L. Ed. 378; Green v. Sacramento, 3 W. C. C. 17; Bank v. Dalton, 9 How. 522, 528, 13 L. Ed. 242. The judicial proceedings of a state mean the proceedings of the courts of the state. It has never been doubted, that, under the constitutional authority to provide that credit should be given to the records of a 'state,' it was lawful to provide that credit should be given to the records of the courts of a state. For this purpose, the court is the state." United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 250, 23 L. Ed. 563.

26. Judgments of state courts in territorial courts.—See Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. 77, 22 L. Ed. 564, in which case a suit was brought in a court of New Mexico on a judgment recovered in the court of the state of Kansas.

27. Qualification of rule.—Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475. See post, "Inquiry as to Jurisdiction," II, B, 2, b, (4), (b).

(c) Judgments of State Courts in Federal Courts.—While the courts of the United States are not foreign tribunals in their relations to the state courts, they are tribunals of a different sovereignty,[28] and under the constitution and the federal statute they are bound to give to the judgments of the state courts the same faith and credit, and only the same, that the courts of one state are bound to give to the judgments of the courts of her sister states.[29] The same rule applies to each, and the question of jurisdiction is open to inquiry even when the judgment of the court of a state comes under consideration in a court of the United States sitting in the same state.[30]

(d) Judgments of Federal Courts in State Courts.—The judgments of the courts of the United States have invariably been recognized as upon the same footing, so far as concerns the obligation created by them, with the domestic judgments of the states, wherever rendered and wherever sought to be en-

"If there has been an adjudication which binds the plaintiff, that adjudication, whether it was right or wrong, concludes him until it has been reversed or otherwise set aside in some direct proceeding for that purpose. It cannot be disregarded any more in the courts of the United States than in those of the state." Scotland County v. Hill, 132 U. S. 107, 33 L. Ed. 261.

The courts of the United States in a special statutory proceeding will give to a judgment of a state court no other or greater effect, either as a matter of evidence, or as ground of action, than must be lawfully given to it in the courts of the state, whose laws are invoked to enforce it. Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 452, 460, 28 L. Ed. 1038.

"The case of Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 48 L. Ed. 276, was only concerned with the effect to be given to a federal judgment adjudicating a contract right, when pleaded in a state court. We are now dealing with the weight to be attached to a state judgment when pleaded as res judicata in a federal court. That was the very question decided by this court in the case of Union, etc., Bank v. Memphis, 189 U. S. 71, 47 L. Ed. 713, wherein it was held that the federal courts were not required to give to such judgments any greater force or effect than was awarded to them by the courts of the state where they were rendered." Covington v. First Nat. Bank, 198 U. S. 100, 49 L. Ed. 963.

According to the constitution and laws of the United States, and the decisions of this court, the regular proceedings and decrees of a county court of Virginia are allowed the same full faith and credit in Kentucky that they would receive in Virginia; if such a decree would be enforced in Virginia, or if such a decree pronounced in Kentucky, would be enforced in Kentucky, the decree of the circuit court of the United States, sitting in Kentucky, enforcing it was correct. Caldwell v. Carrington, 9 Pet. 86, 9 L. Ed. 60.

"The Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1855, concerning the action of ejectment, say: 'A judgment, except of nonsuit, in an action authorized by this act, shall be a bar to any other action between the same parties, or those claiming under them, as to the same subject matter.' We hold this enactment to be binding on the federal courts as well as those of the state. It is a rule of property. It concerns the stability of titles to land, and it would be highly improper to adopt in the federal courts a rule tending to increase litigation and unsettle those titles, which is in conflict with the one prescribed by the lawmaking power of the state. It is a matter which involves something more than a mere rule of practice. It is a question whether a matter, which is conclusive of the title to land in the state courts, shall have the same effect in the federal courts. It is our opinion that it should." "It cannot be doubted that, in respect of their effect under § 905, the judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States are entitled to the same sanctity and effect in the courts of each state, when those courts are held within the state, as their own judgments, nothing more but nothing less." A final decree was rendered in a federal court enjoining the collection of taxes and declaring that by the laws of the state an irrevocable contract had been created. This decree was based upon a judgment of the state court, declaring such judgment res judicata. The judgment of the state court was afterwards reversed by the highest court of the state and later the supreme court of the United States decided that the law of the state did not create an irrevocable contract. Held, that the decree of the federal court was conclusive on the state court. Deposit Bank v. Frankford, 191 U. S. 499, 520, 48 L. Ed. 276.

"When is the state court obliged to give to federal judgments only the force and effect it gives to state court judgments within its own jurisdiction? Such cases are distinctly pointed out in the opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley in Dupasseur v. Rochereau, 21 Wall. 130, 22 L. Ed. 588, where the learned justice says: 'The only effect that can be justly claimed for the judgment in the circuit court of the United States is such as would belong to judgments of the state courts rendered under similar circumstances. Dupasseur and Co. were citizens of France, and brought the suit in the circuit court of the United States as such citizens; and, consequently, that court, deriving its jurisdiction solely from the citizenship of the parties, was in the exercise of jurisdiction to administer the laws of the state, and its proceedings were had in accordance with the forms and course of proceedings in the state courts. It is apparent, therefore, that no higher sanctity or effect can be claimed for the judgment of the circuit court of the United States rendered in such a case under such circumstances than is due to the judgments of the state courts in a like case and under similar circumstances.' The cases which, by clear inference, cannot come within this class are to be noticed. When it was said that no higher sanctity or effect can be given to a judgment of the circuit court of the United States than to state judgments, the learned judge is careful to say 'in like case under similar circumstances.' What are these cases? Manifestly those just stated, wherein the court derives its jurisdiction from the citizenship of the parties and in the exercise of the jurisdiction to administer the laws of the state where the proceedings are had. Where language has been used in other cases to the effect that judgments of the federal courts are to be given the effect given to domestic judgments, they will be found to be cases where questions of general law are under consideration, and coming within the class suggested by Justice Bradley in the opinion quoted. Such is the case of Crescent City Live Stock Co. v. Butchers' Union Slaughter House Co., 120 U. S. 141, 30 L. Ed. 614." Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 48 L. Ed. 276.

early day in the history of the United States supreme court, the act of congress of 1790, which was passed in the execution of the express power conferred by the constitution,[33] received an interpretation which has never been departed from.[34] It was argued that the act in question provided only for the admission of such records as evidence, but did not declare the effect of such evidence when admitted. It was held, however, that such argument could not be supported, but that from the very words of the act, the faith and credit spoken of are not limited to the form of the record, and are not satisfied by its admission as a record,[35] but that the same effect was to be given to the record in the courts of the state where produced, as in the courts of the state from which it is taken.[36] If in such court it has the faith and credit of evidence of the highest nature, viz, record evidence, it must have the same faith and credit in every other court.[37] Repeated decisions made since that time have affirmed the same rule, and by the settled construction of the provisions of the constitution and statutes of the United States, a judgment or decree of a state court, in a cause within its jurisdiction, and against a defendant lawfully summoned, or against lawfully attached property of an absent defendant, is entitled to as much force and effect against the person summoned or the property attached, when the question is presented for decision in a court of another state, as it has in the state in which it was rendered.[38] If a judgment is conclusive in the state where it was pronounced it "Were the construction contended for by the plaintiff in error to prevail, that judgments of the state courts ought to be considered prima facie evidence only, this clause in the constitution would be utterly unimportant and illusory. The common law would give such judgments precisely the same effect. It is manifest, however, that the constitution contemplated a power in congress to give a conclusive effect to such judgments. And we can perceive no rational interpretation of the act of congress, unless it declares a judgment conclusive, when a court of the particular state where it is rendered would pronounce the same decision." Must be binding on defendant in state where rendered.—In Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 40 L. Ed. 525, which was an action in the supreme court of New York on a final decree of the court of chancery of New Jersey, the supreme court of the United States, on writ of error to the supreme court of New York; said: "It is undoubtedly true, as claimed by the defendant in error, that if the judgment of the court of chancery of New Jersey was not binding upon the defendant therein personally in that state, no such force can be given in the state of New York."

Judgments against those of joint defendants served or appearing.—It is within the power of the legislature of a state to enact that judgments which shall be rendered in its courts in actions against joint defendants, one of whom has not been duly served with process, shall be valid as to those who have been so served, or who have appeared in the action. Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. Ed. 535.

Such judgments may be enforced against such persons in the courts of another state. Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. Ed. 535.

Generally, as to the validity of judgments against those of joint defendants served or appearing, see the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

Presumption that decree is in accordance with laws of state where rendered.—In the absence of any statutory direction on the subject or any reported decision of the supreme court of the state wherein the question arises, where the chancellor of the chancery court of that state enters a final decree based upon an original bill, the process under which was served upon the defendant in that state, and upon a supplemental bill, a copy of which with a rule to plead was served upon defendant out of the state, such decree as long as it stands must be deemed to express the law of the state. Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 542, 40 L. Ed. 525.

Even though the opinion of an expert witness is that the chancellor erred in thinking that his court had jurisdiction of a defendant by service on him within the state of the subpœna under the original bill, and by service on him without the state of a copy of the supplemental bill and of a rule to plead, such opinion will not upset the opinion of the chancellor in whose judgment, under the laws and practice of his state, the defendant was in his court, subject to its jurisdiction and bound by its decree. Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 543, 40 L. Ed. 525.

Conclusiveness of highest state court as to interlocutory character of decree of inferior court of such state.—No greater effect can be given to any judgment of a court of one state in another state than is given to it in the state where rendered. So held in a case where a party, relying upon a decree of an inferior state court, objected to the character given to the decree as interlocutory by the highest appellate court of that state, and insisted that it should be treated as a final decree. Board of Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. 521, 21 L. Ed. 687.

"Section 905, Rev. Stat., which embodies the original act of May 26, 1790, c. 11, and the supplement thereto of March 27, 1804, c. 56, provides that the records and judicial proceedings, not only of the courts of any state, but also of any territory, or of any country subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, authenticated as therein prescribed, 'shall have such faith and credit given to them, in every court within the United States, examinable there, it is open to the same inquiries in every other state.[40] It is thus put upon the footing of a domestic judgment; by which is meant, not having the operation and force of a domestic judgment beyond the jurisdiction declaring it to be a judgment but a domestic judgment as to the merits of the claim, or subject matter of the suit.[41] Congress having declared the effect of the record, by declaring what faith and credit shall be given to it, it is only necessary to inquire in every case what is the effect of a judgment in the state where it is rendered.[42] Congress has not, however, undertaken to prescribe in what manner the effect that such judgments have in the courts of the state in which they are rendered shall be ascertained, but has left that to be regulated by the general rule of pleading and evidence applicable to the subject.[43] Upon principle, and according to the great preponderance of authority, whenever it becomes necessary for a court of one state, in order to give full faith and credit to a judgment rendered in another state, to ascertain the effect which it has in that state, the law of that state must be proved, like any other matter of fact.[44]

State Judgments in Federal Courts.—A federal court is required to give the judgments of a state court no greater force and effect than is awarded them by the courts of the state where rendered.[45]

Judgments of Federal Courts in State Court.—With regard to the effect which must be accorded by a state court to federal judgments it has been held that such judgments need be given only the force and effect which is due to the judgments of the state courts in a like case and other similar circumstances.[46]

(4) Application of Provisions as Dependent upon Existence of Actual Valid Judgment or Decree—(a) In General.—It is a well-established principle that in order that a judgment or decree may be binding upon the parties, and may be conclusive in another suit either in the courts of the same or another state, or in the federal courts, there must be a final judgment or decree, actually rendered on the merits by a court of competent jurisdiction.[47]

(b) Inquiry as to Jurisdiction—aa. General Rule.—In the earlier cases it was supposed that the provision of the federal statutes in pursuance of the constitutional provision as to the full faith and credit to be given to the acts, records and judicial proceedings of other states, gave to all judgments the same effect in other states which they had by law in the state where rendered.[48] This view was, however, afterwards qualified so as to make the act applicable only when the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter,[49] and it is now well settled that the provisions referred to do not preclude an inquiry, in the court to which a judgment is presented, as to the jurisdiction of the court by which such judgment or decree offered in evidence was rendered, over the person or in respect to the subject matter,[50] or, if rendered in

While the provisions of the constitution and of the federal statutes make the record of a judgment, rendered after due notice in one state, conclusive evidence in the courts of another state, or of the United States, of the matter adjudged, they do not affect the jurisdiction, either of the court in which the judgment is rendered, or of the court in which it is offered in evidence. Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 47 L. Ed. 366.

"It is also an elementary doctrine of this court that a judgment rendered in personam against a defendant without jurisdiction of his person is not only erroneous but void. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565. And the same case holds that such judgment is not required to be enforced in another state either by the due faith and credit clause of the constitution or the act of congress (Rev. Stat., § 905) passed in aid thereof." Wetmore v. Karrick, 205 U. S. 141, 51 L. Ed. 745.

"Since the cases of Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897, and Knowles v. Gaslight, etc., Co., 19 Wall. 58, 22 L. Ed. 70, it may be considered as settled in this court, that when a judgment rendered in one state is sued upon in another, the defendant may contradict the record to the extent of showing that in point of fact the court rendering the judgment did not have jurisdiction of his person. If such showing is made the action must fail, because a judgment obtained under such circumstances has no effect outside of the state in which it was rendered." Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 454, 22 L. Ed. 616.

"The section of the federal constitution which is invoked by plaintiffs is § 1 of Article IV, which provides that 'full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other state.' Under that section the full faith and credit demanded is only that faith and credit which the judicial proceedings had in the other state in and of themselves require. It does not demand that a judgment rendered in a court of one state, without the jurisdiction of the person, shall be recognized by the courts of another state as valid, or that a judgment rendered by a court which has jurisdiction of the person, but which is in no way responsible to the issues tendered by the pleadings and is rendered in the actual absence of the defendant, must be recognized as valid in the courts of any other state. The requirements of that section are fulfilled when a judgment rendered in a court of one state, which has jurisdiction of the subject matter and a proceeding in rem, its jurisdiction of the res.[51] The record of a judgment rendered in another state may be contradicted as to the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction;[52] and if it be shown that such facts do not exist, the record will be a nullity, notwithstanding it may recite that they did exist.[53] In this

of the person, and which is substantially responsive to the issues presented by the pleadings, or is rendered under such circumstances that it is apparent that the defeated party was in fact heard on the matter determined, is recognized and enforced in the courts of another state." Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. Ed. 464.

Judgment by confession entered on note for one not legal holder.—By the holder of negotiable paper is meant the legal holder, that is, one entitled by law to receive payment; and where one gave a note authorizing any attorney to confess judgment without service of process, if sued on by the holder, and judgment was confessed for one not a legal holder, such a judgment may be collaterally attacked in the courts of another state without violating the constitutional provision as to full faith and credit. National Exchange Bank v. Wiley, 195 U. S. 257, 49 L. Ed. 184. See, generally, the titles BILLS, NOTES AND CHECKS, vol. 3, p. 296; JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

Where a judgment of dismissal has been rendered, a new judgment in personam, without notice at a subsequent term, is void, and in a suit upon the new judgment in another state the former judgment of dismissal may be set up, for not to allow it to be set up would be to deprive one of due process of law. Wetmore v. Karrick, 205 U. S. 141, 51 L. Ed. 745.

Generally, as to the power of courts over their judgments at a subsequent term, see the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

51. Inquiry as to jurisdiction of res in proceedings in rem.—Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. Ed. 464; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; Cooper v. Newell, 173 U. S. 555, 43 L. Ed. 808.

Inquiry to be under proper averments.—"If the conclusiveness of a judgment or decree in a court of one state is questioned in a court of another government, federal or state, it is open, under proper averments, to inquire whether the court rendering the decree or judgment had jurisdiction to render it." Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 51 L. Ed. 345. See post, "Pleadings by Way of Defense," II, D, 4, c.

52. Contradiction of record as to facts necessary to give jurisdiction.—Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; Cooper v. Newell, 173 U. S. 555, 43 L. Ed. 808; Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 160, 23 L. Ed. 271.

By a law of New Jersey nonresidents were prohibited from raking clams and oysters in the waters of that state under penalty of forfeiture of the vessel employed; and any two justices of the county in which the seizures of the vessel should be made were authorized, on information given, to hear and determine the case. Held, that if the seizure was not made in the county where the prosecution took place, the justices of that county had no jurisdiction, and that this fact might be inquired into in an action for making such seizure brought in New York, notwithstanding the record of a conviction was produced which stated that the seizure was made within such county. Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897.

"In the leading case of Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 468, 21 L. Ed. 897, the whole question was fully examined in the light of the authorities. Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court and delivering its unanimous judgment, stated the conclusion to be clear that the jurisdiction of a court rendering judgment in one state may be questioned in a collateral proceeding in another state, notwithstanding the averments in the record of the judgment itself. The court, among other things, said that if it be once conceded that 'the validity of a judgment may be attacked collaterally by evidence showing that the court had no jurisdiction, it is not perceived how any allegation contained in the record itself, however strongly made, can affect the right so to question it. The very object of the evidence is to invalidate the paper as a record. If that can be successfully done no statements contained therein have any force. If any such statements could be used to prevent inquiry, a slight form of words might always be adopted so as effectually to nullify the right of such inquiry. Recitals of this kind must be regarded like asseverations of good faith in a deed, which avail nothing if the instrument is shown to be fraudulent.'" Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 51 L. Ed. 345.'

Where one party in a divorce proceedings had changed his domicile before beginning his divorce proceedings, the court held that a decree for divorce could be collaterally attacked, in another state, by respect a court of another state is to be regarded as a foreign court.[54] As the courts of the United States are bound to give to the judgments of the state courts the same faith and credit that the courts of one state are bound to give the judgments of the courts of her sister states, the same rule applies to each, and the question of jurisdiction is open to inquiry even when the judgment of the court of a state comes under consideration in a court of the United States, sitting in the same state.[55]

bb. Service of Process—(aa) In General.—Under the provisions of the constitution of the United States and of the acts of congress, by which judgments of the courts of one state are to be given full faith and credit in the courts of another state, or of the United States, such a judgment is not entitled to any force or effect, unless the defendant was duly served with notice of the action in which the judgment was rendered, or waived the want of such notice.[56]

A return to a summons by the sheriff that he has served the defendant personally therewith is sufficient, without stating that the service was made in his county. This will be presumed. But, in an action on a judgment rendered in another state, the defendant, notwithstanding the record shows a return of the sheriff that he was personally served with process, may show the contrary, namely, that he was not served, and that the court never acquired jurisdiction of his person. The case of Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897, affirmed and applied. Knowles v. Gaslight, etc., Co., 19 Wall. 58, 22 L. Ed. 70.

"Whenever an action is brought in one state on a judgment recovered in another, it is not enough to show it to be valid in the state where it was rendered; it must also appear that the defendant was either personally within the jurisdiction of the state, or had legal notice of the suit, and was in some way subject to its laws, so as to be bound to appear and contest the suit, or suffer a judgment by default. In more general terms, the doctrine of this court, as well as of the courts of many of the states, is, that this act of congress was not designed to displace that principle of natural justice which requires a person to have notice of a suit before he can be conclusively bound by its result; nor those rules of public law which protect persons and property within one state from the exercise of jurisdiction over them by another." Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451.

"It seems to be agreed, on all hands, that the doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgments of the several states, is to be taken with the qualification, that, where the court has no jurisdiction over the subject matter, or the person, or where the defendant has no notice of this suit, or was never served with process, and never appeared to the action, the judgment will be esteemed of no validity." Harris v. Hardeman, 14 How. 334, 14 L. Ed. 444.

"The act of congress has been restricted in its application by a series of decisions of this court to judgments of state courts, when they had jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties; and in actions brought on such judgments in other states, it has always been held that it was open to a defendant, whether sued alone or jointly with others, to show by plea and proof that he had not been served with process or had not voluntarily appeared. (bb) Judgment against Nonresidents without Personal Service.—In General.—The force and effect of judgments rendered against nonresidents without personal service of process upon them, or their voluntary appearance, have been the subject of frequent consideration in the courts of the United States and of the several states, as attempts have been made to enforce such judgments in states other than those in which they were rendered under the provision of the constitution and act of congress requiring full faith and credit to be given in each state to the records and judicial proceedings of other states. It is now well settled, however, that the act of congress in pursuance of the constitutional provision on this point was not designed to displace that principle of national justice, which requires a person to have notice of his suit before he can be conclusively bound by its result, nor those rules of public law which protects persons and property within one state from the exercise of jurisdiction over them by another.[57] In all the cases brought in the state and federal courts, where attempts have been made under the act of congress to give effect in one state to personal judgments rendered in another state against nonresidents, without service upon them, or upon substituted service by publication, or in some other form, it has been held, subject to exceptions to be hereafter noted, that such judgments were without any binding force, except as to property, or interests in property, within the state, to reach and affect which was the object of the action in which the judgment was rendered, and which property was brought under control of the court in connection with the process against the person.[58] The proceeding in such cases, though in the form of a personal ac-

AND DECREES; SUMMONS AND PROCESS.

Burden of proof where appearance or service denied.—The burden of proof is on the plaintiff in a suit in one state upon a personal judgment rendered in another state where it is not alleged in the complaint that the defendant appeared or that he has been served with process, and the defendant denies that there was appearance or service of process. Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 18, 51 L. Ed. 345.

Service of process held not obtained by fraud such as to invalidate judgment.—In order to get B. into Ohio, so that he could serve him with process, A. told him he was going to use his (B.'s) depositions in a suit in Ohio. B. came to Ohio and after the deposition had been taken, remained there for a few days, during which time A. had process served on him. He obtained a judgment in Ohio and sued B. in Nebraska on the judgment. The Nebraska court refused to enforce the judgment saying it was obtained by fraud. Held, this was not fraud and that by refusing to enforce the judgment the Nebraska court violated the "full faith and credit" clause of the federal constitution. Jaster v. Currie, 198 U. S. 144, 148, 49 L. Ed. 988.

57. Rule as to necessity for notice of suit not affected by provision as to faith and credit.—Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

Congress did not intend, by the act of 1790, to declare that a judgment rendered in one state against the person of a citizen of another, who had not been served with process or voluntarily made defense, should have such faith and credit in every other state as it had in the courts of the state in which it was rendered. D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. Ed. 648.

"Where the defendant resides in the state in which the proceedings are had, service at his residence, and perhaps other modes of constructive service, may be authorized by the laws of the state. But in the case of nonresidents, like that under consideration, personal service cannot be dispensed with unless the defendant voluntarily appears." Knowles v. Gaslight, etc., Co., 19 Wall. 58, 22 L. Ed. 70.

"Personal judgments thus rendered have no operation out of the limits of the tion, has been uniformly treated, where service was not obtained and the party did not voluntarily appear, as effectual and binding merely as a proceeding in rem, and as having no operation beyond the disposition of the property, or some state where rendered. Their effects are merely local. Out of the state they are nullities, not binding upon the nonresident defendant, nor establishing any claim against him. Such is the settled law of this country, asserted in repeated adjudications of this court and of the state courts." Board of Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. 521, 527, 21 L. Ed. 687.

The "full faith and credit" clause is not violated by the courts of one state not recognizing a decree for divorce rendered in another state, where one of the parties is domiciled there and the other is only served with process, by publication. Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 606, 50 L. Ed. 867.

A personal judgment, rendered in one state against several parties jointly, upon service of process on them, or their voluntary appearance, and upon publication against the others, is not evidence outside of the state where rendered of any personal liability to the plaintiff of the parties proceeded against by publication. Board of Public Works v. Columbia College, 17 Wall. 521, 21 L. Ed. 687.

A member of a partnership, residing in one state, not served with process and not appearing, is not personally bound by a judgment recovered in another state against all the partners after a dissolution of the firm, although the other members were served, or did appear and cause an appearance to be entered for all, and although the law of the state where the suit was brought authorized such judgment. Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 160, 23 L. Ed. 271. See, also, Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 39 L. Ed. 517.

"The question to be decided in this case is, whether, after the dissolution of a copartnership, one of the partners in a suit brought against the firm has authority to enter an appearance for the other partners who do not reside in the state where the suit is brought, and have not been served with process; and, if not, whether a judgment against all the partners, founded on such an appearance, can be questioned by those not served with process in a suit brought thereon in another state. We recently had occasion, in the case of Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897, to restate the rule, that the jurisdiction of a foreign court over the person or the subject matter embraced in the judgment or decree of such court is always open to inquiry; and that, in this respect, the court of another state is to be regarded as a foreign court. We further held in that case, that the record of such a judgment does not estop the parties from demanding such an inquiry. The cases bearing upon the subject having been examined and distinguished on that occasion, it is not necessary to examine them again, except as they may throw light on the special question involved in this cause. In the subsequent case of Knowles v. Gaslight, etc., Co., 19 Wall. 58, 22 L. Ed. 70, we further held, in direct line with the decision in Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897, that the record of a judgment showing service of process on the defendant could be contradicted and disproved." Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 160, 23 L. Ed. 271. See the titles APPEARANCES, vol. 2, p. 429; PARTNERSHIP.

Judgment against foreign corporation.—"If a judgment is rendered in one state against two partners jointly, after serving notice upon one of them only, under a statute of the state providing that such service shall be sufficient to authorize a judgment against both, yet the judgment is of no force or affect in a court of another state, or in a court of the United States, against the partner who was not served with process. D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. Ed. 648, and Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 160, 23 L. Ed. 271, above cited. So a judgment rendered in a court of one state, against a corporation neither incorporated nor doing business within the state, must be regarded as of no validity in the courts of another state, or of the United States, unless service of process was made in the first state upon an agent appointed to act there for the corporation, and not merely upon an officer or agent residing in another state, and only casually within the state, and not charged with any business of the corporation there. Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 359, 27 L. Ed. 222; Fitzgerald, etc., Construction Co. v. Fitzgerald, 137 U. S. 98, 106, 34 L. Ed. 608; Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 37 L. Ed. 699; In re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 663, 37 L. Ed. 1211." Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 39 L. Ed. 517.

As to showing unauthorized appearance by attorney, for a party who had never been served with process, as a defense to an action on a judgment of another state, see the title APPEARANCES, vol. 2, p. 437.

Application of rule in federal courts.—A judgment or decree in personam merely, rendered on constructive service, will be allowed no force in the courts of another state, and is of no greater force, as against a citizen of another state, in a court of the United States though held within the state in which the judgment was rendered. Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. Ed. 101.

"The courts of the United States only interest therein.[59] The reason assigned for this conclusion is that the tribunals of one state have no jurisdiction over persons beyond its limits, and can inquire only into their obligations to its citizens when exercising its conceded jurisdiction over their property within its limits.[60]

Exceptions to General Rule.—There are, however, exceptions to the rule just laid down; as in cases where proceedings are taken in a state to determine regard judgments of the state courts establishing personal demands as having validity or as importing verity where they have been rendered upon personal citation of the party, or, what is the same thing, of those empowered to receive process for him, or upon his voluntary appearance. In Pennoyer v. Neff we had occasion to consider at length the manner in which state courts can acquire jurisdiction to render a personal judgment against nonresidents which would be received as evidence in the federal courts; and we held that personal service of citation on the party or his voluntary appearance was, with some exceptions, essential to the jurisdiction of the court. The exceptions related to those cases where proceedings are taken in a state to determine the status of one of its citizens towards a nonresident, or where a party has agreed to accept a notification to others or service on them as citation to himself. 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565." St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. Ed. 222.

59. Proceeding binding merely as a proceeding in rem.—Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

"It is true that if the prosecution in the courts of one country for a violation of its municipal law is in rem, to obtain a forfeiture of specific property within its jurisdiction, a judgment of forfeiture, rendered after due notice, and vesting the title of the property in the state, will be recognized and upheld in the courts of any other country in which the title to the property is brought in issue. Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch 241, 2 L. Ed. 608; Hudson v. Guestier, 4 Cranch 293, 2 L. Ed. 625; Bradstreet v. Neptune Ins. Co., 3 Sumner, 600, 605; Pigott on Foreign Judgments, 264. But the recognition of a vested title in property is quite different from the enforcement of a claim for a pecuniary penalty. In the one case, a complete title in the property has been acquired by the foreign judgment; in the other, further judicial action is sought to compel the payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of money in which the plaintiff has not as yet acquired any specific right. The application of the rule to the courts of the several states and of the United States is not affected by the provisions of the constitution and of the act of congress, by which the judgments of the courts of any state are to have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the state in which they were rendered. Constitution, art. 4, § 1; Act of May 26, 1790, c. 11, 1 Stat. 122; Rev. Stat., § 905. Those provisions establish a rule of evidence, rather than of jurisdiction. While they make the record of a judgment, rendered after due notice in one state, conclusive evidence in the courts of another state, or of the United States, of the matter adjudged, they do not affect the jurisdiction, either of the court in which the judgment is rendered, or of the court in which it is offered in evidence." Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 32 L. Ed. 239.

"The courts of the state might perhaps feel bound to give effect to the service made as directed by its statutes. But no court deriving its authority from another government will recognize a merely constructive service as bringing the person within the jurisdiction of the court. The judgment would be allowed no force in the courts of any other state; and it is of no greater force, as against a citizen of another state, in a court of the United States, though held within the state in which the judgment was rendered. Hollingsworth v. Barbour, 4 Pet. 466, 475, 7 L. Ed. 922; Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. 336, 13 L. Ed. 164; Bischoff v. Wethered, 9 Wall. 812, 19 L. Such judgment void even in state where rendered.—"Where a personal judgment has been rendered in the courts of a state against a nonresident merely upon constructive service and, therefore, without acquiring jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, such judgment may not be enforced in another state in virtue of the full faith and credit clause. Indeed, a personal judgment so rendered is by operation of the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment void as against the nonresident, even in the state where rendered, and, therefore, such nonresident in virtue of rights granted by the constitution of the United States may successfully resist even in the state where rendered, the enforcement of such a judgment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565." Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. Ed. 867. See the title DUE PROCESS OF LAW, vol. 5, p. 499.

the status of one of its citizens towards a nonresident,[61] or where a party may be considered to have agreed, in advance, to accept a notification to others or service on them as citation to himself.[62] It is not meant, in the statement of the general rule just laid down as to service on nonresidents, to assert that a state may not require a nonresident entering into a partnership or association within its limits, or making contracts enforceable there, to appoint an agent or representative in the state to receive service of process and notice in legal proceeding instituted with respect to such partnership, association, or contracts, or to designate a place where such service may be made and notice given, and provide, upon their failure, to make such appointment, or to designate such place that service may be made upon a public officer designated for that purpose, or in some other prescribed way, and that judgments rendered upon such service may not be binding upon the nonresidents both within and without the state.[63]

"In Cheely v. Clayton (1884), 110 U. S. 701, 28 L. Ed. 298, which involved the validity of a decree of divorce, obtained in Colorado by a husband domiciled there, against his wife for unjustifiably refusing to live with him, this court said: 'The courts of the state of the domicile of the parties doubtless have jurisdiction to decree a divorce in accordance with its laws, for any cause allowed by those laws, without regard to the place of the marriage, or to that of the commission of the offense for which the divorce is granted; and a divorce so obtained is valid everywhere. Story, Conflict of Laws, § 230a; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. Ed. 604; Harvey v. Farnie, 8 App. Cas. 43. If a wife is living apart from her husband without sufficient cause, his domicile is in law her domicile; and in the absence of any proof of fraud or misconduct on his part, a divorce obtained by him in the state of his domicile, after reasonable notice to her, either by personal service or by publication in accordance with its laws, is valid, although she never in fact resided in that state. Burlen v. Shannon, 115 Mass. 438; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 218. But in order to make the divorce valid, either in the state in which it is granted or in another state, there must, unless the defendant appeared in the suit, have been such notice to her as the law of the first state requires.' Cheely v. Clayton, 110 U. S. 701, 705, 28 L. Ed. 298. In that case the decree of divorce was held void, because the notice required by the laws of the state had not been given; and the finding of the court below that the wife, at the time of the proceedings for divorce, was a citizen and resident of the state of Illinois, was given no weight, because, as this court said, it was hard to see how, if she unjustifiably refused to live with her husband in Colorado, she could lawfully acquire in his lifetime a separate domicile in another state; or how, if the Colorado court had jurisdiction to render the decree of divorce, and did render it upon the ground of her unlawful absence from him, the finding of the court below could consist with the fact so adjudged in the decree of divorce." 63. Rule does not affect power of state to prescribe manner of service on nonresidents doing business within state.—Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

Where a corporation, chartered by the State of Indiana, was allowed by a law of Ohio to transact business in the latter state upon the condition that service of process upon the agent of the corporation should be considered as service upon the corporation itself, a judgment against the corporation, obtained by means of such process, ought to have been received in Indiana with the same faith and credit that it was entitled to in Ohio. The state of Ohio had a right to impose such a condition; and when the company sent its agent into the state, it must be presumed to have assented to the rule. Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451.

"In the present case, the libellee had, in compliance with the law of Louisiana, appointed an agent at New Orleans, on whom legal process might be served, and the monition was there served upon him. (cc) Process Sent to Nonresident without the State.—It would seem that process sent to a party domiciled in another state is equally unavailing with process published within it, in proceedings to establish his personal liability, and will be so held in an action in another state on a judgment rendered on such service.[64]

(dd) Effect of Appearance without Objection to Jurisdiction.—Where a party voluntarily appears, in a suit, he thereby waives objection to the want of or defective process or service thereof, and a judgment rendered in such suit will be entitled to the usual faith and credit in the courts of another state or in the federal courts.[65]

(c) Inquiry as to Responsiveness of Judgment to Pleadings.—It has been held that if the fact of a judgment rendered in a court of one state does not preclude inquiry in the courts of another, as to the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment over the person or the subject matter, it certainly also does not preclude inquiry as to whether the judgment so rendered was so far responsive to the issues tendered by the pleadings as to be a proper exercise of jurisdiction on the part of the court rendering it.[66]

(d) Fraud as Ground for Impeachment.—According to the weight of authority it would seem that judgments recovered in one state of the Union, when proved in the courts of another, are not impeachable for fraud in obtaining them, if rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties;[67] this being one respect in which such judgments are held to differ from judgments recovered in a foreign country.[68] There is, however, at least one decision sufficiency of service of process upon them, see the titles FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, ante, p. 305; PARTNERSHIP; SUMMONS AND PROCESS.

64. Process sent to nonresident without the state.—Pennoyer v. Neff; 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565. See the title SUMMONS AND PROCESS.

65. Judgment rendered on voluntary appearance.—Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 40 L. Ed. 525.

The record of a judgment in one state is conclusive evidence in another, although it appears that the suit in which it was rendered, was commenced by an attachment of property, the defendant having afterwards appeared and taken defense. Mayhew v. Thatcher, 6 Wheat. 129, 5 L. Ed. 223.

Generally, as to the effect of voluntary appearance as waiving objections to want of or defective service of process, see the title APPEARANCES, vol. 2, p. 448.

66. Inquiry as to responsiveness of judgment to pleadings.—Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. Ed. 464.

"Take an extreme case: Given a court of general jurisdiction, over actions in ejectment as well as those in replevin; a complaint in replevin for the possession of certain specific property, personal service upon the defendant, appearance and answer denying title; could (there being no subsequent appearance of the defendant and no amendment of the complaint) a judgment thereafter rendered in such action for the recovery of the possession of certain real estate be upheld? Surely not; even in the courts of the same state. If not there, the constitutional provision quoted gives no greater force to the same record in another state." Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. Ed. 464.

"Whatever may be the rule where substantial amendments to the complaint are permitted and made, and the defendant responds thereto, or where it appears that he takes actual part in the litigation of the matters determined, the rule is universal that, where he appears and responds only to the complaint as filed, and no amendment is made thereto, the judgment is conclusive only so far as it determines matters which by the pleadings are put in issue. And this rule, which determines the conclusiveness of a judgment rendered in one court of a state, as to all subsequent inquiries in the courts of the same state, enters into and limits the constitutional provision quoted, as to the full faith and credit which must be given in one state to judgments rendered in the courts of another state." Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. Ed. 464.

Generally, as to the rule that a judgment must be responsive to the issues tendered by the pleadings, see the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

"In Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 304, 18 L. Ed. 475, this court held that fraud could not be pleaded to an action in one state upon a judgment in another. With this we are satisfied." Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. 77, 22 L. Ed. 564.

68. One point by which distinguished in which it is apparently held that the act of congress as to full faith and credit does not prevent an inquiry into whether the judgment is founded in and impeachable for a manifest fraud.[69]

(e) Effect of Irregularities or Errors in Decision.—A judgment of a sister state cannot be impeached by showing irregularities in the form of proceedings or a noncompliance with some law of the state where the judgment was rendered relating thereto, or that the decision was erroneous. Jurisdiction confers power to render the judgment, and it will be regarded as valid and binding until set aside in the court in which it was rendered.[70]

(5) Application as Dependent upon Nature of Adjudication—(a) General Rule.—Subject to the provisions that the adjudication shall be final and on the merits, rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, and shall be still in force and not annulled, reversed, satisfied or discharged, in the state where rendered, the constitution and federal statute relative to the faith and credit to be given to the records and judicial proceedings of other states are applicable irrespective of whether the adjudication in question was in the form of a judgment at law, or decree in equity;[71] whether it was rendered after the trial, or is a judgment by confession, a default judgment, a judgment by consent, or a decree pro from foreign judgments.—See ante "Status as Distinguished from Domestic Judgments or Judgments of Foreign Countries," II, A. And see post, "Judgments of Foreign Countries," III.

Judgment having been rendered for the plaintiffs in the attachment, by a court having jurisdiction over the subject, it was too late to object to those proceedings in a suit upon the bond, in which they were collaterally introduced. Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 14 L. Ed. 553.

"The court had jurisdiction of the writ by attachment, and the judgment obtained in that case was collateral to a suit on the bond. Objections, therefore, could not be made to the proceedings in attachment, however erroneous they might be. In the case of Voorhees v. Jackson, 10 Pet. 449, 9 L. Ed. 490, this court say: 'So long as this judgment remains in force, it is in itself evidence of the right of the plaintiff to the thing adjudged, and gives him a right to process to execute the judgment. The errors of the court, however apparent, can be examined only by an appellate power.' That was a procedure by attachment, and there were many errors on the face of the record, which would have required an appellate court to reserve the judgment; but they could not be considered when the record of the judgment was introduced collaterally." Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 14 L. Ed. 553.

If a judgment was recovered in Ohio against the company by an erroneous name, but the suit upon the judgment was brought in Indiana against the company using its chartered name correctly, accompanied with an averment that it was the same company, this mistake is no ground of error; it could only be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement, in the suit in which the first judgment was recovered. Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. Ed. 451.

Admissibility of record of suit in equity pending in other state.—Assumpsit against an insurance company upon a life policy. Plea, non assumpsit, with an agreement that either party might introduce any matter in evidence which would be legally admissible if it had been specially pleaded. Leave was subsequently granted the defendant to file a plea of puis darrein continuance. There was also an agreement which provided for the admission of the record of a suit in equity then pending in the supreme court of New York, whereto the parties hereto, and others claiming the benefit of the policy, were parties, and stipulated that any further proceedings therein might be filed as a part of the agreement at any time before the trial of this action. A decree was rendered by said court November 26, that the company pay the full amount of the policy to the credit of the suit, for the benefit of such of the other parties as should be found to be thereunto entitled, and that upon such payment the company be released and discharged from confesso.[72] Nor does the conclusiveness of such adjudications, either in regard to their enforcement, or to their conclusiveness in evidence, depend, as a rule, upon the proceedings in which the same were rendered. Thus, for instance, it has been held that the provisions as to faith and credit apply to decrees in suits for divorce,[73] or alimony,[74] or a suit by a wife for separate maintenance, but to enforce, out of the land fraudulently conveyed by the husband to his daughter, payment of the alimony awarded to this appellant by the California decree of divorce, which was held, in accordance with the decisions of other courts, to be so far in the nature of a debt, that the wife might sue the husband for it in another state, and might contest the validity of a conveyance of property made by him with the fraudulent intent of preventing her from recovering the alimony. further liability on said policy, and that the several claimants be enjoined from suing thereon. The amount was thereupon forthwith paid into court. On the 25th of November the plaintiff stated his case, whereupon the hearing was postponed until the 29th of that month, when the defendant, no evidence having as yet been submitted, filed with the clerk of the court a duly certified transcript of said decree. On the trial, leave was refused the defendant to set up the matter of that suit and decree by way of plea, or put it in evidence, under the agreement. Held, that the decree was a final determination of the claim of the plaintiff below, and should have been admitted as matter of evidence, having the same force and effect in a court of the United States as in the courts of New York. Insurance Co. v. Harris, 97 U. S. 331, 24 L. Ed. 959.

A decree in divorce, valid and effectual by the laws of the state in which it was obtained, is valid and effectual in all other states. Whether the finding by the court of domicile on which the decree is founded is conclusive or only prima facie sufficient is not decided. Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. Ed. 604.

"It is no longer open to question that where husband and wife are domiciled in a state there exists jurisdiction in such state, for good cause, to enter a decree of divorce which will be entitled to enforcement in another state by virtue of the full faith and credit clause. It has, moreover, been decided that where a bona fide domicile has been acquired in a state by either of the parties to a marriage, and a suit is brought by the domiciled party in such state for a divorce, the courts of that state, if they acquire personal jurisdiction also of the other party, have authority to enter a decree of divorce, entitled to be enforced in every state by the full faith and credit clause. Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. Ed. 604." Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. Ed. 867.

Decree obtained in fraud of laws of forum.—Where, in accordance with a statute in Massachusetts forbidding the enforcement in that state of a decree of divorce obtained in fraud of the laws of that state, the supreme court of Massachusetts refuses to give effect to a divorce decree of the state of Dakota, so obtained, such refusal is not a violation of the due faith and credit clause of the constitution of the United States. "The decree of a court of one state, indeed, for the present payment of a definite sum of money as alimony, is a record which is entitled to full faith and credit in another state, and may therefore be there enforced by suit. Barber v. Barber (1858), 21 How. 582, 16 L. Ed. 226; Lynde v. Lynde (1901), 181 U. S. 183, 45 L. Ed. 810." Audubon v. Shufeldt, 181 U. S. 575, 45 L. Ed. 1009.

"In the case of Audubon v. Shufeldt, 181 U. S. 575, 45 L. Ed. 1009, Mr. Justice Gray, delivering the opinion of the court, said: 'Alimony does not arise from any business transaction, but from the relation of marriage. It is not founded on contract, express or implied, but on the natural and legal duty of the husband to support the wife. The general obligation to support is made specific by the decree of the court of appropriate jurisdiction. Generally speaking, alimony may be altered by the court at any time, as the circumstances of the parties may require. The decree of a court of one state, indeed, for the present payment of a definite sum of money as alimony, is a record which is entitled to full faith and credit in another state, and

nance;[75] adjudications of a probate court as to the probate of a will;[76] adjudications in bankruptcy proceedings in the federal courts,[77] and, in short, to all judgments or decrees enforceable in the states wherein the same were rendered.[78]

(b) Judgments for Penalties.—It is well established that, as a general rule, the courts of no country execute the penal laws of another, and the application of this rule to the courts of the several states and of the United States is not affected by the provisions of the constitution and of the act of congress, by which the judgments of the courts of any state are to have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the state in which they were rendered; and a state court will properly decline to give full faith and credit to a judgment of another state for a penalty.[79] may, therefore, be there enforced by suit. Barber v. Barber (1858), 21 How. 582, 16 L. Ed. 226; Lynde v. Lynde (1901), 181 U. S. 183, 45 L. Ed. 810." Wetmore v. Markoe, 196 U. S. 68, 49 L. Ed. 390.

75. Decree for separate maintenance.—Harding v. Harding, 198 U. S. 317, 49 L. Ed. 1066.

A wife sued for a divorce and separate maintenance in the state of Illinois; the husband filed a document saying that the wife was living apart from him without her fault and that he consented to the decree, but that it was not collusive. The Illinois court entered a decree upon the ground that the effect of document filed by the husband was to admit as true the allegations of the wife. The husband afterwards went to California and sued for a divorce; the California courts granted a divorce upon the ground that the Illinois decree was a consent decree. Held, that the California courts had to respect the Illinois decree, which was rendered upon the admission of the husband, which made it unnecessary for the court to go into the evidence, and so was conclusive. Harding v. Harding, 198 U. S. 317, 340, 49 L. Ed. 1066.

76. Adjudications as to probate of will.—Long v. Patton, 154 U. S. 573, 19 L. Ed. 881.

The probate of a will duly received to probate by a state court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusive of the validity and contents of the will in the supreme court. Gaines v. New Orleans, 6 Wall. 642, 18 L. Ed. 950. See the title WILLS.

A probate in Louisiana of the will of a person who died domiciled in New York is valid until set aside in the Louisiana court, though the order of the surrogate in New York has been reversed in the supreme court of that state, on which the Louisiana probate was founded. Foulke v. Zimmerman, 14 Wall. 113, 20 L. Ed. 785.

By the laws of Illinois, a copy of a will proved in one state, and with its probate and letters duly authenticated under the act of congress for the authentication of records to be used in others, may, after certain formalities gone through, be recorded in the county courts of a county of Illinois, where the testator had property. And when so recorded, certified copies of such county court records are evidence, being so under the general laws of the state. Secrist v. Green, 3 Wall. 744, 18 L. Ed. 153.

H., a citizen of South Carolina, died leaving a will. Her only child, B., lived in North Carolina. By her will H. gave all her property situated in South Carolina to W. in trust for B. with the provision that if B. should die without issue the property should go to such persons as B. should direct by will and testament duly executed. B. made a will in North Carolina appointing who should get the property. The probate of this will in North Carolina established that the will was executed according to the law of the state where the testatrix was domiciled, North Carolina, but it did not establish that it was executed accordingly to the law of South Carolina. The court had no jurisdiction and did not undertake to adjudge whether it was a good execution of the power under the will of H. Blount v. Walker, 134 U. S. 607, 613, 33 L. Ed. 1036.

Validity as affecting title to land in another state.—The title of lands can only pass by devise, according to the laws of the state or country where the lands lie; the probate in one state or country, is of no validity as effecting the title to lands in another. "The only cases cited in the learned argument for the plaintiff, which tend to support the view that the courts of one state will maintain an action upon a judgment rendered in another state for a penalty incurred by a violation of her municipal laws, are Spencer v. Brockway, 1 Ohio 259, in which an action was sustained in Ohio upon a judgment rendered in Connecticut upon a forfeited recognizance to answer for a violation of the penal laws of that state; Healy v. Root, 11 Pick. 389, in which an action was sustained in Massachusetts upon a judgment rendered in Pennsylvania in a qui tam action on a penal statute for usury; and Indiana v. Helmer, 21 Iowa 370, in which an action by the state of Indiana was sustained in the courts of Iowa upon a judgment rendered in Indiana in a prosecution for the maintenance of a bastard child. The decision in each of those cases appears to have been mainly based upon the supposed effect of the provisions of the constitution and the act of congress as to the faith and credit due to a judgment rendered in another state, which had not then received a full exposition from this court; and the other reasons assigned are not such as to induce as to accept those decisions as satisfactory precedents to guide our judgment in the present case." Burden of proof to show denial of faith and credit.—The burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff in error to show that a reasonable construction by a state supreme court of decrees of sale made by a federal court of another state court violates the constitutional provision as to full faith and credit, and where the case has been tried on a statement of facts which does not afford the court the means of saying with the required certainty that the judgment below denied due faith and credit to the decrees in question, the supreme been seen, made domestic judgments to all intents and purposes, by the provisions of the constitution and federal statutes as to due faith and credit, do not enjoy the right of priority or lien which they have in the state where they are pronounced, but that only which the lex fori gives to them by its own laws in their character of foreign judgments.[83]

C. Authentication and Proof—1. Records and Judicial Proceedings of State Courts—a. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.—Constitutional Provision.—By article 4, § 1, of the constitution of the United States, requiring full faith and credit to be given to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of other states, it is further provided that congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records and proceedings shall be proved.[84]

Provision of Federal Statute.—Congress has exercised the power thus conferred by the constitution, and has provided that the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state shall be proved and admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form of law.[85]

85. Provision of act of May 26, 1790 (Rev. Stat., § 905), as to mode of authentication.—Ferguson v. Harwood, 7 Cranch 408, 3 L. Ed. 386; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475; D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; Caperton v. Ballard, 14 Wall. 238, 20 L. S. 87, 35 L. Ed. 640.

Authentication held sufficient.—If the clerk of a court certify at the foot of a paper, purporting to be a record, "that the aforegoing is truly taken from the record of proceedings" of his court; and if the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, certifies that such attestation of the clerk is in due form of law, it is to be presumed that the paper so certified is a full copy of all the proceedings in the case, and is admissible in evidence. Ferguson v. Harwood, 7 Cranch 408, 3 L. Ed. 386.

"The statute of the United States of the 26th of May, 1790, declares that the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state shall be proved and admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form of law. It is conceded that such a certificate accompanied the record objected to. It is, therefore, a case within the words of the law, and the court below were precluded from receiving any other evidence to show that the attestation was not in due form of law. The record so authenticated was properly admitted in evidence. Even if the points had been open, the court are not satisfied that any material variance existed between the attestations of the different clerks. The court are also of opinion that the second exception cannot be sustained. The writing produced did not purport to be a record; but a mere transcript of minutes extracted from the docket of the court. There is no foundation laid to show its admissibility in the cause." Ferguson v. Harwood, 7 Cranch 408, 3 L. Ed. 386.

In a suit upon a judgment of a sister state, objections to the form and sufficiency of the evidence offered to prove the record on which the action is brought cannot be sustained, the document offered being properly certified to be "a true and faithful copy of the record of the proceedings had in the cause." Nor is it a valid objection against the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment that the record shows that the cause was tried without the intervention of a jury, and did not show that a jury had been waived as

b. Purpose and Effect of Provisions.—The authentication provided for by the act of congress was intended as evidence only of the existence of such acts and records as are there specified, and not to give them any greater validity or effect than that which they had in the state from which they were thus accredited. It merely provides a mode of proving public records, leaving them, when proved, provided by statute. Maxwell v. Stewart, 21 Wall. 71, 22 L. Ed. 564, followed in Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 35 L. Ed. 640.

A copy of a deed from a clerk of the court, without the certificate of the presiding judge, that the attestation of the clerk is in due form, cannot be received as evidence, in a suit in equity. Drummond v. Magruder, 9 Cranch 122, 3 L. Ed. 677.

"The right of the appellees to bring this suit is, by their own showing, merely derivative; and consequently, it was incumbent on them to prove by legal evidence, that the deed of assignment from William B. Magruder & Co., under which they claimed this right to sue a debtor of that house, was duly executed. The answer put this matter directly in issue, by denying any knowledge of the deed exhibited with the bill, and requiring full proof to be made of it. This court is not at liberty to presume, that any other proof of this deed was given in the court below, than what appears on the record. That proof consists in the certificate of a person who styles himself clerk of Baltimore county court, that the paper to which his certificate is annexed is a copy of a deed taken from the records of the court of that county; but there is no such certificate as the act of congress requires, to satisfy the court that the attestation affixed to this copy, is in due form. It follows, that the instrument so certified cannot be noticed as a copy of a deed from William B. Magruder & Co.; and as it is the foundation of the complainants' right, the court erred in decreeing in favor of the complainants, upon such defective evidence. But as this court cannot fail to perceive, that the objection to the proof of this instrument is merely technical, and was probably not made at all in the circuit court, it would seem improper, to dismiss the bill absolutely." Drummond v. Magruder, 9 Cranch 122, 3 L. Ed. 677.

Necessity for signature of judge.—When a transcript of a record of another court was attached to the answer as an exhibit, and portions of it particularly referred to, and the record of the entire case pleaded, a decree, certified by the clerk, which had been executed by the parties, must be considered as part of the record, although it had not the signature of the judge. The signature of the judge is not the only evidence by which a decree can be authenticated. Secombe v. Steele, 20 How. 94, 15 L. Ed. 833.

Compliance with provisions essential to review by supreme court under 25th section of judiciary act.—To bring a case to the supreme court of the United States under the 25th section of the judiciary act, on the ground that the provision of the constitution which ordains that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other state," has been violated by a refusal of the highest state court to give proper effect to a judicial record of another state, it is necessary that it appear that the record has been authenticated in the mode prescribed by the act of May 26, 1790, "to prescribe the mode in which the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings in each state shall be authenticated, so as to take effect in every other state." Caperton v. Ballard, 14 Wall. 238, 20 L. Ed. 885.

"The same constitutional provision which ordains 'that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state,' also ordains that 'the congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof.' Congress acted on this subject, and on the 26th of May, 1790, prescribed the manner in which judicial records, and the proceedings of the courts of any state shall be authenticated, so as to be considered proved and admitted in any other court in the United States. This act declares further that the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every other court within the United States as they have by law, or usage, in the courts of the state from whence the said records are or shall be taken. The mode of authentication prescribed by the law requires the attestation of the clerk with his seal attached, and the certificate of the judge that the attestation was in due form. If a judicial proceeding has the effect of record evidence in the courts of the state from which it is taken, it has the same effect in the courts of every other state. To receive this conclusive effect, however, it must not only be pleaded but proved in conformity with the act of congress on the subject. Unless this is done there is nothing for this court to act upon. It is only through the instrumentality of the statute that the clause of the constitution, which the plaintiff in error relies on, can be invoked for his protection. Legislation was required to make the constitutional provision effective, and this having been done by a general law, it requires no argument to show that a party cannot claim that a right under the constitution and law has been denied him by a state court, unless he has used the means for invested with the same force and effect, and no other, which they have at home.[86]

c. To What Courts and Records Applicable.—The provision as to authentication is not applicable to the courts of the United States,[87] nor to the public acts, records, or judicial proceedings of a state court to be used in evidence in another court of the same state.[88]

2. Records and Judicial Proceedings of United States Courts.—It has been held that the act of congress prescribing the mode of authentication of records and judicial proceedings of state courts does not apply to the courts of the United States,[89] and that the record of a circuit or district court of the United States is, when duly certified by the clerk under its seal, admissible as evidence in every other court of the United States.[90]

D. Enforcement—1. Necessity for New Suit.—As has already been seen, the provisions of the constitution and of the federal statutes requiring full faith and credit to be given to the records and judicial proceedings of other states make a judgment obtained in the court of a state a debt of record, not examinable upon its merits, but it does not carry with it into another state the efficacy of the judgment upon property, or upon persons, to be enforced by execution. To give it the force of a judgment in another state, it must be made a judgment there, and can only be executed in the latter as its laws may permit.[91] No exhis protection which the statute directs." Caperton v. Ballard, 14 Wall. 238, 20 L. Ed. 885. See the title APPEAL AND ERROR, vol. 1, p. 654.

86. Purpose and effect of provision.—South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260, 24 L. Ed. 154. See ante, "Extent of Faith and Credit Required to Be Given," II, B, 2, b, (3).

"Congress, in the execution of the power conferred upon it by the constitution, having prescribed the mode of attestation of records of the courts of one state to entitle them to be proved in the courts of another state, and having enacted that records so authenticated shall have such faith and credit in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the state from which they are taken, a record of a judgment so authenticated doubtless proves itself without further evidence; and if it appears upon its face to be a record of a court of general jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the court over the cause and the parties is to be presumed unless disproved by extrinsic evidence or by the record itself. Knowles v. Gaslight, etc., Co., 19 Wall. 58, 22 L. Ed. 70; Settlemier v. Sullivan, 97 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 1110." Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. Ed. 535.

Authentication in state court good in circuit court sitting in state.—"Both the constitution and the act of congress are limited in terms to the records and judicial proceedings of the state court. Much discussion of that proposition is unnecessary, as it has long since been established by judicial decisions of high authority. * * * Beyond all doubt, the certificate of the clerk and the seal of the court is a sufficient authentication of the record of a judgment rendered in a state court, when offered in evidence in the circuit court sitting within the same state where the judgment was rendered. Mewester v. Spalding, 6 McLean 24. Held, also, that such an authentication would be sufficient in the state court; and, if so, that it would also be good in the circuit court." "Circuit and district courts of the United States certainly cannot be considered as foreign in any sense of the term, either in respect to the state courts in which they sit, or as respects the circuit or district court of another circuit or district. On the contrary, they are domestic tribunals, whose proceedings all other courts of the country are bound to respect, when authenticated by the certificate of the clerk under the seal of the court, the rule being that the circuit court of one circuit or the district court of one district is presumed to know the seal of the circuit or district court of another circuit or district, in the same manner as each court within a state is presumed to know and recognize the seal of any other court within the same state. Womack v. Dearman, 7 Port. (Ala.) 513." Turnbull v. Payson, 95 U. S. 418, 24 L. Ed. 437.

91. Not a judgment enforceable by execu-ecution can issue upon such judgment without a new suit in the tribunals of other states.[92]

2. Form of Action.—The proper method of enforcing in the courts of one state the judgments or decrees of the courts of other states would seem to be by an action of debt.[93]

3. Within What Time to Be Brought.—See, generally, the title Limitation of Actions and Adverse Possession.

Validity of State Statutes of Limitations as to Such Actions.—There is no constitutional inhibition on the states, nor any clause in the constitution, from which it can be even plausibly inferred that the states may not legislate upon the remedy, in suits on the judgments of other states, exclusive of all interference with their merits.[94] The plea of the statute of limitations, in an action instituted in one state on a judgment obtained in another state, is a plea to the remedy; and consequently the lex fori must prevail in such a suit.[95] Such suit must be brought within the period prescribed by the local law or the suit will be barred.[96] It is well settled, however, that while a state may legislate upon tion in courts of other states.—McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177. See ante, "General Statement as to Purpose and Effect," II, B, 2, b, (1).

Right of state to exclude foreign corporations from suing on judgment obtained in other states.—By the New York Code it is provided that an action against a foreign corporation may be maintained by another foreign corporation, or by a nonresident, in certain cases only, one of which is "where the cause of action arose within the state, etc. * * * " One foreign corporation sued another foreign corporation on a judgment rendered in Illinois. The New York court dismissed the suit on demurrer. 94. Validity of state statutes of limitation as to actions on such judgments.—McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177; Bacon v. Howard, 20 How. 22, 15 L. Ed. 811; Metcalf v. Watertown, 153 U. S. 671, 38 L. Ed. 861.

Such statutes not retrospective in their operation.—A statute of Mississippi, passed in 1846, declares that no record of any judgment recovered in a foreign court against a citizen of that state, shall be received as evidence after the expiration of three years from the time of the rendition of such judgment, without the limits of the state. This statute has no application to judgments rendered before its passage. Hence, where it was pleaded as a defense in a suit brought upon a judgment recovered in Louisiana, in 1844, the plea was bad and a demurrer to it sustained. Murray v. Gibson, 15 How. 421, 14 L. Ed. 755.

95. Lex fori as controlling.—McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177.

96. Suit barred if not brought within prescribed time.—McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177. And see Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 40 L. Ed. 837.

"It being settled that the statute of limitations may bar recovery upon foreign judgments; that the effect intended to be given under our constitution to judgments is, that they are conclusive only as regards the merits; the common-law principle then applies to suits upon them, that they must be brought within the period prescribed by the local law, the lex fori, or the suit will be barred." Metcalf v. Watertown, 153 U. S. 671, 38 L. Ed. 861.

"McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 327, 10 L. Ed. 177, is an early and leading case on the subject cited, and largely quoted from by counsel for defendant. The statute of limitations of Georgia involved in that case required 'actions of debt upon judgments obtained in courts other than the courts of this state' to be brought 'within five years next after the judgments shall have been obtained,' and an action having been brought in the circuit court of the United States for the District of Georgia upon a judgment rendered in a

the remedy in such suits and prescribe statutes of limitations governing the same, no state can impair the effect required to be given to judicial proceedings in a sister state, by a statute of limitations intended to operate on demands which may have passed into judgment by such proceedings, as though no such judgment had been rendered.[97]

Running of Statute Not Affected by Revival of Judgment.—It has been held that a statute of limitations as to actions on the judgments of other states begins to run from the rendition of such judgment, and the bar of such statute court of the state of South Carolina, it was held that the statute could be pleaded in bar thereof." Metcalf v. Watertown, 153 U. S. 671, 38 L. Ed. 861.

Judgments for money, whether rendered within or without the state, are barred by prescription in the state of Louisiana in ten years from the date of the rendition thereof. La. Civ. Code, Art. 3547. Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 40 L. Ed. 837.

By the laws of the republic of Texas, no action would lie on a foreign judgment, and all actions of debt were prescribed in four years. When about to form a constitution, for the purpose of becoming a state of the Union, the legislature passed a law permitting suits to be brought on foreign judgments, but limiting them to sixty days when the judgment was of four years standing and upward. The plaintiffs' bill attempted to avoid the effect of the last limitation as to their judgment, which was more than four years old, on the ground that they lived more than two thousand miles distant, and could not know of the passage of the last act within time to prosecute their action. Held, that the last-mentioned statute conferred a favor, and was not retrospective; and that plaintiffs' action was barred, whether he knew of the act or not. The constitution of the United States does not restrain the right of each state to legislate as to the remedy on suits on judgments in other states. Bacon v. Howard, 20 How. 22, 15 L. Ed. 811.

97. State may not so legislate as to destroy the right to enforce judgments of other states.—Green v. Van Buskirk, 5 Wall. 307, 18 L. Ed. 599; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475.

A state statute which enacts that "no action shall be maintained on any judgment or decree rendered by any court without this state against any person who, at the time of the commencement of the action in which such judgment or decree was or shall be rendered, was or shall be a resident of this state, in any case where the cause of action would have been barred by any act of limitation of this state, if such suit had been brought therein"—is unconstitutional and void, as destroying the right of a party to enforce a judgment regularly obtained in another state, and as conflicting therefore with the provision of the constitution (Art. IV, § 1), which ordains that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state." Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475.

"The provision under consideration is not a statute of limitations as known to the law or the decisions of the courts upon that subject. Limitation, as used in such statutes, means a bar to the alleged right of the plaintiff to recover in the action created by or arising out of the lapse of a certain time after the cause of action accrued, as appointed by law. Looking at the terms of this provision, it is quite obvious that it contains no element which can give it any such character. Plain effect of the provision is to deny the right of the judgment creditor to sue at all, under any circumstances, and wholly irrespective of any lapse of time whatever, whether longer or shorter. No day is given to such a creditor, but the prohibition is absolute that no action shall be maintained on any judgment or decree falling within the conditions set forth in the provision. Those conditions are addressed, not to the judgment, but to the cause of action which was the foundation of the judgment. Substantial import of the provision is that judgments recovered in other states against the citizens of Mississippi shall not be enforced in the tribunals of that state, if the cause of action which was the foundation of the judgment would have been barred in her tribunals by her statute of limitations. Nothing can be plainer than the proposition is, that the judgment mentioned in the declaration was a valid judgment in the state where it was rendered. Jurisdiction of the case was undeniable, and the defendant being found in that jurisdiction, was duly served with process, and appeared and made full defense. Instead of being a statute of limitations in any sense known to the law, the provision, in legal effect, is but an attempt to give operation to the statute of limitations of that state in all the other states of the Union by denying the efficacy of any judgment recovered in another state against a citizen of Mississippi for any cause of action which was barred in her tribunals under that law. Where the cause of action which led to the judgment was not barred by her statute of limitations the judgment may be enforced; but if it would have been barred in her tribunals, under her statute, then the prohibition is absolute that no action shall be maintained on the judgment." Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475, dis-is not removed by the revival of the judgment in the state where rendered.[98]

4. PLEADING—a. Declaration.—Where the declaration in an action of debt on the judgment of another state, avers that the court in which the same was rendered was a court of general jurisdiction, no averment is necessary that the subject matter in question was within its jurisdiction.[99]

b. Demurrer.—In actions on judgments of other states the usual rule applies as to the effect of a demurrer as an admission of facts well pleaded.[1]

"The plaintiff lays great stress upon Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475. In that case suit was brought in Mississippi on a Kentucky judgment against a citizen of Mississippi upon a promissory note made in Mississippi and payable in New Orleans. A suit upon the note would have been barred by the Mississippi statute of limitations when the suit in Kentucky was begun, and the defendant set up a statute of Mississippi providing that no action should be maintained upon a judgment rendered in such circumstances without the state against a resident of the state. It was held that the statute was void, and that as the judgment was valid in Kentucky it could not be treated as invalid in Mississippi." Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co. No. 1, 191 U. S. 373, 48 L. Ed. 225.

98. Running of statute not affected by revival of judgment.—In Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 40 L. Ed. 837, which was an action commenced in 1880 in the circuit court for the eastern district of Louisiana on a judgment rendered in the state of Pennsylvania in 1861, and revived in the latter state by scire facias in 1866 and 1871, it was held that judgments for money, whether rendered within or without the state, being barred by the laws of Louisiana in ten years from the rendition thereof, the action was barred, the running of the statute not being affected by the revival of the judgment in Pennsylvania.

"Viewed as a new judgment rendered as in an action of debt, it had no binding force in Louisiana, as Henry had not been served with process or voluntarily appeared. And considered as in continuation of the prior action and a revival of the original judgment for purposes of execution, on two returns of nihil, it operated merely to keep in force the local lien, and could not be availed of as removing the statutory bar of the lex fori, for the same reason. 99. Declaration sufficient which avers rendition by court of general jurisdiction.—Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. 65, 14 L. Ed. 847.

"The declaration avers, 'That at a general term of the supreme court in equity for the state of New York, one of the United States of America, held at the village of Cooperstown in the state of New York, on the 1st Monday in November, in the year 1848, it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed, etc., and farther, that on the 25th of November, 1848, the complaintant's costs were taxed, etc., as by the said decree duly signed and enrolled at a special term of the said supreme court, etc., and now remaining in the office, etc., reference being thereto had, will appear.' It is undeniably true in pleading, that where a suit is instituted in a court of limited and special jurisdiction, it is indispensable to aver that the cause of action arose within such restricted jurisdiction; but it is equally true, with regard to superior courts, or courts of general jurisdiction, that every presumption is in favor of their right to hold pleas, and that if an exception to their power or jurisdiction is designed, it must be averred, and shown as matter of defense. Such is the general rule as laid down by Chitty, vol. 1, p. 442. So too in the case of Shumway v. Stilman, in 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 296. The supreme court of New York, speaking with reference to a judgment rendered in another state, says: 'every presumption is in favor of the judgment. The record is prima facie evidence of it, and will be held conclusive until clearly and explicitly disproved.' And in farther affirmation of the doctrine here laid down, we hold that the courts of the United States can and should take notice of the laws and judicial decisions of the several states of this Union, and that with respect to these, nothing is required to be specially averred in pleading which would not be so required by the tribunals of those states repectively." Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. 65, 14 L. Ed. 847.

As to presumptions as to jurisdiction of courts of general jurisdiction, see the title JURISDICTION.

1. Demurrer as admitting facts well pleaded.—See, generally, the title DEMURRERS, vol. 5, p. 293.

Thus, in Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. Ed. 535, it was held that "averment in the third count of the declaration, that by the law of Pennsylvania the judgment rendered in that state against Charles Donoghue and John Donoghue was valid and enforceable against Charles, who had

c. Pleadings by Way of Defense—(1) Matters Pleadable.—In General.—A judgment of a state court, as has been seen, has the same credit, validity and effect in every other court within the United States, which it had in the state where it was rendered; and whatever pleas would be good to a suit thereon, in such state, and none others, can be pleaded, in any other court within the United States.[2]

As to the right to set up particular matters by way of defense to a suit on a judgment or decree of another state, as, for instance, want of jurisdiction, fraud, irregularities, etc., see ante, "Application of Provisions as Dependent upon Existence of Actual Valid Judgment or Decree," II, B, 2, b, (4).

(2) Form and Sufficiency of Pleading—(a) General Rule as to Form of General Issue.—It would seem to be well established that under the provisions of the act of congress giving full faith and credit to state judgments in every other state, nil debet is not a proper plea in an action in the court of one state on a valid judgment rendered in the court of a sister state;[3] but that, being a record been served with process in that state, and void against John who had not been so served, must be considered, both in the courts of Maryland and in this court on writ of error to one of those courts, an allegation of fact, admitted by the demurrer."

2. General rule as to matters pleadable in defense.—Hampton v. McConnell, 3 Wheat. 234, 4 L. Ed. 378; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Farnum, 176 U. S. 640, 44 L. Ed. 619; Armstrong v. Carson, 2 Dall. 302, 1 L. Ed. 391.

"This is precisely the same case as that of Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; the court cannot distinguish the two cases. The doctrine there held was, that the judgment of a state court should have the same credit, validity and effect, in every other court in the United States, which it had in the state where it was pronounced, and that whatever pleas would be good to a suit thereon in such state, and none others, could be pleaded in any other court in the United States." Hampton v. McConnell, 3 Wheat. 234, 4 L. Ed. 378.

3. Nil debet not a proper plea.—Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95; D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; Hampton v. McConnell, 3 Wheat. 234, 4 L. Ed. 378; Armstrong v. Carson, 2 Dall. 302, 1 L. Ed. 391; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475; Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. 77, 22 L. Ed. 564.

"Since the case of Mills v. Duryee (7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411), it has been settled in this court that nil debet is not a good plea to an action upon a judgment in another state." Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. 77, 22 L. Ed. 564.

"The question in this case is, whether nil debet is a good plea to an action of debts brought in the courts of this district on a judgment rendered in a court of record of the state of New York, one of the United States? The decision of this question depends altogether upon the construction of the constitution and laws of the United States. By the constitution, it is declared, that 'full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records and judicial proceedings of every other state; and the congress may, by general laws, prescribe the manner in which such acts, records and proceedings shall be proved and the effect thereof.' By the act of 26th May 1790, ch. 11, congress provided for the mode of authenticating the records and judicial proceedings of the state courts, and then further declared, that 'the record and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have, by law or usage, in the courts of the state from whence the said records are or shall be taken.' It is argued, that this act provides only for the admission of such records as evidence, but does not declare the effect of such evidence, when admitted. This argument cannot be supported. The act declares, that the record, duly authenticated, shall have such faith and credit as it has in the state court from whence it is taken. If in such court it has the faith and credit of evidence of the highest nature, viz, record evidence, it must have the same faith and credit in every other court. Congress have therefore declared the effect of the record, by declaring what faith and credit shall be given to it. It remains only then to inquire, in every case, what is the effect of a judgment in the state where it is rendered? In the present case, the defendant had full notice of the suit, for he was arrested and gave bail, and it is beyond all doubt, that the judgment of the supreme court of New York was conclusive upon the parties in that state. It must, therefore, be conclusive here also." Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411.

"It is said, that admitting that the judgment is conclusive, still nil debet was a good plea; and nul tiel record could not be pleaded, because the record was of another state, and could not be inspected or transmitted by certiorari. Whatever may be the validity of the plea of nil debet, conclusive between the parties, it should be denied by the plea of nul tiel record.[4]

(b) Where It Is Sought to Contradict the Record.—It has been held that if it appears on the face of the record that the court did have jurisdiction, extrinsic evidence to contradict it is not admissible under a plea of nul tiel record.[5] Nul tiel record puts in issue only the fact of the existence of the record, and is met by the production of the record itself valid upon its face, or an exemplification duly authenticated under the act of congress.[6] A defense requiring evidence to contradict the record must necessarily admit that the record exists as a matter of fact, and seek relief by avoiding its effect. It should, therefore, be formally pleaded, in order that the facts upon which it is predicated may be admitted or put in issue. Under the common-law system of pleading, this would be done by a special plea. The equivalent of such a plea is required under any system. The precise form in which the statement should be made will depend upon the practice of the court in which it is to be used, but it must be made in some form.[7]

III. Judgments of Foreign Countries.

A. Conclusiveness and Effect—1. General Rule.—Judgments in Rem or in Nature Thereof.—A valid foreign judgment in rem would seem to be after verdict, it cannot be sustained in this case. The pleadings in an action are governed by the dignity of the instrument on which it is founded. If it be a record, conclusive between the parties, it cannot be denied but by the plea of nul tiel record; and when congress gave the effect of a record to the judgment, it gave all the collateral consequences. There is no difficulty in the proof. It may be proved in the manner prescribed by the act, and such proof is of as high a nature as an inspection, by the court, of its own record, or as an exemplification would be in any other court of the same state. Had this judgment been sued in any other court of New York, there is no doubt that nil debet would have been an inadmissible plea. Yet the same objection might be urged, that the record could not be inspected. The law, however, is undoubted, that an exemplification would, in such case, be decisive. The original need not be produced." Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411.

A judgment having been obtained in the supreme court of New Jersey an action of debt was brought upon it in the United States circuit court in Pennsylvania and the defendant pleaded nil debet. It was held that if the plea would be bad in New Jersey it was inadmissible in any court sitting in Pennsylvania. Armstrong v. Carson, 2 Dall. 302, 303, 1 L. Ed. 391.

Generally, as to the propriety, form and sufficiency of plea of nil debet, see the title PLEADING.

4. Propriety of plea of nul tiel record.—Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. Ed. 177; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95.

"The pleadings in an action are governed by the dignity of the instrument on which it is founded. If it be a record, conclusive between the parties, it cannot be denied but by the plea of nul tiel record; and when congress gave the effect of a record to the judgment, it gave all the collateral consequences." Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch 481, 3 L. Ed. 411.

Generally, as to the propriety, form and sufficiency of plea of nul tiel record, see the title PLEADING.

5. Extrinsic evidence to contradict record not admissible under plea of nul tiel record.—Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 22 L. Ed. 616.

6. Effect of plea of nul tiel record—How met.—Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 22 L. Ed. 616. See, generally, the title PLEADING.

7. Necessity for special plea or equivalent thereof.—Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 22 L. Ed. 616.

"Defects appearing on the face of the record may be taken advantage of upon its production under a plea of nul tiel record, but those which require extrinsic evidence to make them apparent must be formally alleged before they can be proved. This we believe to be in accordance with the practice of all courts in which such defenses have been allowed, and it is certainly the logical deduction from the elementary principles of pleading." Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 22 L. Ed. 616.

Where suit is brought on a record which shows that service was not made on the defendant, but which shows also that an appearance was entered for him by an attorney of the court, it is not allowable, under a plea of nul tiel record only, to prove that the attorney had no authority to appear. Presumptively, an attorney of a court of record, who appears for a party, has authority to appear for him; and though the party for whom he has appeared, when sued on a record in which judgment has been entered against him on such attorney's appearance, may prove that the attorney had no authority to evidence of the facts adjudicated against all the world.[8] Thus, a judgment in rem, adjudicating the title to a ship or other moveable property within the custody of the court, is treated as valid everywhere.[9] So, also, a judgment affecting the status of persons, such as a decree confirming or dissolving a marriage, is regarded as valid in every country, unless contrary to the policy of its own law.[10] Other judgments, not strictly in rem, under which a person has been compelled to pay money, are so far conclusive that the justice of the payment cannot be impeached in another country, so as to compel him to pay it again.[11] For instance, a judgment in foreign attachment is conclusive, as between the parties, of the right to the property or money attached.[12]

Judgments in Personam.—While the decisions of the United States supreme court have, as already seen, recognized that judgments of a foreign state are prima facie evidence only,[13] yet, it has been held in a recent decision, reviewing the English and American authorities, that, in view of all the authorities upon the subject, and of the trend of judicial opinion in this country and in England, where there has been opportunity for a full and fair trial abroad before a court of competent jurisdiction, conducting the trial upon regular proceedings, after due citation or voluntary appearance of the defendant, and under a system of jurisprudence likely to secure an impartial administration of justice between the citizens of its own country and those of other countries, and there is nothing to show either prejudice in the court, or in the system of laws under which it was sitting, or fraud in procuring the judgment, or any other special reason why the comity of this nation should not allow it full effect, the merits of the case should not, in an action brought in this country upon the judgment, be tried afresh, as on a new trial or an appeal, upon the mere assertion of the party that the judgment was erroneous in law and in fact.[14] appear, yet he can do this only on a special plea, or on such plea as under systems which do not follow the common-law system of pleading, is the equivalent of such plea. Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 22 L. Ed. 616.

Averment of jurisdiction in complaint and denial in answer.—In Knowles v. Gaslight, etc., Co., 19 Wall. 58, 22 L. Ed. 70, the issue was directly made by an averment of jurisdiction in the complaint and a denial in the answer. See, also, Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 22 L. Ed. 616.

Issue made by plea and replication.—In Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897, issue was made by plea and replication. See, also, Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. 453, 22 L. Ed. 616.

E. a creditor of F., attached the effects of F. in a foreign country, in the hands of S., the agent of F.; S. appeared and made defense. The court adjudged that the money in the hands of S. was the property of F., and compelled him, by their judgment, to pay E. his debt out of it. R. brought an action against E. for the money, claiming that it was his property and not that of F. It was held by the Pennsylvania supreme court that the judgment itself was conclusive, as the decision of a competent tribunal, upon a subject in litigation. 2. Conclusiveness as Dependent upon Existence of Valid Adjudication by Court of Competent Jurisdiction—a. In General.—It may be stated as a general principle affecting the conclusiveness of such judgments, that every foreign judgment, of whatever nature, in order to be entitled to any effect, must have been rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the cause, and upon regular proceedings and due notice.[15]

b. Impeachment for Want of Jurisdiction.—As to judgments of foreign countries, it is well settled that the inquiry is always open, whether the court by which it was rendered had jurisdiction of the person or the thing.[16]

c. Effect of Fraud.—In General.—Both in this country and in England, a foreign judgment may be impeached for fraud,[17] and this has been held to be

S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95, followed in Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133.

"When an action is brought in a court of this country, by a citizen of a foreign country against one of our own citizens, to recover a sum of money adjudged by a court of that country to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the foreign judgment appears to have been rendered by a competent court, having jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties, and upon due allegations and proofs, and opportunity to defend against them, and its proceedings are according to the course of a civilized jurisprudence, and are stated in a clear and formal record, the judgment is prima facie evidence, at least, of the truth of the matter adjudged; and it should be held conclusive upon the merits tried in the foreign court, unless some special ground is shown for impeaching the judgment, as by showing that it was affected by fraud or prejudice, or that, by the principles of international law, and by the comity of our own country, it should not be given full credit and effect." Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95.

Generally, as to the essentials of a valid judgment, see the titles JUDGMENTS AND DECREES; RES ADJUDICATA.

"In the courts of England, whose decisions are particularly mentioned, because we are best acquainted with them, and because, as is believed, they give to foreign sentences as full effect as are given to them in any part of the civilized world, the position that the sentence of a foreign court is conclusive with respect to what it professes to decide, is uniformly qualified, with the limitation, that it has, in the given case, jurisdiction of the subject matter." Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch 241, 2 L. Ed. 608.

16. Impeachment by showing want of jurisdiction.—Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; Michaels v. Post, 21 Wall. 398, 22 L. Ed. 520; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. If a claim be set up under the sentence of condemnation of a foreign court, the federal supreme court will examine into the jurisdiction of such court; and if that court cannot, consistently with the law of nations, exercise the jurisdiction which it has assumed, its sentence will be disregarded. Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch 241, 2 L. Ed. 608. See the title PRIZE.

A judgment recovered in the common pleas, at Westminster, England, against a person in the United States, without any service of process on him, or any notice of the suit other than a personal one served on him in this country, has no validity here, even of a prima facie character. Bischoff v. Wethered, 9 Wall. 812, 19 L. Ed. 829.

"The doctrine thus stated but expressed a general principle expounded in previous decisions. Bischoff v. Wethered, 9 Wall. 812, 19 L. Ed. 829. In that case, speaking of a money judgment recovered in the common pleas of Westminster Hall, England, upon personal notice served in the city of Baltimore, Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, said (p. 814): 'It is enough to say (of this proceeding) that it was wholly without jurisdiction of the person, and whatever validity it may have in England, by virtue of statute law against property of the defendant there situate, it can have no validity here, even of a prima facie character. It is simply null.'" Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. Ed. 867.

It is competent for a defendant in an action on a judgment of a sister state, as in an action on a foreign judgment, to set up, as a defense, want of jurisdiction, in that he was not an inhabitant of the state rendering the judgment and had not been served with process, and did not enter his appearance. Grover, etc., Sewing Machine Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 298, 34 L. Ed. 670.

one respect in which judgments of the states of this country differ from the judgments of foreign countries.[18]

Judgments on Contracts in Evasion or Fraud of Laws of Forum.—It may be assumed that, as the courts of a country will not enforce a contract made abroad in evasion or fraud of its own laws, so they will not enforce a foreign judgment upon such a contract.[19]

L. Ed. 95; Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133; Michaels v. Post, 21 Wall. 398, 22 L. Ed. 520.

"Foreign judgments, by the rules of the common law, were only prima facie evidence of the debt adjudged to be due to the plaintiff, and every such judgment was open to examination, not only to show that the court in which it was rendered had no jurisdiction of the subject matter, but also to show that the judgment was fraudulently obtained." Michaels v. Post, 21 Wall. 398, 22 L. Ed. 520.

"There is no doubt that both in this country, as appears by the authorities already cited, and in England, a foreign judgment may be impeached for fraud. Shortly before the Declaration of Independence, the House of Lords, upon the trial of the Duchess of Kingston for bigamy, put to the judges the question whether—assuming a sentence of the ecclesiastical court against a marriage, in a suit for jactitation of marriage, to be conclusive evidence so as to prevent the counsel for the crown from proving the marriage upon an indictment for polygamy—'the counsel for the crown may be admitted to avoid the effect of such sentence, by proving the same to have been obtained by fraud or collusion.' Chief Justice De Grey, delivering the opinion of the judges, which was adopted by the House of Lords, answering this question in the affirmative, said: 'But if it was a direct and decisive sentence upon the point, and, as it stands, to be admitted as conclusive evidence upon the court, and not to be impeached from within; yet, like all other acts of the highest judicial authority, it is impeachable from without; although it is not permitted to show that the court was mistaken, it may be shown that they were misled. Fraud is an intrinsic collateral act; which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of courts of justice. Lord Coke says, it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal.' 20 Howell's State Trials, 537, 543, note; S. C. in 2 Smith's Lead. Cas. All the subsequent English authorities concur in holding that any foreign judgment, whether in rem or in personam, may be impeached upon the ground that it was fraudulently obtained. Nature of fraud invalidating judgment.—"It has often, indeed, been declared by this court that the fraud which entitles a party to impeach the judgment of one of our own tribunals must be fraud extrinsic to the matter tried in the cause, and not merely consist in false and fraudulent documents or testimony submitted to that tribunal, and the truth of which was contested before it and passed upon by it. United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 66, 25 L. Ed. 93; Vance v. Burbank, 101 U. S. 514, 519, 25 L. Ed. 929; Steel v. Smelting Co., 106 U. S. 447, 453, 27 L. And in one English case, where a ship had been sold under a foreign judgment, the like restriction upon impeaching that judgment for fraud was suggested; but the decision was finally put upon the ground that the judicial sale passed the title to the shop. Commell v. Sewell (1858-60), 3 H. & N. 617, 646; 5 H. & N. 728, 729, 742. But it is now established in England, by well considered and strongly reasoned decision of the court of appeal, that foreign judgments may be impeached, if procured by false and fraudulent representations and testimony of the plaintiff, even if the same question of fraud was presented to and decided by the foreign court." Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 207, 40 L. Ed. 95, in which the court held that it was unnecessary to determine whether the decisions referred to could be followed in regard to foreign judgments, consistently with our own decisions as to impeaching domestic judgments for fraud, as there was a distinct ground upon which the court was satisfied that it was not required to give conclusive effect to the judgments in question.

Generally, as to collateral impeachment of judgments and decrees for fraud, see the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

18. Element of distinction between foreign judgments and judgments of sister states.—See ante, "Status as Distinguished from Domestic Judgments or Judgments of Foreign Countries," II, A.

19. Judgments on contracts in evasion or fraud of laws of forum.—Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95. See the title CONFLICT OF LAWS, vol. 3, p. 1045.

d. Effect of Mistake or Irregularity.—It has been held that the judgment of a foreign country may be impeached by showing that it was founded on clear mistake or irregularity.[20]

e. Showing That Judgment Was Bad by the Law of Place Where Rendered.—According to some authorities it has been held that the judgment of another country may be impeached by showing that it was bad by the law of the place where it was rendered.[21]

f. Difference in Procedure Not Ground for Impeachment.—Where all the essentials of a valid judgment have been complied with in the foreign tribunal rendering the judgment, the fact that the procedure in that tribunal in certain respects differs from that of our own courts, would not seem, of itself, a sufficient ground for impeaching such judgment.[22]

3. Credit and Conclusiveness as Dependent upon Reciprocity.—It would seem that judgments rendered in any foreign country, by the laws of which our own judgments are reviewable upon the merits, are not entitled to full credit and conclusive effect when sued upon in this country, but are prima facie evidence only of the justice of the plaintiff's claim.[23]

4. Operation as Res Adjudicata.—For a full consideration of the effect and conclusiveness of the judgments and decrees of foreign countries when pleaded in bar of another action, or introduced in evidence in another action between the same parties, see the title Res Adjudicata.

B. Authentication.—Foreign judgments may be authenticated by an ex-

20. Showing that judgment was founded on clear mistake or irregularity.—Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95, citing Story's Conflict of Laws, § 607; and 2 Kent Com. (6th Ed.) 120.

"The word 'mistake' was evidently used by Story and Kent, in this connection, not in its wider meaning of error in judgment, whether upon the law or upon the facts; but in the stricter sense of misapprehension or oversight, and as equivalent to what, in Burnham v. Webster, before cited, Mr. Justice Woodbury spoke of as 'some objection to the judgment's reaching the merits, and tending to prove that they had not been acted on;' 'some accident or mistake,' or 'that the court did not decide at all on the merits.' 1 Woodb. & Min. 180." Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 194, 40 L. Ed. 95. See, generally, the title MISTAKE AND ACCIDENT.

21. Showing judgment to be bad by law of place where rendered.—Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95, citing Story's Conflict of Laws. § 607; and 2 Kent Com. (6th Ed.) 120.

22. Difference in procedure not ground for impeachment.—"It is next objected that in those courts one of the plaintiffs was permitted to testify not under oath, and was not subjected to cross-examination by the opposite party, and that the defendants were, therefore, deprived of safeguards which are by our law considered essential to secure honesty and to detect fraud in a witness; and also that documents and papers were admitted in evidence, with which the defendants had no connection, and which would not be admissible under our own system of jurisprudence. But it having been shown by the plaintiffs, and hardly denied by the defendants, that the practice followed and the method of examining witnesses were according to the laws of France, we are not prepared to hold that the fact that the procedure in these respects differed from that of our own courts is, of itself, a sufficient ground for impeaching the foreign judgment." Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 205, 40 L. Ed. 95.

23. Effect as dependent on that given judgments of this country by foreign country.—Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95, applying this rule to a judgment rendered in France.

Reason for this view.—"In holding such a judgment, for want of reciprocity, not to be conclusive evidence of the merits of the claim, we do not proceed upon any theory of retaliation upon one person by reason of injustice done to another; but upon the broad ground that international law is founded upon mutuality and reciprocity, and that by the principles of international law recognized in most civilized nations, and by the comity of out own country, which it is our judicial duty to know and to declare, the judgment is not entitled to be considered conclusive." Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 227, 40 L. Ed. 95.

"By the law of England, prevailing in Canada, a judgment rendered by an American court under like circumstances would be allowed full and conclusive effect. Scott v. Pilkington, 2 B. & S. 11; Abouloff v. Oppenheimer, 10 Q B. D. 295, 307; Vadala v. Lowes, 25 Q. B. D. 310, 316; Nouvion v. Freeman, 15 App. Cas. 1, 10; Fowler v. Vail, 27 Upper Canada C. P. 417, and 4 Ontario App. 267." Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133.

emplification under the great seal;[24] by a copy proved to be a true copy,[25] or by the certificate of an officer authorized by law, which certificate must itself be properly authenticated.[26] These are the usual, and appear to be the most proper, if not the only, modes of verifying foreign judgments. If they be all beyond the reach of the party, other testimony, inferior in its nature, might be received.[27]

C. Enforcement—1. In General.—In the case of judgments of foreign countries as in the case of the judgments of state courts when presented in the courts of a sister state,[28] execution will not be given upon them, but they must be enforced by an action for that purpose.[29]

2. Form of Action.—At common law the form of action upon a foreign judgment was either in debt as for a definite sum of money due by simple contract, or in assumpsit upon such a contract.[30]

3. Pleading—a. Matters Pleadable by Way of Defense.—As to what matters may be pleaded by the defendant by way of defense to an action on a foreign judgment, as for instance, want of jurisdiction, fraud, etc., see ante, "Conclusiveness as Dependent upon Existence of Valid Adjudication by Court of Competent Jurisdiction," III, A, 2.

24. Exemplification under great seal.—Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch 187, 2 L. Ed. 249.

25. By proved copy.—Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch 187, 2 L. Ed. 249.

26. By properly authenticated certificate of authorized officer.—Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch 187, 2 L. Ed. 249.

Instances of authentication held sufficient.—If the decrees of the Portuguese colonies are transmitted to the seat of government, and registered in the department of state, a certificate of that fact, under the great seal, with a copy of the decree, authenticated in the same manner would be sufficient prima facie evidence. Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch 187, 2 L. Ed. 249.

Copies of the proceedings in the vice-admiralty court of Jamaica are admissible in evidence, when certified under the seal of the court, by the deputy registrar, who is certified by the judge of the court, who is certified by a notary public. Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cranch 335, 3 L. Ed. 117.

"The sentence in this case is sufficiently authenticted to be received as evidence. Being a court acting under the law of nations, its proceedings may be proved according to the mode observed in the present case; and were this doubtful, that doubt would be removed by the circumstance, that it is the form stipulated by treaty." Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cranch 335, 3 L. Ed. 117.

A copy of a decree by the governor of East Florida, granting land to a petitioner, while Spain had possession of the territory, certified by the secretary of the government to have been faithfully made from the original in the secretary's office, is evidence in the courts of the United States. By the laws of Spain, prevailing in the province at that time, the secretary was the proper officer to give copies; and the law trusted him for this particular purpose, so far as he acted under its authority; the original was confined to the public office. United States v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. 334, 10 L. Ed. 481.

Instances of insufficient authentication.—In the case of Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch 187, 2 L. Ed. 249, it was held that the certificate of a consul, under his consular seal, is not a sufficient authentication of a foreign law, to make it evidence; it not being one of his consular functions to grant such certificates; and also, that the proceedings of a foreign court, under the seal of a person who styled himself the secretary of foreign affairs in Portugal was not evidence. Approved and followed in Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. 209, 10 L. Ed. 129.

The certificate and seal of the minister resident for Great Britain, from Hanover, is not a proper authentication of the proceedings of a foreign court, or of the proceedings of an officer authorized to take depositions; it is not connected in any way with the functions of the minister; his certificate and seal could only authenticate those acts which are appropriate to his office. Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. 209, 10 L. Ed. 129.

27. Propriety of resort to other inferior testimony.—Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch 187, 2 L. Ed. 249.

Generally, as to when secondary evidence may properly be resorted to, see the title BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE, vol. 3, p. 214.

28. Application of same rule as in case of judgments of sister states.—See ante, "Necessity for New Suit," II, D, 1.

29. Enforcement through new action.—"Judgments are executory while unpaid, but in this country execution is not given upon a foreign judgment as such, it being enforced through a new judgment obtained in an action brought for that purpose." Per Fuller, C. J., dissenting in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95.

30. Enforcement by action of debt or assumpsit.—Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S.

b. Requisites and Sufficiency.—In General.—As has already been seen, in an action in the courts of this country upon a judgment rendered by the tribunal of a foreign country, the merits of the case should not be tried afresh, upon the mere assertion that the judgment was erroneous in law or in fact, and a defendant cannot be permitted upon that general ground to contest the validity or the effect of the judgment sued on.[31] His answer must plainly allege some special ground for not allowing the judgment full effect,[32] and must be sufficient to give the other party notice of the defenses which he must be prepared to meet.[33]

If it is intended to set up want of jurisdiction in the foreign court to render the judgment in question sufficient facts should be alleged to make such want of jurisdiction apparent.[34]

Allegations as to Fraud.—To warrant the impeaching of a foreign judgment because procured by fraud, fraud must be distinctly alleged and charged.[35]

Must Aver Facts and Not Legal Conclusions.—In accordance with the 113, 40 L. Ed. 95. See, generally, the titles ASSUMPSIT, vol. 2, p. 638; DEBT, THE ACTION OF, vol. 5, p. 205.

31. Mere assertion of error in law or fact insufficient.—See ante, "General Rule," III, A, 1.

32. Necessity for alleging special grounds for denying judgment full effect.—Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133.

General allegations setting up matters pleaded and triable in foreign court insufficient.—In Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133, the court in holding that the judgment sued on should be held conclusive of the matter adjudged said: "The defense set up in the answer to this action upon the Canadian judgment reduced themselves to an attempt, without any sufficient allegation of want of jurisdiction of the cause or of the defendant, or of any fraud in procuring that judgment, or of any other special ground for not allowing the judgment full effect, but upon general allegations setting up the same matters of defense which were pleaded and might have been tried in the foreign court, to reopen and try anew the whole merits of the original claim in an action upon the judgment. This, for the reason stated in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 40 L. Ed. 95, cannot be allowed."

33. Answer must apprise plaintiff of defenses which he must meet.—Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133.

34. Allegations as to want of jurisdiction in court rendering judgment.—In Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133, which was an action on a judgment of a Canadian court, the first part of the answer expressly admits that "certain attorneys entered, or undertook to enter, the appearance of this defendant in said action." As it did not allege that the attorneys were not authorized to enter the defendant's appearance in that action, it was held that they must be taken to have been authorized by him to do so. The second part of the answer described the defense, now undertaken to be made upon the merits of the case, as the one "stated in his answer in said original action in the province of Ontario," this clearly showing that he had not only appeared, but answered in that action. It was nowhere alleged that he appeared or answered in that court under compulsion or for any purpose except to contest his personal liability. It was held that he must therefore be taken to have voluntarily submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court.

"The defendant, indeed, in the first part of his answer, alleges that the 'judgment was entered without his knowledge and in his absence, and without any hearing whatever;' and likewise, in the second part of his answer 'says that he was not present at the time that said pretended judgment was rendered,' and 'denies that any hearing occurred before said court,' and 'says that said judgment was irregular and without evidence,' and 'entered up against him in his absence, without his knowledge.' But, as he had once submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, all these allegations and denials are quite consistent with the position, taken by the plaintiffs at the argument here, that the defendant, at the time appointed for the hearing, failed to appear and made default, and therefore no hearing or evidence was necessary to entitle the court to proceed to judgment." Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133.

Generally, as to the effect of an appearance as waiving objections to the jurisdiction, see the title APPEARANCES, vol. 2, p. 443.

35. Necessity for distinct allegations as to fraud relied on to impeach judgment.—Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133, in which the court said: "This answer does not even contain a general charge that the judgment was procured by fraud, or any equivalent allegations. And the only matter specified, from which fraud is sought to be inferred, are those already considered, which have no tendency to prove it and the knowledge which the plaintiffs had of the real purpose of the contract, which is referred to, not as a ground for charging fraud in procuring the judgment, but only as inci-general rules of pleading, the answer in an action on a foreign judgment must set out facts and not mere averments of legal conclusions.[36]

I. What Are Foreign Laws.

A. Laws of the States—1. IN FEDERAL COURTS.—It can never be main-dental to and in explanation of the allegation that the plaintiffs never tendered, or delivered, or attempted to deliver, any bonds to the defendant, in accordance with the written contract. To treat the loose and imperfect allegations of this answer as duly setting up a defense of fraud would be inconsistent with all precedent, and would ignore the duty of giving the other party notice of the defenses which he must be prepared to meet."

Generally, as to the necessity, manner and sufficiency of charging fraud, see the title FRAUD AND DECEIT, and the cross references there found.

36. Averment of legal conclusions insufficient.—In Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 40 L. Ed. 133, the court held that the general averments, in the first part of the answer, that the judgment was "an irregular and void judgment," and, in the second part, that "said judgment was irregular," and, "without any jurisdiction or authority on the part of the court to enter such a judgment upon the facts and upon the pleadings in said action," are but averments of legal conclusions, and wholly insufficient to impeach the judgment, without specifying the grounds upon which it is supposed to be irregular and void, or without jurisdiction or authority to enter it.

Generally, as to the impropriety of averring legal conclusions, see the title LEGAL CONCLUSIONS.

1. Foreign jurisprudence.—The judicial power conferred on the general government, by the constitution, extends to many cases arising under the laws of the different states. And the supreme court is called upon, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, constantly to take notice of and administer the jurisprudence of all the states. That jurisdiction is in no just sense a foreign jurisprudence, to be proved in the courts of the United States, by the ordinary modes of proof by which the laws of a foreign country are to be established; but it is to be judicially taken notice of, in the same manner as the laws of the United States. Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. 607, 625, 9 L. Ed. 246.

tained in the courts of the United States that the laws of any state of this Union are to be treated as the laws of a foreign nation.[1]

2. In State Courts.—The several states of the Union are to be considered in some respects[2] as foreign to each other, and the courts of one state are not presumed to know the laws of another state.[3]

B. Laws of Great Britain Since the Declaration of Independence.—The law of Great Britain since the Declaration of Independence is the law of a foreign country.[4]

C. Laws of Territories Ceded to the United States.—But the laws of territories ceded to the United States, under which titles are claimed, are not treated by the supreme court as foreign laws.[5]

II. Foreign Laws in Evidence.

A. Judicial Notice—1. In General.—The rule that the courts of one country cannot take cognizance of the law of another without plea and proof has been constantly maintained, at law and in equity, in England and America. The existence of a foreign law, written or unwritten, cannot be judicially noticed.[6]

2. Laws of Territories Ceded to the United States.—The laws of territories ceded to the United States, under which titles were claimed, were never treated by the federal supreme court as foreign laws, to be decided as a question

2. In state courts.—Buckner v. Finley, 2 Pet. 586, 590, 7 L. Ed. 528.

"Whenever a court of one state is required to ascertain what effect a public act of another state has in that state, the law of such other state must be proved as a fact." 5. Laws of territories ceded to the United States.—Fremont v. United States, 17 How. 542, 15 L. Ed. 241. See post, "Laws of Territories Ceded to the United States," II, A, 2.

6. Plea and proof.—Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cranch 187, 236, 2 L. Ed. 249; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 399, 400, 426, 427, 14 L. Ed. 472; Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 13, 20, 21, 23 L. Ed. 190; Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546, 27 L. Ed. 254; Liverpool Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 445, 32 L. Ed. 788; Armstrong v. Lear, 8 Pet. 52, 73, 8 L. Ed. 863; Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. 763, 8 L. Ed. 573; Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cranch 1, 38, 2 L. Ed. 15.

The court cannot ordinarily take judicial notice of foreign laws and usages; a party claiming the benefit of them by way of justification must plead them. Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 13, 14, 23 L. Ed. 190.

The defendant, as consul-general of Egypt, in 1864 issued an attachment against the goods of the plaintiff, there situate. The plaintiff, and the persons at whose suit the attachment was issued, were citizens of the United States, and not residents or sojourners in the Turkish dominions. For this act the plaintiff brought suit to recover the value of the goods attached. The defendant pleaded his official character, and, as incident thereto, claimed jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which the attachment was issued. Held, that the plea was defective for not setting forth the laws or usages of Turkey upon which, by the treaty and act of congress conferring the jurisdiction, the latter was made to depend, and which alone would show its precise extent, and that it embraced the case in question. Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 13, 14, 23 L. Ed. 190.

"Foreign laws and usages are, as to us, matters of fact, and not matters of law; and although the court may take judicial cognizance of many matters of fact of public importance, yet of foreign laws and customs, which are multiform and special in their character, it would be very dangerous for it to do so, at least without having had them brought to its attention and knowledge by previous adjudications or proofs." Dainese v. Hale, 91 U. S. 13, 20, 23 L. Ed. 190.

Law of Great Britain.—The law of Great Britain since the Declaration of Independence is the law of a foreign country, and, like any other foreign law, is matter of fact, which the courts of this country cannot be presumed to be acquainted with, or to have judicial knowledge of, unless it is pleaded and proved. Liverpool Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 445, 32 L. Ed. 788.

of fact; but the court held itself bound to notice them judicially, as much so as the laws of a state of the Union.[7]

3. Laws of the States—a. In Federal Courts.—As the laws of the different states are not treated as foreign laws in the federal courts—see ante, "In Federal Courts," I, A, 1—this part of the subject is treated under the title Judicial Notice.

b. In State Courts.—"Courts of one state do not take judicial notice of the laws of another state, whether written or unwritten. They must be proved as facts.[8]

B. Proof of Foreign Laws—1. In General.—"Foreign laws are well understood to be facts which must, like other facts, be proved to exist, before they can be received in a court of justice.[9]

Foreign Municipal Laws.—Municipal laws of foreign countries are generally to be proved as facts.[10]

2. Marine Ordinances of Foreign Countries.—But marine ordinances of foreign countries, promulgated by the executive, by order of the legislature of the United States, may be read in the courts of the United States, without further authentication of proof.[11]

"The Spanish laws which formerly prevailed in Louisiana, and upon which the titles to land in that state depend, must be judicially noticed and expounded by the court, like the laws affecting titles to real property in any other state." United States v. Turner, 11 How. 663, 667, 13 L. Ed. 857.

"The laws of Mexico, of force in Texas previous to the Texan revolution, were the laws not of a foreign, but of an antecedent government, to which the government of the United States, through the medium of the republic of Texas, is the direct successor. Its laws are not deemed foreign laws; for as to that portion of our territory they are domestic laws; and we take judicial notice of them." Fremont v. United States, 17 How. 542, 557, 15 L. Ed. 241; United States v. Perot, 98 U. S. 428, 430, 25 L. Ed. 251.

The courts of the United States take judicial notice of the laws and regulations of Mexico pertaining to grants made prior to the cession. United States v. Chaves, 159 U. S. 452, 459, 40 L. Ed. 215.

"Whenever it becomes necessary for a court of one state, in order to give full faith and credit to a judgment rendered in another state, to ascertain the effect which it has in that state, the law of that state must be proved, like any other matter of fact." Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 5, 29 L. Ed. 535. See, generally, the title FOREIGN JUDGMENTS, RECORDS AND JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS, ante, p. 335.

But where one state recognizes acts done in pursuance of the laws of another state, its courts will take judicial cognizance of those laws, so far as it may be necessary to determine the validity of the acts alleged to be in conformity with them. 11. Marine ordinances of foreign countries.—The Amelia, 1 Cranch 1, 2 L. Ed. 15.

"That the laws of a foreign nation, designed only for the direction of its own affairs, are not to be noticed by the courts of other countries, unless proved as facts, and that this court, with respect to facts, is limited to the statement made in the court below, cannot be questioned. The real and only question is, whether the public laws of a foreign nation, on a subject of common concern to all nations, promulgated by the governing powers of a country, can be noticed as law, by a court of admiralty of that country, or must be still further proved as a fact. The negative of this proposition has not been maintained in any of the authorities which have been adduced. On the contrary, several have been quoted (and such seems to have been the general practice), in which the marine ordinances of a foreign nation are read as law, without being proved as facts. It has been said,

3. Manner of Proof.—Written and Unwritten Laws.—The general rule as to the proof of foreign laws is that the law which is written, that is, statute law, must be proved by a copy properly authenticated;[12] and that the unwritten law must be proved by the testimony of experts, that is, by those acquainted with the law.[13] As to the manner of authenticating the law, there is no general rule, except this, that no proof shall be received, which presupposes better testimony behind, and attainable by the party.[14] They may be verified by an oath,[15] or by an exemplification of a copy, under the great seal of a state;[16] or, by a copy, proved to be a true copy by a witness who has examined and compared it with that this is done by consent; that it is a matter of general convenience, not to put parties to the trouble and expense of proving permanent and well-known laws which it is in their power to prove; and this opinion is countenanced by the case cited from Douglas. If it be correct, yet, this decree having been promulgated in the United States as the law of France, by the joint act of that department which is entrusted with foreign intercourse, and of that which is invested with the powers of war, seems to assume a character of notoriety which renders it admissible in our courts. It is, therefore, the opinion of the court, that the decree should be read as an authenticated copy of a public law of France, interesting to all nations." The Amelia, 1 Cranch 1, 38, 2 L. Ed. 15.

A party domiciled in France died intestate as to property owned in the United States. In a proceeding to distribute this property the code civil of France, with the indorsement "Les Grande des Sceaux de France a la Coeur Supreme Des Etats Unis," is offered as evidence to show the law of France for the distribution of such property. Held, that the code civil, with its indorsement, being a certified official publication received by the supreme court of the United States through the course of our national exchange of laws with France, is sufficiently authenticated to make it evidence in this proceeding, and that it would be so in any other case in which it may be offered. Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 399, 400, 423, 14 L. Ed. 472.

"A foreign written law may be received, when it is found in a statute book, with proof that the book has been officially published by the government which made the law." Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 399, 428, 14 L. Ed. 472.

"This rule may be varied by statute, and that of Minnesota leaves it to the discretion of the judge to require the production of a copy of the written law when the fact appears that the law in question is in writing." Pierce v. Indseth, 106 U. S. 546, 551, 27 L. Ed. 254.

"The testimony of the lawyer of Norway as to the law of that country was admissible under the statute of Minnesota, which provides that 'the existence and the tenor or effect of all foreign laws may be proved as facts by parol evidence, but if it appears that the law in question is contained in a written statute or code, the court may, in its discretion, reject any evidence of such law that is not accompanied by a copy thereof.'" If the best methods be all beyond the reach of the party, other testimony, inferior in its nature, might be received. But where it does not appear that there was any insuperable impediment to the use of either of these modes, the court cannot presume such impediment to have existed. the state seal affixed thereto, are conclusive evidence of such acts, in the courts of other states, and of the Union. No other formality is required than the annexation of the seal; and in the absence of all contrary proof, it must be presumed to have been done by an officer having the custody thereof, and competent authority to do the act. The exemplification of the laws of Maryland have been admitted, when under the great seal of Maryland, without any further attestation. United States v. Johns, 4 Dall. 412, 416, 1 L. Ed. 888.

Upon argument in supreme court.—A paper certified by the secretary of state of Rhode Island, and by the governor, under the seal of the state, stating that certain laws were passed by the legislature of that state, and that certain matters were cognizable by the general assembly of Rhode Island, and of the practice of the assembly of Rhode Island, in cases of a particular description, is not evidence on the argument of a cause before the federal supreme court. Usage and custom should be proved in the circuit court, on the trial of the case in which it may be referred to; and evidence of the same is not admissible in the supreme court, if not found in the record. Leland v. Wilkinson, 6 Pet. 317, 8 L. Ed. 412.

"In Church v. Hubbart, 2 Cranch 187, 2 L. Ed. 249, this court said, that the edicts of Portugal, offered in evidence, would have been admissible, if the copies of them had been sworn to be true copies, by the American consul at Lisbon, instead of his having given his consular certificate, that they were true copies, because it was not one of the functions of a consul to authenticate foreign laws in that way." Expert evidence.—"In order to prove the incorporation of the plaintiff company, as well as the liability and rights of the stockholders, the deposition of an attorney and solicitor of the supreme court of judicature in England, who was also managing director of the plaintiff company, was read in evidence. His testimony showed that the plaintiff was a corporation organized with limited liability under five different acts of Parliament, from 1862 to 1880, copies of which he produced and delivered to the commissioner, stating that these copies were 'issued by authority, being printed by Her Majesty's printer, and are as such by law receivable in evidence without further proof.' To the admission of the statutes the defendant excepted upon the ground that they were not proved according to the established rules of law." Held, such evidence was properly received. In its argument the court said: "In most, if not all, of the states of this Union statutes have been passed permitting laws of sister states to be proved simply by the production of a book containing what purports to be an authorized edition of such laws printed by state authority. * * * While the same liberality is not extended to foreign laws required to be proved as facts, it would seem like sticking in the bark to hold that a foreign expert might testify orally as to what such laws were, and not be able to produce what purports to be the official edition of such laws, and to testify as to the authenticity of such edition, and to the fact that it was received as evidence in the domestic courts of that country. To the average mind it would seem as though there was much less liability to mistake in a printed copy of a statute from the official printer, than in a copy written and compared by an ordinary scrivener." FORFEIT.—The words "to forfeit and pay," are not so strongly indicative of a stipulation in the nature of a penalty, as the word "penalty" itself.[5]

FORFEITURE.—A clause of forfeiture in a law is a punishment inflicted for a violation of some duty enjoined upon the party by law; while in an engagement between individuals it is a matter of contract.[6]

3. Foreign state.—An Indian tribe or nation within the United States is not a foreign state, in the sense in which the term foreign state is used in the constitution of the United States, extending the judicial power of the United States to controversies between a state or citizen thereof and foreign states, citizens or subjects. Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 1 Pet. 1, 8 L. Ed. 25.

4. Forseen.—The code of Louisiana provided that a tenant should have no right to an abatement of rent for an accidental destruction of the whole or a part of his crop, if it was stipulated in the contract that the tenant should run the chances of all "foreseen and unforeseen" accidents. It was held that the words "foreseen or unforeseen" respectively mean, in this connection, those which could have been foreseen as likely to happen, and those which could not have been so foreseen. 5. Tayloe v. Sandiford, 7 Wheat. 13, 18, 5 L. Ed. 384. See the title PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

A statute provided for increased pay of soldiers after a certain time of service, but provided that this increase should be considered as retained pay, and should not be paid to the soldier until his discharge from the service, and should be forfeited unless he served honestly and faithfully to the date of discharge. The court in construing this statute says: "It is true the word forfeited, is used in the statute, but we think it is not used in the technical sense of a punishment after judgment, but rather in the sense of a disability incurred by the nonperformance of a contract. A similar meaning is attached to the word when used in connection with the claim of a mariner for his wages. By his contract of shipment the seaman also bargains for honest and faithful service, and obedience to the lawful commands of the master and other officers of his vessel, and in case of desertion or gross misconduct, it is the constant practice of courts of admiralty to forfeit the whole or a part of his wages, irrespective of the actual damages suffered by the owner or master of the vessel. The Balize, Brown's Adm. 424." United States v. Kingsley, 138 U. S. 87, 90, 34 L. Ed. 896.

6. Forfeiture.—Maryland v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 3 How. 534, 11 L. Ed. 714. See the title PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

In Van Buren v. Digges, 11 How. 462, 476, 13 L. Ed. 771, it is said: "The term forfeiture imports a penalty; it has no necessary or natural connection with the measure or degree of injury which may result from a breach of contract, or from an imperfect performance. It implies an absolute infliction, regardless of the nature and extent of the causes by which it is superinduced. Unless, therefore, it shall have been expressly adopted and declared by the parties to be a measure of injury or compensation, it is never taken as such by courts of justice, who leave it to be enforced where this can be done in its real character, viz, that of a penalty." See, also, the title DAMAGES, vol. 5, pp. 176, 179.

I. Forgery.

A. Definition and General Consideration—1. DEFINITION.—Forgery may be defined as falsely making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability. It consists in making an instrument appear to be that which it is not.[1]

2. Confers and Transfers No Power or Rights.—Forgery can confer no power, nor transfer any rights.[2]

B. Means of Accomplishing Forgery—1. Making False Instrument in Name of Nonexisting Person.—It is, clearly settled, that the making of a false instrument, which is the subject of forgery, with a fraudulent intent, although in the name of a nonexisting person, is as much a forgery as if it had been made in the name of a person known to exist, and to whom credit was due.[3]

2. Antedating Note by a Retired Partner.—Antedating a note by a retired partner, giving it a date within the period of the existence of the partnership, partakes of the character of a forgery and is always open to inquiry no matter who relies on it.[4]

3. Where Names Are Idem Sonans.—A person may commit forgery by signing his own name intending thereby to counterfeit the name of another, the names being idem sonans.[5]

C. Writings of Which Forgery May Be Committed—1. In General.—"The offense extends to every writing used for the purpose of authentication; as in the case of a will, by which a testator signifies his intentions as to the disposition of his property, or of a certificate by which an officer or other authorized person assures others of the truth of any fact, or of a warrant by which a magistrate signifies his authority to arrest an offender."[6]

2. Printing, Engraving, Seals and Stamps.—An instrument may be the subject of forgery, when the entire contract, including the signature of the party, has been printed or engraved. The crime is not confined to the falsification of mere writings; it plainly extends to seals, stamps, and all other visible marks of distinction by which the truth of any fact is authenticated, or the quality of genuineness of any article is warranted.[7]

1. Definition.—Bouvier's Law Dictionary.

In Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 458, 32 L. Ed. 234, it was held that the term "forgery," as used in an extradition treaty between Mexico and the United States, was not confined to its common-law meaning, when the question concerned an offense of that character committed in Mexico.

"By the Roman civil law, which perhaps pervades or did pervade the jurisprudence of the larger portion of the civilized nations of the earth at th time of the making of this treaty, forgery was looked upon as one of the subdivisions of the crimen falsi, which included forgery, perjury, the alteration of the current coin, dealing with false weights and measures, etc." Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 466, 32 L. Ed. 234.

Texas act.—See White v. Van Horn, 159 U. S. 3, 18, 40 L. Ed. 55.

2. Forgery can confer no power nor transfer any rights.—Telegraph Co. v. Davenport, 97 U. S. 369, 371, 24 L. Ed. 1047. This was a case of the forgery of a certificate of stock. See the title STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS.

3. Making false instrument in name of nonexisting person.—United States v. Turner, 7 Pet. 132, 136, 8 L. Ed. 633.

4. Antedating note by a retired partner.—Anthony v. County of Jasper, 101 U. S. 693, 699, 25 L. Ed. 1005; Coler v. Cleburne, 131 U. S. 162, 174, 33 L. Ed. 146.

5. Where names are idem sonans.—White v. Van Horn, 159 U. S. 3, 12, 40 L. Ed. 55.

"Clearly, if one whose name was J. H. Chisholm took a certificate issued to J. H. Chism, and, falsely personating J. H. Chism, signed his name as J. H. Chisolm, intending thereby to counterfeit the signature of J. H. Chism, and, by reason of the fact that the names were idem sonans, to produce the impression that the name signed was that of J. H. Chism, this act would have been a forgery under this statute. The case of Commonwealth v. Baldwin, 11 Gray 197, cited to the contrary, sustains this view." White v. Van Horn, 159 U. S. 3, 18, 40 L. Ed. 55.

6. Forgery may be committed on any writing used for the purpose of authentication.—Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 468, 32 L. Ed. 234.

Section 5418 of the Revised Statutes makes it an offense against the United States for any person to falsely make, forge or counterfeit "any bid, proposal, guarantee, official bond, public record, affidavit or other writing, for the purpose of defrauding the United States." Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 131, 138, 33 L. Ed. 287.

7. Printing, engraving, seals and stamps are subject of forgery.—Benson v. Mc-

D. Uttering and Publishing Forged Writings.—Section 5418 of the Revised Statutes makes it an offense against the United States for any person to utter or publish as true any false, forged, altered or counterfeited bid, proposal, guarantee, official bond, public record, affidavit or other writing, knowing the same to be false, forged, altered or counterfeited for such purpose, or to transmit to or present at the office of any officer of the United States any false, forged, altered or counterfeited bid, proposal, guaranty, official bond, public record, affidavit or other writing, knowing the same to be false, forged, altered or counterfeited, for such purpose.[8]

E. Jurisdiction.—Though a party makes false entries with regard to bills or notes, forged in violation of a state law, on the books of a national bank in violation of the statute of the United States, the state is not deprived of the power to furnish the offender for the forgery.[9] Also, a forgery of a power of attorney, to receive warrants for lands granted by congress, may be punished under the jurisdiction of a state court.[10]

F. Indictment.—An indictment, under a statute embracing the distinct acts of committing forgery, and causing forgery to be committed, the doing of either of which is punishable, is not defective in that it charges separate felonies.[11] But an indictment, for uttering a forged and counterfeited paper, purporting to be a bank bill of the United States, signed by the president and cashier, cannot be supported by an act of congress to punish frauds committed on the bank of the United States.[12] Also, an indictment charging the uttering and forging of a counterfeit bill in imitation of a bill issued by the president of a bank of the United States, is insufficient where the genuine bill, of which the forged bill was an imitation, was not a bill issued by order of the president.[13]

Mahon, 127 U. S. 457, 468, 469, 32 L. Ed. 234. This case was the forgery of a ticket to the opera and was held to be forgery as the term was used in the extradition treaty between Mexico and the United States. The court intimated that it would have been forgery at common law.

It can hardly be said that the crime of forgery, even at common law, is limited to the production by means of a pen of the resemblance of some man's genuine signature which was produced with a pen. This view of the subject would exclude from the definition of this crime all such instruments as government bonds, bank notes, and other obligations of great value, as well as railroad tickets, where the signature of the officer which makes them binding and effectual is impressed upon them by means of a plate or other device representing his genuine signature. Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 467, 32 L. Ed. 234.

8. Uttering or publishing forged writings.—Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 131, 138, 33 L. Ed. 287. See, also, § 5479, Rev. Stat.

9. Jurisdiction of state court.—Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 131, 33 L. Ed. 287.

If it were competent for congress to give exclusive jurisdiction to the courts of the United States of the crime of falsely making or forging promissory notes, purporting to be executed by individuals, and made payable to or at a national bank, or of the crime of uttering or publishing as true any such falsely made or forged notes, it has not done so. Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 131, 139, 33 L. Ed. 287.

Its legislation does not assume to restrict the authority, which the states have always exercised, of punishing in their own tribunals the crime of forging promissory notes and other commercial securities executed by private persons, and used for purposes of private business. The forgery of such instruments is none the less injurious to the welfare of the people of a state because they happen to be made payable to or at banking associations which come into existence under the authority of the United States. Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 131, 139, 33 L. Ed. 287.

12. United States v. Cantril, 4 Cranch 167, 2 L. Ed. 584.

13. United States v. Brewster, 7 Pet. 164, 8 L. Ed. 645.

Indictment founded on the 18th section of the act of congress, passed on the 15th day of April, 1816, entitled "act to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States." The indictment charged the defendant with uttering and forging "a counterfeit bill in imitation of a bill issued by the president," etc., of the bank. The forged paper was in these words and figures: (5) F 745 F 745 5) Cashier of the Bank of the United States, pay to C. W. Earnest, or order, five

Allegation as to Intent.—An indictment under § 5431, Rev. Stat., for uttering and publishing a forged obligation of the United States, must allege that the defendant knew of the forgery. Thus, the allegation that the defendant did pass, utter and publish a forged obligation of the United States is insufficient. An uttering with intent to defraud, of an instrument in fact counterfeit, but supposed by the defendant to be genuine, is not within the meaning and object of the statute.[14] But it is sufficient to allege the intent to defraud, without also charging that it was done feloniously, or with a felonious intent.[15]

G. Evidence—1. BURDEN OF PROOF.—The burden of proof upon a charged forgery is upon the one charging the forgery.[16] And where it is admitted that the signatures to writings were genuine, but insisted that the writing above them was forged, the burden of proof was clearly upon those who asserted it to establish that the written part above the signatures was forged.[17]

2. COMPETENCY OF WITNESS.—In a prosecution for forging a promissory note, it is competent to prove the forgery by the supposed indorser,[18] or maker.[19]

H. Civil Rights and Liabilities Arising Out of Forgery.—A person making payment upon a forged paper must repudiate it as soon as he ought to have discovered the forgery; otherwise, he will be regarded as accepting the paper. Unnecessary delay under such circumstances is unreasonable. And it is, also true, as a general rule of commercial law, that where one accepts forged paper purporting to be his own, and pays it to a holder for value, he cannot recall the payment.[20]

Held, that a genuine instrument, of which the forged and counterfeited instrument was an imitation was not a bill issued by order of the president, etc., of the Bank of the United States, according to the true intent and meaning of the 18th section of the act incorporating the bank. 14. Must allege intent.—United States v. Carll, 105 U. S. 611, 26 L. Ed. 1135.

15. Need not allege felonious intent.—United States v. Staats, 8 How. 41, 12 L. Ed. 979.

Where an act of congress declared, that, if any person "shall transmit to, or present at, or cause or procure to be transmitted to, or presented at, any office or officer of the government of the United States, any deed, power of attorney, order, certificate, receipt, or other writing, in support of, or in relation to, any account or claim, with intent to defraud the United States, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged or counterfeited; every such person shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of felony," etc., it was sufficient that the indictment charged the act to have been done "with intent to defraud the United States," without also charging that it was done feloniously, or with a "felonious intent." United States v. Staats, 8 How. 41, 12 L. Ed. 979.

The indictment is not fatally defective for the reason the acts charged to have been committed by the defendant are not charged to have been committed feloniously, or with a felonious intent. United States v. Staats, 8 How. 41, 48, 12 L. Ed. 979.

Complainant filed a bill to have a deed of trust and a note set aside because of forgery, contending that the mark on the deed of trust, given as security for the payment of the note, was not made by the grantor as his signature. The deed of trust contained a notarial certificate, with the notarial seal, of a notary public, certifying that the grantor personally appeared before him, being personally well known to him to be the person who executed the deed, and acknowledged it to be his act and deed. Held, they could not be set aside, it being a question of fact with the burden of proof on complainant and the forgery was not sufficiently proved. Cissel v. Dutch, 125 U. S. 171, 31 L. Ed. 642.

II. Counterfeiting.

A. Definition and General Consideration.—The term counterfeit, both by its etymology and common intendment, signifies the fabrication of a false image or representation.[21] And the criminality of counterfeiting consists in the obtaining for a false representative of the true coin that for which the true coin alone is the equivalent.[22]

Distinction between Counterfeiting and Passing Base Coins.—A material distinction has been recognized between the offenses of counterfeiting the coin and of passing base coin by a government which may be deemed sufficiently jealous of its authority; sufficiently rigorous, too, in its penal code. Thus, in England, the counterfeiting of the coin is made high treason, whether it be uttered or not; but those who barely utter false money are neither guilty of treason nor of misprision of treason.[23]

A scheme to defraud is unnecessary to complete the offense against § 5480 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of March 2, 1889, ch. 393, for devising a scheme to sell counterfeit obligations of the United States, by communication through the post office.[24]

Aiding and Abetting.—If a person counterfeit gold or silver coin, and by agreement before such counterfeiting another is to receive and vent the money, he is an aider and abettor to the act itself of counterfeiting, and consequently a principal traitor within the law. But if he merely vents the money for his own private benefit, knowing it to be false, in fraud of any person, he is only liable to be punished as for a cheat and misdemeanor.[25]

B. Power to Punish.—Congress has the constitutional power to pass laws for the punishment of any person who shall pass, utter or publish false or counterfeit coin.[26] And the sixth section of the act of February 25th, 1862, to punish the counterfeiting of treasury notes, is not void for repugnancy in its reference to uttering or passing such counterfeited notes.[27]

C. Counterfeiting Foreign Coins, Notes, etc.—It was made an offense, by statute, to counterfeit any foreign gold or silver coin which, by law, then and may be all ready to issue, yet, if they are not in fact issued by an officer thereunto authorized, they do not come within the statute of August 12, 1866, and the United States are not bound to redeem them, held, to be error. Cooke v. United States, 91 U. S. 389, 23 L. Ed. 237.

23. Distinction between counterfeiting and passing base coins.—Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. 410, 433, 12 L. Ed. 213. See the title AUTREFOIS, ACQUIT AND CONVICT, vol. 2, p. 757.

On the 3d of March, 1825, congress passed an act (4 Stat. at L. 121), providing for the punishment of persons who shall bring into the United States with intent to pass, any false, forged, or counterfeited coin; and also for the punishment of persons who shall pass, utter, publish or sell any such false, forged or counterfeited coin. Held, that the clause of the constitution authorizing congress to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States does not embrace within its language the offense of uttering or circulating spurious or counterfeited coin; but that congress has power to punish the offenses provided for in the statute both under its power to regulate commerce, and under its power to coin money and regulate the value thereof; that under the last-mentioned power it is the duty of congress to protect the creature and object of that power. United States v. Marigold, 9 How. 560, 568, 13 L. Ed. 257, distinguishing Fox v. Ohio, 5 How. 410, 433, 12 L. Ed. 213.

was, or thereafter might be, made current or be in actual use and circulation as money in the United States.[28]

As an Offense against the Law of Nations.—Counterfeiting foreign bank notes and bills, put out under authority at home, is an offense against the law of nations.[29]

Alleging Notes to Be of Foreign Government.—See post, "Indictment," II, D.

D. Indictment.—In an indictment for counterfeiting, or having in possession plates to counterfeit, notes of a foreign bank, it is not necessary to allege that the notes are of money of a foreign government; nor that the offense is an offense against the law of nations.[30]

An indictment, pursuing the language of a statute, to punish the counterfeiting of treasury notes, is not bad because it describes the notes passed as false, forged and counterfeited notes of the United States, issued under the authority of that statute or of other statutes, authorizing the issue of such notes.[31]

E. Verdict.—A verdict is valid, which is founded on part of several counts charging possessing, passing and uttering and counterfeiting coins. Such an indictment is a divisible unit and does not have to be treated as an entirety, and a verdict may be returned upon any one or more of the accusations.[32]

28. Counterfeiting foreign coins.—United States v. Gardner, 10 Pet. 618, 9 L. Ed. 556.

The act clearly embraces money in circulation which was not made current by law; and in this class or description may be embraced the small silver foreign coin under twenty-five cents, in circulation here. United States v. Gardner, 10 Pet. 618, 623, 9 L. Ed. 556.

By the act of 1825 § 20 (4 U. S. Stat. 121), under which the prisoner is indicted, this class of currency is omitted, and the offense is confined to counterfeiting such foreign gold or silver coin which, by law, then was, or thereafter might be, made correct in the United States. The jury, by their special verdict, find, that the head pistarem has for many years past been in common circulation in the country. The counterfeiting of such coin, under the act of 1806, would be felony; but not under the act of 1825, unless it is a coin made current by law. United States v. Gardner, 10 Pet. 618, 623, 9 L. Ed. 556.

Indictment for forging a silver coin of Spain, called a head pistarem, which the indictment alleged was, by law, made current in the United States. Held, that the head pistarem is no part of the Spanish milled dollar; that such pistarem or piece of coin is not a silver coin of Spain, made current by law in the United States. United States v. Gardner, 10 Pet. 618, 9 L. Ed. 556.

29. As an offense against the law of nations.—United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S. 479, 30 L. Ed. 728.

30. Indictment—Need not allege money to be that of a foreign government.—United States v. Arjona, 120 U. S. 479, 30 L. Ed. 728.

31. Indictment pursuing language of statute.—United States v. Howell, 11 Wall. 432, 20 L. Ed. 195.

"Nor is an indictment pursuing the language of the statute bad because it describes the note passed by the prisoner as a false, forged, and counterfeit note of the United States, issued under the authority of that statute or of other statutes authorizing the issue of such notes." United States v. Howell, 11 Wall. 432, 20 L. Ed. 195.

"The words 'false, forged, and counterfeit,' necessarily imply that the instrument so characterized is not genuine, but only purports to be, or is in the similitude of such an instrument, and this implication is according to good usage and is supported by adjudged cases." United States v. Howell, 11 Wall. 432, 20 L. Ed. 195.

32. Verdict found on part of several counts.—Selvester v. United States, 170 U. S. 262, 42 L. Ed. 1029. See the title INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, PRESENTMENTS AND COMPLAINTS.

An indictment charged a violation of § 5457, Rev. Stat., and contained four counts, charging first, the possession of two counterfeit coins; second, the unlawful passing of two such coins; third, the unlawful passing of three such coins; and fourth, the counterfeiting of five like coins. Upon request from the jury, the court instructed that a verdict might be returned upon three of the counts though there be a disagreement as to the fourth. Selvester v. United States, 170 U. S. 262, 42 L. Ed. 1029.

Where the jury finds the defendant guilty in the first count for having in possession counterfeit minor coin, and not guilty as to second and third counts, it is a good verdict under an indictment containing three counts, the first charging the defendant with "having counterfeit coin in his possession with intent to defraud certain per-

The phrase "for matter of form" has been construed to relate to technical defects in the form of the action, or pleadings, or proof, or to variances between the one and the other. And where it was found that the plaintiff had no legal title, it was held that his action was not defeated for any matter of form. Meath v. Mississippi Levee Comm'rs, 109 U. S. 268, 273, 27 L. Forms and modes of proceedings.—See, also, the title COURTS, vol. 4, p. 1122. In § 1914, Rev. Stat., providing that the "forms and modes of proceedings" in civil causes, other than equity and admiralty causes, to the circuit and district courts, shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleading, and forms and modes of proceeding existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the state within which such circuit and district courts are held, the words "forms and modes of proceedings" do not apply to proceedings for the enforcement of judgment, as well as proceedings before judgments were rendered, unless they were prescribed by law of the state at the time the provisions of the section took effect; or, if subsequently prescribed by such law, until they have been adopted by general rules in court. Lamaster v. Keeler, 123 U. S. 376, 389, 31 L. Ed. 238.

"In Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 253, these statutes were considered and construed by this court. And in giving a meaning to the language 'forms and modes of proceeding in suits,' the court, speaking by Chief Justice Marshall, said, that it 'embraces the whole progress of the suit, and every transaction in it, from its commencement to its termination, which has been already shown not to take place until the judgment shall be satisfied. It may then and ought to be understood as prescribing the conduct of the officer in the execution of process, that being a part of "the proceedings" in the suit.' 10 Wheat. 32." Lamaster v. Keeler, 123 U. S. 376, 389, 31 L. Ed. 238.

3. A West Virginia statute provided for the redemption of land sold for taxes by the former owner. The words former owner were held to embrace those who, in law, would have owned the lands, upon the death of such owner, if they had not been sold for taxes, or, if sold, had been redeemed within the prescribed time after the sale at which the state purchased. I. General Consideration.

A. Definition.—A forthcoming and delivery bond is a bond given for the security of an officer, conditioned to produce the property levied on when required.[1]

B. Distinction.—A difference has been made between a bond on a ca. sa. and a bond on a fi. fa.[2]

Distinguished from Replevy Bond.—There is a material difference between a forthcoming and delivery bond and a replevy bond.[3]

1. Definition.—Bouvier's Law Dictionary, vol. 1, p. 834.

3. Distinguished from replevy bond.—Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 405, 9 L. Ed. 470.

"In 3 Munf. 417, * * * Judge Roane draws the following distinctions between a forthcoming bond, and what is called a replevy bond, under the statute of Virginia. 1. A replevy bond, under the act, operated a release of the property. 2. Because the surety therein is to be approved by the creditor; a circumstance very material in a bond considered as a substitute for an execution, and wanting as to the sureties upon forthcoming bonds. 3. Because a replevy bond obtained the force of a judgment, by the mere giving thereof; though its execution was suspended, till the expiration of three months, and did not owe its obligation, as a judgment, to

C. Nature and Purpose.—Nature.—The forthcoming bond is regarded as part of the process of execution;[4] but it cannot be considered as a substitute for the property, as the condition requires its return to the sheriff.[5]

Purpose.—The object of a forthcoming and delivery bond is to insure the safe-keeping and faithful return of the property, should its return be required.[6]

D. When Proper.—In Virginia the owner of goods which have been taken by virtue of a writ of fieri facias may give bond to have the goods forthcoming when required.[7] Also in Alabama, where an execution is levied on property, claimed by a person not a party to the execution, such person, upon making oath to the property, may enter into bond, conditioned for the delivery of the property, whenever the claim of the property is determined by the court.[8]

E. Proceedings to Obtain.—The proceedings which produce a forthcoming bond are purely ministerial.[9]

II. Validity.

A forthcoming bond is usually required, by statute, to recite the service and the amount due on the execution under which the property was taken, and be in a penalty double the amount due thereon.[10]

Effect of Error in Recital of Amount.—And the bond is not vitiated by an error in setting out an item of cost, if the aggregate amount is truly stated.[11]

III. Operation and Effect.

A. Before Forfeiture.—On the giving of a forthcoming bond, the property is placed in the possession of the claimant; his custody is substituted for the custody of the sheriff; the property is not withdrawn from the custody of the law.[12] So the giving of the bond does not release the lien upon the property;

The provisions of the third section of the act of congress of May 19th, 1828, adopted the forthcoming bond in Mississippi, as a part of the final process of that state, at the time of the passage of the act. Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. 303, 10 L. Ed. 973.

In Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 588, 14 L. Ed. 553, it was said: "It was objected that the bond did not pursue the statute. 1. That it should have been in double the amount of the goods attached. 2. That the bond described in the declaration is in the penalty of $5,600, to pay whatever judgment should be obtained. The 13th section of the statute, which regulates the giving of the bond, provides that 'it may be in a penalty of double the amount specified in the affidavit, annexed to the writ, as due to the plaintiff, conditioned for the payment of any judgment which may be recovered by the plaintiff in the suit commenced by such attachment, within sixty days after such judgment shall be rendered.' The bond is within the statute."

11. Effect of error in recital of amount.—Williams v. Lyles, 2 Cranch 9, 2 L. Ed. 191.

In Virginia, a forthcoming bond which, in reciting the execution, states the costs to be $20, instead of $12, is not thereby vitiated, if the aggregate of debts and costs be truly stated, but will support a judgment, on motion. Williams v. Lyles, 2 Cranch 9, 2 L. Ed. 191.

12. Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 404, 9 L. Ed. 470.

the property, in contemplation of law, remains in possession of the officer;[13] and the property in the hands of the claimant, under the bond for its delivery, is as free from the reach of other process as it would be in the hands of the sheriff.[14] The debtor is at liberty to deal with the property as his own.[15] So a second judgment is a lien thereon,[16] and the lien thus acquired by the second judgment is not destroyed by subsequently quashing the forthcoming bond.[17]

B. After Forfeiture—1. EFFECT ON ORIGINAL JUDGMENT.—As the forfeiture of a forthcoming bond has the effect of a judgment, it necessarily operates as an extinguishment of the original judgment.[18]

2. EFFECT OF JUDGMENT.—On failure to deliver property held under a forthcoming bond, the bond, on being returned into the clerk's office, will have the effect of a judgment.[19]

C. Estoppel.—A person by executing a forthcoming bond thereby recognizes and is estopped to deny a claim and the validity of a judgment against him rendered upon such claim, the execution of the bond being tantamount to a confession of judgment for the demand.[20]

IV. Quashing Bond.

The plaintiff may quash the bond, and proceed on the original judgment; the defendant can only quash the execution.[21]

Distinction of Lien by Quashing Bond.—See ante, "Before Forfeiture," III, A.

The lien, by virtue of a writ of fieri facias, upon the property of the debtor, is not released by his giving a forthcoming bond, but continues, until such bond is forfeited. Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 405, 9 L. Ed. 470.

"According to the law of Indiana, the giving of the delivery bond did not divest the lien of the attachment upon the goods, which remained, in contemplation of law, in the possession of the officer." Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 279, 25 L. Ed. 145.

14. Property cannot be reached by other process.—Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. Ed. 470.

15. Debtor deals with property as his own.—"After that lien was suspended or discharged, the original judgment being, in contemplation of law, satisfied by the new and substituted security, the debtor was at liberty to deal with the property as his own, and it remained in his possession, subject to any charge or lien impressed upon it either by the act of the party, or by operation of law, the same, after the forthcoming bond, as before the entry of the original judgment." Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 14, 11 L. Ed. 850.

16. Second judgment would become a lien thereon.—If another judgment be entered against the original defendant, this second judgment is a lien upon the property which has been released by the bond. Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850.

17. Lien so acquired not destroyed by subsequently quashing the forthcoming bond.—The effect of such quashing is not to revive the first judgment, and thus restore the lien which was superseded by the execution of the bond. If the forthcoming bond had been shown to have been void ab initio, the result would be different. Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 11 L. Ed. 850.

18. A forthcoming bond forfeited, is an extinguishment of the original judgment. Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. 303, 311, 10 L. Ed. 973.

19. Has effect as judgment after forfeiture.—Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 402, 9 L. Ed. 470; Alexander v. Brown, 1 Pet. 683, 684, 7 L. Ed. 314; Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. 303, 313, 10 L. Ed. 973; Gwin v. Breedlove, 2 How. 29, 36, 11 L. Ed. 167; Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 12, 11 L. Ed. 850.

By the laws of Mississippi, if the bond is forfeited for not delivering the property, it operates as a new judgment against the defendant to the execution, and the sureties to the bond, and merges the prior judgment. Gwin v. Breedlove, 2 How. 29, 36, 11 L. Ed. 167.

The statute of Mississippi declared that it shall have the force and effect of a judgment. Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. 303, 313, 10 L. Ed. 973; Brown v. Clarke, 4 How. 4, 12, 11 L. Ed. 850. See Laws of Miss. of 1827, p. 123, § 2.

So in Virginia.—See Alexander v. Brown, 1 Pet. 683, 684, 7 L. Ed. 314.

20. When execution of bond operates as estoppel.—Sample v. Barnes, 14 How. 70, 75, 14 L. Ed. 330.

21. Quashing bond.—Peyton v. Brooke, 3 Cranch 92, 94, 2 L. Ed. 376.

V. Enforcement.

A. Mode of Proceeding.—By the practice of some courts, the mode of proceeding against a surety on a forthcoming bond, given to obtain the release of property attached, is by rule to show cause why he should not be liable according to the conditions of the bond.[22]

B. Jurisdiction.—Jurisdiction existing in a proceeding by rule, against a surety on a forthcoming bond, to show cause why he should not be liable on the bond, will not cease, because the parties to the rule are citizens of the same state; especially is this true where the defendant in the rule has appeared and answered on merits and the case has gone to judgment.[23] And where a marshal of the district of Wisconsin attached property at the suit of creditors in New York, and then gave it up upon the execution of a bond to himself, for the use of those creditors, it was within the jurisdiction of the district court of the United States for Wisconsin, to entertain a suit by the marshal, suing upon the bond for the New York creditors, against the claimants in Wisconsin, although both parties resided in the same state.[24]

Jurisdiction of Court from Which Execution Issued.—It has been held, that a motion upon a forthcoming bond given to secure possession of property taken under an execution, will not be allowed other than in the same court from which the execution issued.[25]

C. Parties.—A forthcoming bond given in the name of an officer, and his successor in office, may be sued on in the name of the officer, though he has been succeeded in office by another.[26]

D. Notice.—A notice of a motion to award execution on a forthcoming bond executed for the release of property taken under execution will be sufficient if it is so explicit as to render mistake impossible, although the whole of the defendants in the original execution are not named in the notice.[27]

E. Variance.—It is not a natural variance that the declaration stated the bond to have been given to the officer as marshal of the district, while the evidence showed it to have been given him as marshal of the state.[28]

F. Judgment.—If the original judgment be reversed, the reversal of the dependent judgment on the forthcoming bond follows of course; but a special certiorari is necessary to bring up the execution upon which the bond was given, so as to show the connection between the two judgments.[29]

22. Enforcement of bond.—Reilly v. Golding, 10 Wall. 56, 19 L. Ed. 858.

By the practice of the courts of Louisiana, a practice which has been adopted in the circuit court in that district, the mode of proceeding in an attachment suit against a surety on a forthcoming bond given to obtain a release of property attached, is by rule to show cause; and this proceeding being merely incidental to the original suit. Reilly v. Golding, 10 Wall. 56, 19 L. Ed. 858.

23. Jurisdiction.—Reilly v. Golding, 10 Wall. 56, 19 L. Ed. 858.

24. Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 14 L. Ed. 553.

The name of the marshal was merely formal; the real plaintiffs were averred to be citizens of New York. Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 14 L. Ed. 553.

25. So held under law of Virginia.—Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch 299, 302, 2 L. Ed. 115.

26. Parties.—Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 588, 14 L. Ed. 553.

The bond being given in the name of Hutchinson, as marshal, and his successor in office, the suit is well brought in the name of Hutchinson, though he has been succeeded in office by another. The name of the obligee being used as matter of form, the action may be brought in the name of the late marshal or his successor. Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 588, 14 L. Ed. 553.

27. Notice of motion to award execution on forthcoming bond.—Alexander v. Brown, 1 Pet. 683, 684, 7 L. Ed. 314.

28. Variance between declaration and evidence.—Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 14 L. Ed. 553. See the title VARIANCE.

It was not a good exception upon the ground of variation between the evidence and declaration, that the latter stated the bond to have been given to Hutchinson as marshal of the district of Wisconsin, and the former said the state of Wisconsin. They mean the same thing. Huff v. Hutchinson, 14 How. 586, 14 L. Ed. 553.

29. Reversal of judgment.—Bartow v. Petit, 7 Cranch 288, 3 L. Ed. 348. See the title JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

G. New Trial.—The objections, that the declaration on the bond did not show the jurisdiction of the court in the attachment suit; that the verdict was entered for the amount due instead of the penalty of the bond, and that the recovery was for a sum greater than was claimed by the ad damnum in the declaration, are not sufficient for a new trial.[30]

FORTHWITH.—"Forthwith is defined by Bouvier as indicating that 'as soon as by reasonable exertion, confined to the object, it may be accomplished. This is the import of the term. It varies, of course, with every particular case.' In matters of practice and pleading it is usually construed, and sometimes defined by rule of court, as within twenty-four hours. Anderson (Law Dict.) says of the word that it 'has a relative meaning, and will imply a longer or shorter period, according to the nature of the thing to be done.'"[1]

1. Forthwith.—Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 193, 44 L. Ed. 423.

It was provided that a trustee in a deed of trust might declare the principal and interest of the mortgage to be due, if the obligor should not forthwith, upon execution being sued out against it, discharge or pay the execution. It was insisted that the obligor was entitled to a reasonable time in analogy to certain cases which hold that in insurance companies the word forthwith carries this significance. The court said: "There are many cases which turn upon the question whether a person was not too late in complying with a requirement that a thing must be done forthwith, but we can recall none where he has been held in default for doing such act too speedily, and as the corporation in this case made no objection to an instant declaration by the trustees that they would treat the principal and interest of the mortgage as due, it was not within the power of the appellants to set up the fact that they acted with too great haste." Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 193, 44 L. Ed. 423.

"In Simpson v. Henderson (1 Moo. & M. 300), a written contract stipulated that a ship should be ready to take freight on board forthwith. Parol evidence was admitted to show the surrounding circumstances when the contract was made. Lord Tenterden said: 'The word forthwith, indeed, in strictness, means immediately; but it is plain this cannot be the construction to be affixed to it here. It was known that she required some repairs; at least, to be coppered, and some time must be allowed for that.' He left it to the jury to say whether, under the circumstances, the vessel had been made ready within a reasonable time." George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 564, 569, 26 L. Ed. 232.

2. A fortuitous event is that which happens by a cause which we cannot resist. Code of Louisiana. Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U. S. 707, 727, 30 L. Ed. 776.

3. For whom it may concern.—A marine insurance policy on property, "for whom it may concern," will, in ordinary cases, cover belligerent property. Buck v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 151, 160, 7 L. Ed. 90. See, generally, the title MARINE INSURANCE.

4. Found in his possession.—In Thornton v. Schreiber, 124 U. S. 612, 620, 31 L. Ed. 577, it is said: "Counsel for defendants in error, Schreiber & Sons, insist that the words 'found in his possession' are to be construed as referring to the finding of the jury; that the expression means simply that where the sheets are ascertained by the finding of the jury to have been at any time in the possession of the person who committed the wrongful act, such person shall forfeit one dollar for each sheet so ascertained to have been in his possession. We, however, think that the word found means that there must be a time before the cause of action accrues at which they are found in the possession of the defendant." This case arose upon the construction of the words "found in his possession," in § 4965 of the Revised Statutes, imposing certain penalties for infringement of copyright. See, also, the title COPYRIGHT, vol. 4, p. 618.

5. Founder.—In Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 672, 4 L. Ed. 629, the court says: "The founder of all corporations (says Sir William Blackstone), in the strictest and original sense, FRACTIONAL SECTION.—A fractional section is a tract of land not bounded by sectional lines on all sides, in consequence of the intervention of rivers, etc., and containing a less quantity than six hundred and forty acres.[1]

FRACTION OF A DAY.—See DAY, vol. 5, p. 198.

FRANCHISES.—See the titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, vol. 4, p. 423; CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, pp. 630, 677. A franchise is a privilege conferred in the United States by the immediate or antecedent legislation of an act of incorporation, with conditions expressed or necessarily inferential from its language, as to the manner of its exercise and for its enjoyment.[2] is the king alone, for he only can incorporate a society; and in civil corporations, such as mayor, commonalty, etc., where there are no possessions or endowments given to the body, there is no other founder but the king; but in eleemosynary foundations, such as colleges and hospitals, where there is an endowment of lands, the law distinguishes and makes two species of foundation, the one fundatio incipiens, or the incorporation, in which sense the king is the general founder of all colleges and hospitals; the other fundatio perficiens, or the dotation of it, in which sense, the first gift of the revenues is the foundation, and he who gives them is, in the law, the founder; and it is in this last sense we generally call a man the founder of a college or hospital."

1. Brown v. Clements, 3 How. 650, 669, 11 L. Ed. 767. See, generally, the title PUBLIC LANDS.

2. Franchise.—Woods' v. Lawrence County, 1 Black 386, 409, 17 L. Ed. 122.

"What is a franchise? Under the English law Blackstone defines it as 'a royal privilege, or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject.' 2 Bl. Com. 37. Generalized, and divested of the special form which it assumes under a monarchical government based on feudal traditions, a franchise is a right, privilege or power of public concern, which ought not to be exercised by private individuals at their mere will and pleasure, but should be reserved for public control and administration, either by the government directly, or by public agents, acting under such conditions and regulations as the government may impose in the public interest, and for the public security. Such rights and powers must exist under every form of society. They are always educed by the laws and customs of the community. Under our system, their existence and disposal are under the control of the legislative department of the government, and they cannot be assumed or exercised without legislative authority." California v. Central Pac. R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 40, 32 L. Ed. 150, Central Pac. R. Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 91, 124, 40 L. Ed. 903. See, also, Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 441, 38 L. Ed. 773.

"Much confusion of thought has arisen in this case and in similar cases from attaching a vague and undefined meaning to the franchises. It is often used as synonymous with rights, privileges, and immunities, though of a personal and temporary character; so that, if any one of these exists, it is loosely termed a franchise, and is supposed to pass upon a transfer of the franchises of the company. But the term must always be considered in connection with the corporation or property to which it is alleged to appertain. The franchises of a railroad corporation are rights or privileges which are essential to the operations of the corporation, and without which its road and works would be of little value; such as the franchise to run cars, to take tolls, to appropriate earth and gravel for the bed of its road, or water for its engines, and the like. They are positive rights or privileges, without the possession of which the road of the company could not be successfully worked. Immunity from taxation is not one of them. The former may be conveyed to a purchaser of the road as part of the property of the company; the latter is personal, and incapable of transfer without express statutory direction." Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 223, 23 L. Ed. 860; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 114 U. S. 176, 185, 29 L. Ed. 121. See, also, Picard v. Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 130 U. S. 637, 641, 32 L. Ed. 1051.

Not peculiar to corporation.—"Franchises are not peculiar to corporations; they are granted to individuals, and may be held by any persons capable of holding or enjoying property; a franchise is property, a right to the privilege or immunity conferred by the grant; it may be of a corporeal or incorporeal right, but it is a right of property, or proprietv, in the thing to which it attaches. Franchises are of various grades, from that of a mere right of succession to an estate in land, to the grant of a County Palatine, which is the highest franchise known to the law; the nature and character whereof is the same, whether the grant is to one or many." Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 583b, 9 L. Ed. 773.

"It is quite too narrow a definition of the word franchise, used in this statute, to hold it as meaning only the right to be a corporation. The word is generic, covering all the rights granted by the legislature. As the greater power includes every less power which is a part of it, the right to withdraw a franchise must authorize a withdrawal of every or any right or privilege which is a part of the franchise." Railroad Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 365, 25 L. Ed. 185.

"Exemption from taxation being a special privilege granted by the government to an individual, either in gross, or as appurtenant to his freehold, is a franchise." Given v. Wright, 117 U. S. 648, 656, 29 L. Ed. 1021. See the title TAXATION.

An immunity from taxation is not such a franchise of a railroad corporation as will pass by a sale under a mortgage "on the property and franchises of the company" and the term franchises is not synonymous with "rights, privileges, and franchises," "rights, powers and privileges," and the like. Railroad Co. v. County of Hamblem, 102 U. S. 273, 275, 26 L. Ed. 152; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860.

Franchise taxes are levied directly by an act of the legislature, and the corporations are required to pay the amount into the state treasury. They differ from property taxes, as levied for state and municipal purposes, in the basis prescribed for computing the amount, in the manner of assessment, and in the mode of collection, and they are in lieu of all other taxation, state or municipal. Comparative valuation in assessing property taxes is the basis of computation in ascertaining the amount to be contributed by an individual, but the amount of a franchise tax depends upon the business transacted by the corporation and the extent to which they have exercised the privileges granted in their charter. Provident Inst. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 611, 631, 18 L. Ed. 907; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 605, 33 L. Ed. 1025. See the title TAXATION.

I. Scope of Title.

The scope of this article is general rather than special, and is not intended to include fraud in transactions between persons in particular personal relations, such as husband and wife, attorney and client, etc., for which see the specific titles; or fraud as committed by particular classes of persons, such as corporations, executors and administrators, trustees, guardians, etc.; or the effect of fraud on conveyances and instruments, other than deeds, such as mortgages, bonds, negotiable instruments, insurance policies, etc.; or fraud as ground for cancellation, rescission, or reformation of instruments; or fraud in the various sorts of public and fiduciary sales; or the effect of fraud on statutes of limitations; or fraud as a ground for particular remedies in actions, such as arrest, attachment, etc.; or particular classes of offenses involving fraud, such as forgery, embezzlement, etc. For all these, see the specific titles, to which the cross references refer. See, also, the specific internal references below.

II. Definitions.

Fraud.—While fraud is rather a legal conclusion than an independent fact,[1] and may consist in fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude, or implied fraud, which may exist without imputation of bad faith,[2] fraud in the sense of a court of equity, properly includes all acts, omissions and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence, justly reposed, and are

1. A legal conclusion.—"The word 'fraud,' as a term in legal proceedings, generally, is rather a legal conclusion than an independent fact." Wasatch Min. Co. v. Crescent Min. Co., 148 U. S. 293, 298, 37 L. Ed. 454. See post, "Fraud as Question of Law and Fact," III, A.

2. Classification and distinction.—Fraud may mean positive fraud, or fraud in fact involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong, or implied fraud, which may exist without an imputation of bad faith. Bullis v. O'Beirne, 195 U. S. 606, 620, 49 L. Ed. 340; Noble v. Hammond, 129 U. S. 65, 69, 32 L. Ed. 621; Ames v. Moir, 138 U. S. 306, 311, 312, 34 L. Ed. 951; Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 36 L. Ed. 719, and cases cited. See post, "Knowledge and Intent," III, D. See the title BANKRUPTCY, vol. 2, p. 862, et seq.

In Hume v. United States, 132 U. S. 406, 411, 33 L. Ed. 393, the classification by Lord Hardwicke in Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Sen. 125, 155, is quoted thus: "1. Then fraud, which is dolus malus, may be actual, arising from facts and circumstances of imposition; which is the plainest case. 2. It may be apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain itself; such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another.[3]

A fraudulent representation is one of existing material facts, which turn out to be false, made with knowledge of their falsity or with reckless disregard of whether they are true or false.[4]

Collusion.—Collusion is an agreement between two or more persons to defraud a person of his rights by the forms of law, or, to obtain an object forbidden by law.[5]

Covin.—Lord Coke defines covin to be a secret assent, determined in the hearts of two or more, to the defrauding and prejudice of another. Co. Litt. 357 c.[6]

III. Elements and General Principles.

A. Fraud as Question of Law and Fact.—Although it has been said that the question of fraud is one of fact,[7] the question of fraud or no fraud is one necessarily compounded of fact and of law; and without a correct and precise man would accept on the other; which are unequitable and unconscientious bargains, and of such even the common law has taken notice."

An agreement between A and B by which A was to collect money and keep it until B called for it, cannot be taken to imply an obligation to keep and deliver the identical bills or coins. Nor can the subsequent mingling, by the plaintiff in error, of the money collected with his own, constitute an actual, positive fraud, but only such an implied fraud as is involved in most, or all, cases of conversion of property or of breach of contract Noble v. Hammond, 129 U. S. 65, 70, 32 L. Ed. 621.

As to distinction between intentional and constructive fraud or wrongdoing, see Kann v. King, 204 U. S. 43, 62, 51 L. Ed. 360.

3. Definition.—Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122, 128, 32 L. Ed. 878, citing 1 Story Eq. Jur., § 187.

4. Fraudulent representation defined.—Cooper v. Schlesinger, 111 U. S. 148, 28 L. Ed 382; Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall 146, 163, 22 L. Ed. 105; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet 26, 36, 10 L. Ed. 42.

In order to establish a charge of fraud the complainant must show by clear and decisive proof: First, that the defendant has made a representation in regard to a material fact; secondly, that such representation is false; thirdly, that such representation was not actually believed by the defendant, on reasonable grounds, to be true; fourthly, that it was made with intent that it should be acted on; fifthly, that it was acted on by complainant to his damage; and, sixthly, that in so acting on it the complainant was ignorant of its falsity, and reasonably believed it to be true. Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 250, 31 L. Ed. 678. See, also, Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 37, 10 L. Ed. 42; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. Ed. 627.

"In 1 Story's Equity, 201-2, it is thus stated: 'Where the party, intentionally, or by design, misrepresents a material fact, or produces a false impression, in order to mislead another, or to entrap or cheat him, or to obtain an undue advantage of him; in every such case, there is a positive fraud, in the truest sense of the terms; there is an evil act, with an evil intent; dolum malum, ad circumveniendum. And the misrepresentation may be as well by deeds or acts, as by words; by artifices to mislead, as by positive assertions.'" Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 36, 10 L. Ed. 42.

"The requisites to sustain an action for deceit," says Baron Parke, in Watson v. Poulson, 15 Jurist, 1111, are "the telling of an untruth, knowing it to be an untruth, with intent to induce a man to alter his condition, and his altering his condition in consequence, whereby he sustains damage." Ming v. Woolfolk, 116 U. S. 599, 602, 29 L. Ed. 740.

5. Collusion.—Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 190, 44 L. Ed. 423, citing Bouvier.

"It implies the existence of fraud of some kind, the employment of fraudulent means, or lawful means for the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose; but if the action be founded upon a just judgment, and be conducted according to the forms of law and with a due regard to the rights of parties, it is no defense that the plaintiff may have had some ulterior object in view beyond the recovery of a judgment, so long as such object was not an unlawful one." Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 190, 44 L. Ed. 423.

6. Covin.—Conard v. Nicoll, 4 Pet. 291, 295, 7 L. Ed. 862; United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 691, 716, 8 L. Ed. 547.

7. Question of fraud one of fact.—Clark v. United States, 131 U. S., appx. lxxxv, lxxxvi, 18 L. Ed. 915; Humes v. Scruggs, 94 U. S. 22, 28, 24 L. Ed. 51.

knowledge of the facts from which the legal conclusion should be deduced, it is not easy to perceive how any legal conclusion can be reached.[8]

B. Falsity and Tendency to Deceive.—See ante, "Definitions," II; post, "Manner of Perpetration," IV. Falsity and tendency to deceive are essentials of fraud.[9]

C. Materiality.—A fraudulent misrepresentation must be of a material fact.[10]

D. Knowledge and Intent—1. FRAUDULENT INTENT.—Implied fraud or fraud in law, may exist without the imputation of bad faith or immorality.[11]

Ed. 919; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 250, 31 L. Ed. 678; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 615, 34 L. Ed. 246; Farnsworth v. Duffner, 142 U. S. 43, 55, 35 L. Ed. 931.

It is impossible to found an allegation of fraud upon a representation made by and for the defendants in open court, which simply states as a fact that which the bill of the complainant itself distinctly avers was a fact. It is true the defendants, as the bill alleges, based their application for reduced judgments upon this fact of insolvency, but whether the application was or was not meritorious is quite immaterial upon the issue of fraud, so long as the statements upon which it was made were neither fraudulent nor even false. It is entirely plain there was no fraud in the case, and therefore this ground for complainant's relief cannot be sustained. United States v. Beebe, 180 U. S. 343, 350, 45 L. Ed. 563.

"A party can commit a legal fraud, in a business transaction with another, only by fraudulent misrepresentations of fact, or by such conduct or artifice, for a fraudulent purpose, as will mislead the other party, or throw him off his guard, and cause him to omit inquiry or examination which he would otherwise make." Cleveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, 329, 33 L. Ed. 384.

10. Materiality.—Johansson v. Stephanson, 154 U. S. 625, 23 L. Ed. 1009; McFerran v. Taylor, 3 Cranch 270, 2 L. Ed. 436; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 37, 10 L. Where, had the fact claimed to have been misstated been correctly described, it would not have changed the conduct of the parties, it does not invalidate. Johansson v. Stephanson, 154 U. S. 625, 23 L. Ed. 1009.

It would hardly do to hold that a party was induced into a contract by false and fraudulent representations, because one of the vendors represented that he had been governor of the state, and was a member of the church, and president of a bank and a railroad company. If true, they certainly were not false and fraudulent representations, and, if false, they were not of a character to invalidate a contract. Farnsworth v. Duffner, 142 U. S. 43, 55, 35 L. Ed. 931.

Where the full amount which the purchaser had to pay was the amount named in the first instance, to wit, $21,500, and if, in fraud of the rights of their associates, the agents or committee with whom the sale was concluded changed the distribution of that sum, it was a wrong which only the parties injured can take advantage of. Farnsworth v. Duffner, 142 U. S. 43, 55, 35 L. Ed. 931.

Actual and constructive fraud compared.—The law regards an act in violation of the letter and policy of the law more leniently than if it had been committed with the actual intent to defraud any one. Such an act lacks the element of wicked-

Positive fraud or fraud in fact involves moral turpitude or intentional wrong.[12] Actual fraud is always attended by an intent to defraud, and the intent may be shown by any evidence that has a tendency to persuade the mind of its existence.[13] And there must be a purpose to influence the other party and an intent that he shall act thereon.[14] And a fraudulent intent may be inferred, prima facie, from willfully and knowingly doing an illegal act, necessarily injurious to another, but the inference is rebuttable.[15] And this without regard ness necessary to constitute moral turpitude, and a court of equity is slow to disturb rights and titles founded in good faith thereon. Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 36 L. Ed. 719.

14. Intent to influence.—Lehigh Zinc, etc., Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 673, 37 L. Ed. 1215; Marshall v. Hubbard, 117 U. S. 415, 29 L. Ed. 919. See post, "Knowledge," III, D, 2.

"A representation as to a fact, made knowingly, falsely and fraudulently for the purpose of obtaining money from another, and by means of which such money is obtained, creates a debt by means of a fraud involving moral turpitude and intentional wrong." Forsyth v. Vehmeyer, 177 U. S. 177, 182, 44 L. Ed. 723.

If a representation—as the jury, in effect, found—was made with the intent to deceive the plaintiffs in reference to the actual state of things, and to induce them to do what defendants knew they would not otherwise have done, or been asked to do, if this conduct does not constitute positive fraud, or fraud in fact, involving intentional wrong, it is difficult to conceive what circumstances would have amounted to fraud of that character. Strang v. Bradner, 114 U. S. 555, 560, 29 L. Ed. 248.

"Fraud must always principally depend upon the quo animo." Wiscart v. D'Auchy, 3 Dall. 321, 330, 1 L. Ed. 619.

"From a view of all that has been said by learned judges and jurists upon this subject, it may be safely laid down, that, to constitute actual fraud between two or more persons, to the prejudice of a third, contrivance and design to injure such third person, by depriving him of some right, or otherwise impairing it, must be shown. In the case of Chesterfield v. Jansen, 2 Ves. 155, Lord Hardwicke terms it dolus malus. Lord Coke defines covin to be a secret assent determined in the hearts of two or more, to the defrauding and prejudice of another. Co. Litt. 357 c. The acts of 13th Eliz., ch. 5, and 27th Eliz., ch. 4, which did little more than affirm the doctrines of the common law, afford substantially the same definition. The case stated by Lord Mansfield, in Worseley v. DeMattos, 1 Burr. 474 (see also Cadogan v. Kennet, Cowp. 434), of a person, who knowing that a creditor has obtained judgment against his debtor, buys the debtor's goods, though for a full price, with a view to defeat the execution of the creditor, is a strong illustration of the same principle; the purchase was declared to be fraudulent, not because a man may not lawfully purchase the property of a defendant against whom there is a judgment, but because of the intention with which it was made." Conard v. Nicoll, 4 Pet. 291, 295, 7 L. Ed. 862; United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 691, 716, 8 L. Ed. 547.

There is no arbitrary rule by which the good faith of a transaction can be tested, although it may be that ordinary men in similar circumstances would have acted differently. Tiffany v. Lucas, 15 Wall. 410, 422, 21 L. Ed. 198.

Harmless error in decree.—See post, "Verdict and Decree," VI, F.

15. Presumptive intent to defraud by illegal act.—Agnew v. United States, 165 U. S. 36, 49, 41 L. Ed. 624.

"The law presumes that every man intends the legitimate consequence of his own acts. Wrongful acts knowingly or intentionally committed can neither be justified or excused on the ground of innocent intent. The color of the act determines the complexion of the intent. The intent to injure or defraud is presumed when the unlawful act, which results in loss or injury, is proved to have been knowingly committed. It is a well-settled rule, which the law applies in both criminal and civil cases, that the intent is presumed and inferred from the result of the action." Agnew v. United States, 165 U. S. 36, 53, 41 L. Ed. 624. See, also, St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 577, 33 L. Ed. 683.

"'Fraud,' said Mr. Justice Catron, in Lord v. Goddard, 13 How. 198, 14 L. Ed. 111, 'means an intention to deceive.' 'Where one,' said Shipley, Ch. J., in Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Maine 308, 326, 'has made a false representation, knowing it to an intent to make future reparation,[16] or the want of specific intent to prejudice party to whom made.[17] If a motive exist prompting to a particular line of conduct, and it be shown that in pursuing that line a defendant has deceived and defrauded one person, it may justly be inferred that similar conduct towards another, at about the same time, and in relation to a like subject, was actuated by the same spirit.[18]

2. KNOWLEDGE.—But actual knowledge of the falsity of the representations is not necessary; it may be presumed from their nature.[19] But such knowledge to be false, the law infers that he did so with an intention to deceive.' 'If a person tells a falsehood, the natural and obvious consequences of which, if acted on, is injury to another, that is fraud in law.'" Claflin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 110 U. S. 81, 95, 28 L. Ed. 76.

Rebuttable.—The presumption of the intent to injure and defraud, if the facts were found as stated, was not conclusive, but its strength was such that it could only be overcome by evidence that created a reasonable doubt of its correctness; in other words, that as the presumption put the intent beyond reasonable doubt, it must prevail, unless evidence of at least equivalent weight were adduced to the contrary. Agnew v. United States, 165 U. S. 36, 50, 41 L. Ed. 624.

16. Intent to make reparation.—The question of the intent is to be determined by the facts and circumstances and the surroundings at the time of the transaction, without reference to an intent to make reparation in the future. Agnew v. United States, 165 U. S. 36, 57, 41 L. Ed. 624.

17. Personal malice unnecessary.—The false statement of a material matter, knowingly and willfully made, with the intent to deceive is fraudulent, and it is no palliation of the fraud that the party making same did not mean thereby to prejudice the parties to whom it was made, but merely to promote his own personal interest in a matter not involved in the contract with them. Claflin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 110 U. S. 81, 97, 28 L. Ed. 76. See the title INSURANCE.

"No one can be permitted to say, in respect to his own statements upon a material matter, that he did not expect to be believed; and if they are knowingly false, and willfully made, the fact that they are material is proof of an attempted fraud, because their materiality, in the eye of the law, consists in their tendency to influence the conduct of the party who has an interest in them, and to whom they are addressed." Claflin v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 110 U. S. 81, 95, 28 L. Ed. 76.

"'A banker who is, to his own knowledge, hopelessly insolvent, cannot honestly continue his business and receive the money of his customers; and although having no actual intent to cheat and defraud a particular customer, he will be held to have intended the inevitable consequences of his act, i. e., to cheat and defraud all persons whose money he receives, and whom he fails to pay before he is compelled to stop business.'" St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 577, 33 L. Ed. 683. See the title BANKS AND BANKING, vol. 3, p. 23.

18. Inference from motive prompting similar acts.—Butler v. Watkins, 13 Wall. 456, 464, 20 L. Ed. 629.

19. Presumptive knowledge of falsity.—Lehigh Zinc, etc., Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 673, 37 L. Ed. 1215; Wecker v. National Enameling, etc., Co., 204 U. S. 176, 185, 51 L. Ed. 430.

"As a general rule, fraud upon the part of a vendor or lessor, by means of representations of existing material facts, is not established, unless it appears such representations were made for the purpose of influencing the purchaser or lessee, and with knowledge that they were untrue; but where the representations are material and are made by the vendor or lessor for the purpose of their being acted upon, and they relate to matters which he is bound to know, or is presumed to know, his actual knowledge of them being untrue is not essential." Lehigh Zinc, etc., Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 673, 37 L. Ed. 1215.

"Whether the party thus misrepresenting a fact, knew it to be false, or made the assertion, without knowing whether it were true or false, is wholly immaterial; for the affirmation of what one does not know, or believe to be true, is equally, in morals and law, as unjustifiable, as the affirmation of what is known to be positively false. And even if the party innocently misrepresents a fact by mistake, it is equally conclusive; for it operates as a surprise and imposition on the other party. Or, as Lord Thurlow expresses it, in Nevill v. Wilkinson, 'it misleads the parties contracting, on the subject of the contract.'" Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 36, 10 L. Ed. 42; McFerran v. Taylor, 3 Cranch 270, 281, 2 L. Ed. 436.

"A person who makes representations of material facts, assuming or intending to convey the impression that he has actual knowledge of the existence of such facts, when he is conscious that he has no such knowledge, is as much responsible for the injurious consequences of such representations, to one who believes and acts upon them, as if he had actual knowledge of their falsity." Lehigh Zinc, etc., Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 673, 37 L. Ed.

is not to be presumed from the mere fact of falsity.[20]

E. Reliance.—Justifiable reliance, by the party claiming to have been defrauded, upon the alleged fraudulent representations, is essential to relief therefor.[21] Independent and unhindered investigation, and reliance thereon, or the opportunity to investigate where the circumstances make it a duty to investigate, will bar any relief.[22] Although it need not have been the sole reliance, if it

"Even in cases where the direct issue of fraud is involved, knowledge may be imputed where one willfully closes his eyes to information within his reach." Wecker v. National Enameling, etc., Co., 204 U. S. 176, 185, 51 L. Ed. 430. See ante, "Definitions," II.

The cases holding that a misrepresentation of material facts inducing a contract, though made in ignorance, may, in many cases, be the foundation of a suit for its cancellation or modification, apply only where the contract, of which a rescission or modification is sought, was obtained by the party claiming its benefit, and the misrepresentations related to the consideration given for it, and not where they were made by another party, not the agent of the party claiming the benefit of the contract, and without his participation, and not relating to the consideration thereof. Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 633, 636, 25 L. Ed. 1072. See also, post, "By Misrepresentations," IV, B.

20. Not presumed from mere falsity.—"The law raises no presumption of knowledge of falsity from the single fact per se that the representation was false. There must be something further to establish the defendant's knowledge." Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 258, 31 L. Ed 678.

21. Justifiable reliance essential.—Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 615, 34 L. Ed. 246; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. Ed. 627; Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 146, 163, 22 L. "Misrepresentation entitling to relief must be in reference to some material thing unknown to the purchaser, either from not having examined, or from want of opportunity to be informed, or from entire confidence reposed in the vendor." Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 616, 34 L. Ed. 246; Cleaveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, 329, 33 L. Ed. 384; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. Ed. 627; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 37, 10 L. Ed. 42.

One who, in making an exchange of property, did not rely upon what was said by the other party, but acted upon his own judgment and upon information obtained by him from third persons, cannot afterwards set up fraud and misrepresentation. Hoyt v. Hanbury, 128 U. S. 584, 585, 32 L. Ed. 565.

"In order to justify a recovery, it must be shown by proof that the plaintiff's agent relied upon the alleged false representations, and made them the ground and basis of his report, but that he was so circumstanced as to justify him in so relying upon and placing confidence in said representations; and if it appears that he had other knowledge, or had received other representations and statements, conflicting therewith, sufficient to raise reasonable doubts as to the correctness of such representations, then there can be no recovery." Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co., 128 U. S. 383, 387, 32 L. Ed. 439.

22. Independent investigation or opportunity therefor.—Shappirio v. Goldberg, 192 U. S. 232, 241, 48 L. Ed. 419, citing Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. Ed. 627; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 31 L. Ed. 678; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 34 L. Ed. 246; Farnsworth v. Duffner, 142 U. S. 43, 48, 35 L. "If the purchaser investigates for himself and nothing is done to prevent his investigation from being as full as he chooses, he cannot say that he relied on the vendor's representations. Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 31 L. Ed. 678. 'If the party to whom the representations were made,' remarked Lord Langdale, in Clapham v. Shillito, 7 Beavan 146, 149, 'himself resorted to the proper means of verification, before he entered into the contract, it may appear that he relied on the result of his own investigation and inquiry, and not upon the representations made to him by the other party; or if the means of investigation and verification be at hand, and the attention of the party receiving the representations be drawn to them, the circumstances of the case may be such, as to make it incumbent on a court of justice to impute to him a knowledge of the result, which, upon due inquiry, he ought to have obtained, and thus the notion of reliance on the representations made to him may be excluded.'" Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 615, 34 L. Ed. 246. See, also, were proximate, immediate and material.[23]

Facts open to ordinary observation and notice are not such as to be the subject of concealment and misrepresentation.[24]

Facts, as to which notice is chargeable to the party complaining of fraud, cannot be the subject of fraudulent misrepresentations.[25]

F. Damage.—An action for a deceit must fail, where, conceding the alleged representation to have been made by the defendant and to have been false, the plaintiffs were not induced thereby to change their condition, and, moreover, have suffered no damage.[26]

Shappirio v. Goldber, 192 U. S. 232, 241, 48 L. Ed. 419; Farnsworth v. Duffner, 142 U. S. 43, 47, 35 L. Ed. 931; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 31 L. Ed. 678; Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co., 130 U. S. 643, 647, 32 L. Ed. 1054; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 383, 20 L. Ed. 627.

Where the means of knowledge are at hand and equally available to both parties, and the subject of purchase is alike open to their inspection, if the purchaser does not avail himself of these means and opportunities, he will not be heard to say, in impeachment of the contract of sale, that he was deceived by the vendor's misrepresentations. Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. Ed. 627; Farnsworth v. Duffner, 142 U. S. 43, 47, 35 L. Ed. 931; Shappirio v. Goldberg, 192 U. S. 232, 241, 48 L. Ed. 419; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 37, 10 L. Ed. 42.

Thus, where a correct description of the property was given in the deed and recorded chain of title, and the agent who made the sale was intrusted by vendee with the examination of the deed and title, and thirty days were given to complete the purchase, for this purpose the agent was the agent of vendee and it not appearing in the proof that he was misled by the representations of vendor, or that by any scheme or plan he was kept from a full examination of the title and the description of the property contained in the deed furnished, he must be held chargeable with knowledge which the opportunity before him afforded to investigate the extent and nature of the property conveyed and which he undertook to examine for the purchaser, and his knowledge and means of information must be imputed to the purchaser. Shappirio v. Goldberg, 192 U. S. 232, 241, 48 L. Ed. 419. See ante, "Fraudulent Intent," III, D, 1; post, "By Misrepresentations," IV, B.

Inattention and carelessness not relieved against.—"A court of equity will not undertake, any more than a court of law, to relieve a party from the consequences of his own inattention and carelessness." Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 383, 20 L. Ed. 627.

But "there are cases where misrepresentations are made which deceive the purchaser, in which it is no defense to say that had the plaintiff declined to believe the representations and investigated for himself he would not have been deceived." Shappirio v. Goldberg, 192 U. S. 232, 241, 48 L. Ed. 419. See ante, "Fraudulent Intent," III, D, 1; post, "By Misrepresentations," IV, B.

23. Need not be sole reliance.—It must be acted upon by the other party in ignorance of its falsity and with a reasonable belief that it was true. It must be the very ground on which the transaction took place, although it is not necessary that it should have been the sole cause, if it were proximate, immediate and material. Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 615, 34 L. Ed. 246.

24. Facts open to ordinary observation.—Synnott v. Shaughnessy, 130 U. S. 572, 580, 32 L. Ed. 1038.

The law does not afford relief on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation of the other party to one who suffers by not using the ordinary means of information, whether his neglect be attributable to indifference or credulity, nor will industrious activity in other directions, to the neglect of such means, be of any avail. Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co., 130 U. S. 643, 647, 32 L. Ed. 1054; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 385, 20 L. Ed. 627.

25. Facts of which notice is chargeable to complainants.—A charge, by the holder of coupon bonds of a railroad, that he exchanged unpaid coupons for certificates of preferred stock, and was induced to do so by a fraud practiced upon him by the president of the company, on whose representations he relied, cannot be based upon allegations that the company had no authority under its charter to issue such stock, and if it had, the certificates were invalid for want of the common seal of the company to them. The court said that these questions need not be decided, as they depend upon either the general statutory law of the state, or the charter of the company, of both of which the complainant must be presumed to have had notice. Fraud without damage is no ground for

G. Construction of Statutes against Fraud.—Laws enacted to prevent fraud, although revenue laws, are to be considered remedial rather than penal in character, and are to be construed so as most effectually to carry out the object of the legislature.[27]

Fraud upon Statute as Violation Thereof.—A fraud upon a statute is a violation of the statute.[28]

IV. Manner of Perpetration.

A. In General—1. By Agent.—No one can claim the benefit of an executory contract fraudulently obtained for him by an agent, after the discovery of the fraud, without approving and sanctioning it.[29] And a sale made through relief. Garrow v. Davis, 15 How. 272, 277, 14 L. Ed. 692; Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 37, 10 L. Ed. 42; Marshall v. Hubbard, 117 U. S. 415, 417, 29 L. Ed. 919; Angle v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 151 U. S. 1, 10, 38 L. Ed. 55; Farnsworth v. Duffner, 147 U. S. 43, 55, 35 L. Ed. 931.

"In equity, as at law, fraud and injury must concur, to furnish ground for judicial action; a mere fraudulent intent, unaccompanied by any injurious act, is not the subject of judicial cognizance. Truly, there are strong grounds of suspicion; but fraud ought to be conceived; it must be proved, and expressly found." Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. 178, 196, 9 L. Ed. 1046; Conard v. Nicoll, 4 Pet. 291, 297, 7 L. Ed. 862; United States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 691, 716, 8 L. Ed. 547.

Legal or equitable interest essential.—B., as agent for the owners, contracted to sell a large quantity of land in Maine, which contract was assigned by the vendee, until it came, through mesne assignments, into the hands of M. and others. Payments were made from time to time on account; but at length, in consequence of a failure to make the payments stipulated in the contract, and by virtue of a clause contained in it, the contract became void. In this state of things M. employed one P. to ascertain from B. the lowest price that he would take for the land, and then to sell to others for the highest price that he could get. P. sold and assigned the contract to D. for $1,050. Upon the theory that P. and D. entered into a fraudulent combination, still, M. and others are not entitled to demand that a court of equity should consider D. as a trustee of the lands for their use. They had no interest in them, legal or equitable, nor anything but a good will, which alone, was the subject matter of the fraud, if there was any. But the evidence shows that this good will did not exist; for B. was not willing to sell to M. and others for a less price than to any other person Garrow v. Davis, 15 How. 272, 14 L. Ed. 692.

"To entitle themselves to relief, the complainants must prove fraud and damage; or, to state the principle less abstractly, they must show that their agent disposed of what he was employed to sell, for less than its value, and that he did this fraudulently." Garrow v. Davis, 15 How. 272, 277, 14 L. Ed. 692.

Although P. represented himself to be acting for M. and others, when in reality he was representing D., yet he did not obtain the land at a reduced price thereby; but on the contrary, at its fair market value. The charges of fraud in the bill are denied in the answers, and the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the allegations. Garrow v. Davis, 15 How. 272, 14 L. Ed. 692.

27. Construction of statutes.—Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 114, 145, 18 L. Ed. 116; United States Bank v. Lee, 13 Pet. 107, 10 L. Ed. 81; Taylor v. United States, 3 How. 197, 11 L. Ed. 559; Smythe v. Fiske, 23 Wall. 374, 22 L. Ed. 47; United States v. Stowell, 133 U. S. 1, 33 L. Ed. 555. And see the title FRAUDULENT AND VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES.

"Laws enacted for the prevention of fraud, for the suppression of a public wrong, or to effect a public good, are not, in the strict sense, penal acts, although they may inflict a penalty for violating them." Taylor v. United States, 3 How. 197, 210, 11 L. Ed. 559; Wood v. United States, 16 Pet. 342, 10 L. Ed. 987.

28. Fraud upon statute.—Bank v. Owens, 2 Pet. 527, 7 L. Ed. 508.

Whatever is done in fraud of law is done in violation of it. Lee v. Lee, 8 Pet. 44, 8 L. Ed. 860; The William King, 2 Wheat. 148, 4 L. Ed. 206. See, generally, the title STATUTES.

29. By agent.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 535, 29 L. Ed. 934. See Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 146, 163, 22 L. Ed. 105; National Bank, etc., Co. v. Petrie, 189 U. S. 423, 425, 47 L. Ed. 879. See the title PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Same.—And it does not lie with one to claim property through the fraudulent act of another, whether partner or agent, without being affected by that act the same as if it were his own. Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. 172, 189, 16 L. Ed. 424. And the same principle must apply in a case like the present, where a firm doing business as commission merchants have received the fruits of the fraud in the commissions earned for transacting the business.

Fraud may be imputed to the parties, fraud of an agent, may be annulled or relieved against.[30]

2. Under Forms of Law.—Some of the most atrocious frauds are committed according to the forms of law. Indeed, the greater the fraud intended, the more particular the parties to it often are to proceed according to the strictest forms of law.[31]

3. Not Imputable to Government.—Fraud is not imputable to a government.[32]

4. Fraud and Deceit May Precede Its Perpetration.—The fraud and deceit which enable the offender to do the wrong may precede its perpetration. The length of time is not material, provided there is the relation of design and its consummation.[33]

B. By Misrepresentations—1. Must Be of Existing or Past Fact, Not a Mere Opinion.—Statement of Rule.—In order to recover on the ground of false representations, such false representations must be shown to be of a then-existing matter of fact material to the transaction; and no expression of opinion or judgment or estimation, not involving the assertion of an unconditional fact, can constitute actionable false representation.[34] Mere expressions of opinion do not amount to fraudulent misrepresentation,[35] such as estimates of either by direct co-operation in the original design, at the time of its concoction, or by constructive co-operation, from notice of it, and carrying the design, upon such notice, into operation. Magniac v. Thimson, 7 Pet. 348, 8 L. Ed. 709; Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 138, 19 L. Ed. 106. See the title CONSPIRACY, vol. 3, p. 1108, et seq.

30. Fraudulent sale.—"If a principal ratify a sale by his agent, and take the benefit of it, and it afterwards turn out that fraud or mistake existed in the sale, the latter may be annulled, and the parties placed in statu quo; or they may, where the case and the wrong are divisible, be at times relieved to the extent of the injury." Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 134, 157, 12 L. Ed. 1018.

"Where one assuming to be an agent had committed a fraud in a sale, it was held, in Taylor v. Green, 8 Car. and P. 316, that the mere adoption of the sale and the receipt of the money, by the person for whom the sale was made, rendered him liable for the fraud." Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. 172, 189, 16 L. Ed. 424. See, also, post, "Makes Transaction Voidable," V, A, 1.

Agency must be shown.—But, to bind one by the fraud of another, an agency must be affirmatively shown. Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 633, 25 L. Ed. 1072.

35. Expressions of opinion.—Johansson v. Stephanson, 154 U. S. 625, 23 L. Ed. 1009; Andrus v. St Louis Smelting, etc., Co., 130 U. S. 643, 647, 32 L. Ed. 1054; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 250, 31 L. Ed. 678; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Phinney, 178 U. S. 327, 343, 44 L. Ed. 1088; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 50, 23 L. Ed. 203; Connor v. Featherstone, 12 Wheat. 199, 204, 6 L. Ed. 601.

The quantity of ore "in sight" in a mine, as that term is understood among miners, is at best a mere matter of opinion. It cannot be calculated with mathematical or even with approximate certainty. The opinions of expert miners, on a question of this kind, might reasonably differ quite materially. And so with statements as to the nature of the bottom of an ore chamber in a mine which was covered with loose ore slacked down from the ore body, even if proven to have been made, which is doubtful. Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 252, 31 L. Ed. 678.

Positive statement of width and dimensions of veins.—The appellant, in giving a description of a mine in Virginia, which he desired to be exhibited to the appellee in New York, says that one hundred feet on the vein had been developed, which proved to be very rich, much richer than anything yet discovered in the United States. That the surface was rich in gold; that the formation was quite wide, and in one place twelve feet; that the veins were disseminated throughout the whole value,[36] or a misrepresentation of law,[37] whether they turn out to have been accurate or the reverse;[38] or the fitness of the property for a particular purpose;[39] formation, in threads of from two to six inches wide; and that there was ore from the mine that would, without doubt, give several hundred pennyweights of gold to the hundred pounds. Now as to one of these statements, beyond all question, it was a matter of fact; i. e., the one which describes the width of the formation and veins. Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26 39, 10 L. Ed. 42.

"Having made a personal examination, he declares the formation to be wide, gives the actual width in one place, and then the width of the veins, in terms not of conjecture, but of the most positive assertion. He gives their dimensions by feet and inches. This statement, then, comes up to the standard of mathematical certainty. And even in regard to the others, he does not profess to speak of them from conjecture, but speaks of them as they are, without qualification." Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 39, 10 L. Ed. 42. And see the title MINES AND MINERALS.

36. Estimates of value.—This excludes (excepting in peculiar cases) statements by the owner and vendor of property in respect to its value. They are mere trade talk and opinion. Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 250, 31 L. Ed. 678; Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. 264, 271, 8 L. Ed. 120.

"Something more than overestimate of value on the purchaser's part is necessary before it can be said that on this account the debt was fraudulently contracted. A deliberate overestimate and an intention to defraud are essential." South Branch Lumber Co v. Ott, 142 U. S. 622, 632, 35 L. Ed. 1136.

"General assertions by a vendor or lessor, that the property offered for sale or to be leased is valuable or very valuable, although such assertions turn out to be untrue, are not misrepresentations, amounting to deceit, nor are they to be regarded as statements of existing facts, upon which an action for deceit may be based, but rather as the expressions of opinions or beliefs." Lehigh Zinc, etc., Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 673, 37 L. Ed. 1215.

"The law does not hold one responsible for the extravagant notions he may entertain of the value of property, dependent upon its future successful exploitation, or the result of future enterprises; nor for expressing them to one acquainted with its general character and condition." Gordon v. Butler, 105 U. S. 553, 557, 26 L. Ed. 1166.

"The case of Holbrook v. Connor, which arose in the supreme court of Maine, illustrates this doctrine. There the vendor and his agent represented, among other things, that lands sold by them contained large deposits of oil, and were of great value for the purpose of digging, boring for, and manufacturing it; and upon the representations the purchasers acted. The evidence tended to show that the representations were false and fraudulent, and the plaintiff obtained a verdict; but the supreme court set it aside. It appeared that the land had not been tested; and it was unknown to both parties whether it was valuable as oil land, except so far as might be inferred from the production of wells on neighboring lands, and a single well upon the land in question. The court held that under these circumstances the representation was to be regarded as a matter of opinion, and would not support the action. 60 Me. 578." Gordon v. Butler, 105 U. S. 553, 557, 26 L. Ed. 1166.

37. A mere expression of opinion as to a matter of law in respect to which both parties were equally chargeable with knowledge, could not constitute false representation or deceit, as to a condition of the contract. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Phinney, 178 U. S. 327, 343, 44 L. Ed. 1088; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 50, 23 L. Ed. 203.

38. Independent of their accuracy.—A statement of an opinion assigning a certain value to property like a mine or quarry not yet opened is not to be pronounced fraudulent because the property upon subsequent development may prove to be worthless; nor is it to be pronounced honest because the property may turn out of much higher value. And no action will lie for its expression, however fallacious it may prove. Gordan v. Butler, 105 U. S. 553, 557, 26 L. Ed. 1166.

Where, on the subject of value, the answer charges vendor, not with any positive assertion that the property was worth a specific sum, but that it had cost him more than $8,000, and that he had held it at $10,000, the former being proved and the latter not disproved, misrepresentation is not justly imputable to him. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. 264, 271, 8 L. Ed. 120.

"A mistaken opinion of the value of the property, if honestly entertained, and stated as opinion merely, unaccompanied by an assertion or statement, untrue in fact, can never be considered as a fraudulent misrepresentation." Hepburn v. Dunlop, 1 Wheat. 179, 189, 4 L. Ed. 65.

39. Fitness for special purpose.—Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. 264, 271, 8 L. Ed. 120. So far as the fitness of a property for an academy depended on situation or on the buildings, vendee was capable of deciding for himself, and must have acted on his own judgment, and a representation by the vendor in regard thereto is matter of opinion and not fraudulent.

or its healthiness;[40] or mere promissory statements.[41] They must be of an existing or ascertainable fact, as distinguished from a mere matter of opinion or advice.[42]

Exceptions to Rule.—But the rule is different as to opinions upon matters capable of accurate estimation, or opinions of an expert upon the subject,[43] or

40. Healthiness.—So far as it depended on health, the testimony in the cause proves that general reputation was in its favor, and that families from the city sometimes repaired to it for the sake of health. The representation was mere matter of opinion, and the record affords no reason for believing it was not his real opinion. It is true, that vendee's family, after settling on the place, was sickly; but this circumstance may have been produced by other causes, and is not certainly attributable to the place. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. 264, 271, 8 L. Ed. 120.

41. Promissory statements.—Thorwegan v. King, 111 U. S. 549, 550, 28 L. Ed. 514; Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 9, 23 L. Ed. 521; Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 146, 160, 22 L. Ed. 105.

Charges in the complaint in an action of deceit or fraud in the sale of a chattel (a ship)—that the defendant stated he would pay off the encumbrances and liabilities before transferring the boat to prospective corporation, and would convey to it a title free and clear of all liability, on account of an existing debt—were of statements promissory in their nature, relating to the future, dependent on contract merely, and could not be, of themselves the foundation of an action for deceit. At most, it would be but a warranty of the title against encumbrances and liability for debts, for breach of which an action on the agreement would accrue. Thorwegan v. King, 111 U. S. 549, 550, 28 L. Ed. 514.

"The law gives a different effect to a representation of existing facts, from that given to a representation of facts to come into existence. To make a false representation the subject of an indictment, or of an action, two things are generally necessary, viz, that it should be a statement likely to impose upon one exercising common prudence and caution, and that it should be the statement of an existing fact. A promissory statement is not, ordinarily, the subject either of an indictment or of an action." Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 146, 160, 22 L. Ed. 105.

So, too, as to all alleged undertakings on the part of vendor of a claim against a debtor to obtain judgment on the claim. There is no allegation that he was not proceeding for that purpose, without unnecessary delay, up to the time of the death of the debtor, or that vendee, when debtor did die, was not in as good condition, for all the purposes of collection, without a judgment, as he could have been with. Therefore the answer, if taken as true, did not present a valid defense; and, as the defendant could not make any defense by his proof different from that set out in his pleading, the court below very properly refused to hear any testimony in support of the answer. Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 9, 23 L. Ed. 521.

It is difficult to see how an action or a defense can be based upon promissory representations of the character of expressions of hopes, expectations, and beliefs, where neither party understood, or had the right to understand, that they were to be received as statements of facts which any one was bound to make good, or upon which the validity of the contract should depend. Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 146, 163, 22 L. Ed. 105.

42. Must be of existing or past fact.—Cooper v. Schlesinger, 111 U. S 148, 28 L. Ed. 382.

Where the essence of the charge against three defendants in an action for deceit is a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff, carried into execution by a false and fraudulent certificate of valuation of the property given as security for a loan to one of them and the certificate, given by the other two is that, in the best judgment of each, the lots were worth the sums severally stated, to justify any imputation of fraud in giving a certificate, it was necessary to show that the parties signing it had knowledge, at the time, that the value of the property was materially less than their estimate. And from the nature of the property, and its imperfectly developed condition, such knowledge was impossible. No one could know its actual value until further development was made. Until then, any estimate must have been entirely speculative and conjectural. It would depend as much, perhaps, upon the temperament and expectations of the party making it, as upon any knowledge of facts. Gordon v. Butler, 105 U. S. 553, 556, 26 L. Ed. 1166.

So as to an expression of opinion, upon a doubtful state of the boundary, as to whether a tract of land lay in one state or another. Connor v. Featherstone, 12 Wheat. 199, 204, 6 L. Ed. 601.

43. Exceptions to rule.—"For opinions upon matters capable of accurate estimation by application of mathematical rules or scientific principles, such, for example, as the capacity of boilers, or the strength of materials, the case may be different. So, also, for opinions of parties possessing special learning or knowledge upon the subjects in respect to which their opinions are given, as of a mechanic upon the working of a machine he has seen in use, or of a lawyer upon the title or property promissory statements peculiarly within the means of knowledge of the party making same.[44] And a sale "with all faults" does not exempt the seller from liability for any defect but what was consistent with its being the thing described, even where the other party had full opportunity for examination,[45] or when the parties are not dealing on equal terms, and with equal means of information.[46] which he has examined. Opinions upon such matters are capable of approximating to the truth, and for a false statement of them, where deception is designed, and injury has followed from reliance on them, an action may lie. But to this class the present case does not belong." Gordon v. Butler, 105 U. S. 553, 558, 26 L. Ed. 1166.

44. Promissory statements based on special knowledge.—"The law also gives a different effect to those promissory statements based upon general knowledge, information, and judgment, and those representations which, from knowledge peculiarly his own, a party may certainly know, will prove to be true or false." Sawyer v. Prickett, 19 Wall. 146, 160, 22 L. Ed. 105.

"Wherever a sale is made of property, not present, but at a remote distance, which the seller knows the purchaser has never seen, but which he buys upon the representation of the seller, relying on its truth, then the representation, in effect, amounts to a warranty; at least, that the seller is bound to make good the representation." Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 42, 10 L. Ed. 42. See ante, "Knowledge," III, D, 2.

45. Sale "with all faults, as they lie."—The words, "with all faults, as they lie," are very large to exclude the buyer from calling upon the seller for any defect in the things sold; but if the seller was guilty of any positive fraud in the case, these words will not protect him. There might be such fraud, either in a false representation, or in using means to conceal some defect. Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 41, 10 L. Ed. 42.

In this case, where the vendee had no opportunity for examination, the terms of the sale put upon the vendee no hazard or risk but those which were consistent with the mine being such as it was described; those terms in no degree exempted vendor from liability for misrepresentation; but if the mine had been such as described, then they would have exempted him from any liability for failure in its anticipated produce. It may be that the vendor made the representation under the influence of delusion; but it is sufficient, to decide this case, that the representation was untrue in material parts of it. Smith v. Richards, 13 Pet. 26, 43, 10 L. Ed. 42. See ante, "Reliance," III, E.

Under statutes.—But the rule may be changed by statute for the prevention of fraud. Durland v. United States, 161 U. S. 306, 40 L. Ed. 709; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 516, 48 L. Ed. 1092. See post, "Criminal Fraud," VII. See the title POSTAL LAWS.

47. In compromise with creditors.—The representation that a debtor was unable to pay the debt of the plaintiff in full was not equivalent to a representation that the mortgaged property, surrendered under a compromise with his creditors, was all he owned. Liberally construed, the former representation was not inconsistent with the retention of a part of his means for the support of his family or to meet the demands of other creditors. Hoffman v. Overbey, 137 U. S. 465, 472, 34 L. Ed. 754. See the title COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT, vol. 3, p. 998.

48. Fraudulent recommendation.—Russell v. Clarke, 7 Cranch 69, 94, 3 L. Ed. 271.

The question how far merchants are responsible for the character they give each other, is one of much delicacy, and of great importance to the commercial world. That a fraudulent recommendation (and a recommendation, known at the time, to be untrue, would be deemed fraudulent) would subject the person giving it to damages sustained by the person trusting to it, seems now to be generally admitted. Russell v. Clarke, 7 Cranch 69, 94, 3 L. Ed. 271.

In an action for making false representations as to the pecuniary condition of a third party by which loss was caused to plaintiff, if an impression, not only of their solvency but of their success in business, so that by selling largely to them no more than the ordinary risks of business were incurred, was made and authorized by the letters, in which the representations were made, while, at the same time, their true

But a misrepresentation of the solidity of a mercantile house, made under a mistake of the fact without any interest of fraudulent intention, will not sustain an action, although the plaintiff may have suffered damage by reason of such misrepresentation.[49] Parol evidence is competent to show such in-condition was known to the defendant, which did not authorize such a representation, and which was intended to deceive and mislead the plaintiffs, the defendant may be justly held responsible. Iasigi v. Brown, 17 How. 183, 196, 15 L. Ed. 205.

In Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. 172, 180, 16 L. Ed. 424, it was alleged that the defendants fraudulently sold on credit, to one C., certain goods belonging to the plaintiff, and which he had previously intrusted to them, as commission merchants, for sale; and that the purchaser, at the time of the sale, was in failing circumstances and irresponsible; charging, in the same connection, that the defendants, at the time of the transaction, well knew that the purchaser was insolvent, and wholly unfit to be trusted; and that they negotiated the sale with intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff, whereby he suffered loss to an amount equal to the value of the goods so sold and delivered. And it was also alleged, in other counts, that the defendants, prior to the sale of the goods, and at the time when it was made, represented to plaintiff that the said C. was worth at least eight thousand dollars above all his liabilities; that he was not embarrassed in his business affairs, or much indebted, and that he was a safe, cautious business man, and every way worthy of credit. Those representations, the plaintiff alleged, were false, and that the defendants well knew they were so at the time of the negotiation, and when the goods were delivered; and that they were so made by the defendants with intent to deceive and defraud him in the premises, and had the effect to induce him to consent to the sale, and to deliver the goods, whereby he suffered loss, as is alleged in the other counts. On a plea of not guilty, no question was made as to the right of action if the allegations were proved.

Advances to uphold credit.—"That a false representation by one person of the credit of another, by which a third person is deceived and injured, is a fraud upon the parties so deceived, is undeniable. A letter of credit, giving to the person in whose favor it is written a character for solidity, which the writer knows to be untrue, is of this description. But to uphold the credit of a merchant, by advances to any amount, made by his friends, or by his creditors, for the purpose of preventing his failure, and of enabling him to go on, under the expectation that he may thereby acquire the means of discharging his debts, and of maintaining a standing in the commercial world, has never yet been decided, by any English or American court, to be a fraud upon any third person, who, misled by appearances, may have dealt with and given credit to the person so assisted. No case resembling it has been produced or alluded to. There is, in fact, an absence of that kind of suggestio falsi, or suppressio veri, which the law considers as amounting to actual or even constructive fraud." Conard v. Nicoll, 4 Pet. 291, 299, 7 L. Ed. 862.

49. Intent to deceive essential to liability.—Russell v. Clarke, 7 Cranch 69, 3 L. Ed. 271; Lord v. Goddard, 13 How. 198, 211, 14 L. Ed. 111.

"Merchants know the circumstances under which recommendations of this description must be given. They know that when one commercial man speaks of another in extensive business, he must be presumed to speak from that knowledge only which is given by reputation. He is not supposed to have inspected all the books and transactions of his friend, with the critical eye which is employed in a case of bankruptcy. He must, therefore, be supposed to speak of the credit, not of the actual known funds of the person he recommends; of his apparent, not of his real solidity. In such a case, it is certainly incautious and indiscreet to use terms which imply absolute and positive knowledge. It may, perhaps, be admitted, that, in such a case, fraud may be presumed on slighter evidence than would be required in a case where a letter was written with more circumspection. Yet, even in such a case, where the communication is honestly made, and the party making it has no interest in the transaction, he has never been declared to be responsible for its actual verity. The reason of the rule is, that merchants generally possess, and are therefore presumed, in their correspondence, to speak from that knowledge only of the circumstances of other merchants, which may be acquired by observing their course of business, their punctuality and their general credit." Russell v. Clarke, 7 Cranch 69, 95, 3 L. Ed. 271.

Where an action was brought against certain persons for giving a commercial letter of recommendation with intention to defraud and deceive, whereby the party to whom the letter was addressed gave credit and sustained a loss, the question for the jury ought to have been whether or not there was fraud and an intention to deceive, in giving the letter. The gist of the action is fraud in the defendants, and damages to the plaintiff. Fraud means an intention to deceive. If there was no such intention; if the party honestly stated his own opinion, believing at the time that he stated the truth, he is not liable in this form of action, al-tent,[50] and circumstantial evidence is freely admitted.[51]

b. Title to Property and Matters Collateral Thereto.—False and fraudulent representations upon the sale of real property may undoubtedly be ground for an action for damages, when the representations relate to some matter collateral to the title of the property and the right of possession which follows its acquisition, such as the location, quantity, quality and condition of the land, the privileges connected with it, or the rents and profits derived therefrom.[52] Or they may be ground for setting aside a contract of sale.[53]

Obtaining Credit by Pretense of Title.—If A sells or conveys his lands or slaves to B, and then produces to another his previous paper title, and obtains though the representation turned out to be entirely untrue. Lord v. Goddard, 13 How. 198, 211, 14 L. Ed. 111.

Opinion as to value of claim sold.—Where a party, knowing the pecuniary condition of a debtor, purchased a claim against him of an ascertained amount, an opinion, however erroneous, expressed by the seller as to the value of the claim, does not affect the validity of the sale. Under such circumstances, each party is presumed to rely upon his own judgment. Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 23 L. Ed. 521.

50. Parol evidence to show intent.—"No individual can be held responsible for a statement of facts, however injurious they may be to an individual or company. But when there is a misstatement of facts in regard to the pecuniary ability of an individual or company, and, especially, if this be done through interested motives or a fraudulent intent, by reason of which a credit is given and the debt is lost, the facts which conduce to establish the liability must, as in this case, be outside of the writing. And if these facts may not be established by parol evidence, there can be no remedy in such cases, however gross the fraud or ruinous the consequences may be." Iasigi v. Brown, 17 How. 183, 194, 15 L. Ed. 205. See the title PAROL EVIDENCE.

51. Circumstantial evidence.—Where the cause of action against the defendants was that they had fraudulently sold the goods of the plaintiff, evidence was admissible to show that the purchaser was largely in debt and insolvent, and that the defendants represented him to be in good credit. The force and effect of such circumstantial evidence is for the jury to judge of the intent. Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. 172, 16 L. Ed. 424.

52. Title to property and collateral matters.—Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co., 130 U. S. 643, 648, 32 L. Ed. 1054; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 614, 34 L. Ed. 246.

"Such representations by the vendor as to his having title to the premises sold may also be the ground of action where he is not in possession, and has neither color nor claim of title under any instrument purporting to convey the premises, or any judgment establishing his right to them. Thus in Wardell v. Fosdick, 13 Johns, 325, an action for deceit was sustained against the vendor of land which had no actual existence, the court holding that in such case the purchaser might treat the deed as a nullity. The land not being in existence there could be no possession, and of course no eviction, and consequently no remedy upon the covenants, and the purchaser would be remediless if he could not maintain the action." Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co., 130 U. S. 643, 648, 32 L. Ed. 1054.

It was held in Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co., 130 U. S. 643, 646, 32 L. Ed. 1054, that the gist of the action was the alleged deceit practised upon the plaintiff by the agents, attorneys and officers of the defendant company to induce him to purchase from it a lot in Leadville, by representing that it had obtained a release of the right of all claimants to the land, and could put him into immediate possession; whereas, upon attempting to enter upon the land purchased, he found another in possession, who refused to surrender it, and thus he was kept out of possession from the time of his purchase, March 27, 1879, to February 22, 1883, during which period he lost its rental value. There could be no recovery, as no misrepresentation was shown and if any were made, they had been merged in the covenant for quiet possession contained in the deed, which had not been broken. See the title VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

53. Same—Rescission.—Where a person desired to purchase land from a party who was ignorant that he had any title to it, or where the land was situated; and the purchaser made fraudulent representations as to the quantity and quality of the land, and also as to a lien which he professed to have for taxes which he had paid; and finally bought the land for a grossly inadequate price, the sale will be set aside. C. By Concealment or Nondisclosure—1. CONCEALMENT OR SUPPRESSION.—Statement of Principle.—A suppression of a material fact, which one was bound in good faith to disclose, is equivalent to a false representation.[55] The gist of the action of deceit is fraudulently producing a false impression upon the mind of the other party; and if this result is accomplished, it is unimportant whether the means of accomplishing it are words or acts of the defendant, or his concealment or suppression of material facts not equally within the knowledge or reach of the plaintiff.[56] But to constitute fraud, the intent to Any concealment of material facts, when there is a duty to make full disclosure, is fraudulent, in law at least, if not in fact. Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 286, 35 L. Ed. 678.

In a court of conscience deliberate concealment is equivalent to deliberate falsehood. When a living man speaks in such a court to enforce a dead man's contract with himself against parties who he knows are ignorant of the facts, he must be frank in his statements, unless he is willing to take the risk of presumptions against him. 56. Production of false impression the gist of the matter.—Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co., 128 U. S. 383, 388, 32 L. Ed. 439.

"At the same time, silence may be under some circumstances equivalent to false representation. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co., 128 U. S. 383, 388, 32 L. Ed. 439, where it is stated: 'In an action of deceit, it is true that silence as to a material fact is not necessarily, as matter of law, equivalent to a false representation. But mere silence is quite different from concealment; aliud est tacere, aliud celare; a suppression of the truth may amount to a suggestion of falsehood; and if, with intent to deceive, either party to a contract of sale conceals or suppresses a material fact, which he is in good faith bound to disclose, this is evidence of an equivalent to a false representation, because the concealment or suppression is in effect a representation that what is disclosed is the whole truth.' Applying these rules to the case in hand, we find no adequate ground for disturbing the decree." Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 616, 34 L. Ed. 246. See Morgan v. Railroad Co., 96 U. S. 716, 720, 24 L. Ed. 743; Armstrong v. Ashley, 204 U. S. 272, 286, 51 L. Ed. 482. See, also, Wiser v. Lawler, 189 U. S. 260, 271, 47 L. Ed. 802; Wheeler v. New Brunswick, etc., R. Co., 115 U. S. 29, 29 L. Ed. 341.

Examples.—"The case of Laidlaw v. Organ, 2 Wheat. 178, 4 L. Ed. 214, is much in point. In an action by the buyer of tobacco against the sellers to recover possession of it, there was evidence that before the sale the buyer, upon being asked by Girault, one of the sellers, whether there was any news which was calculated to enhance its price or value, was silent, although he had received news, which the seller had not, of the Treaty of Ghent. The court below, 'there being no evidence that the plaintiff had asserted or suggested anything to the said Girault, calculated to impose upon him with respect to the said news, and to induce him, to think or believe that it did not exist,' directed a verdict for the plaintiff. Upon a bill of exceptions to that direction, this court, in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, held that while it could not be laid down, as a matter of law, that the intelligence of extrinsic circumstances which might influence the price of the commodity, and which was exclusively

Confidential Relation or Inequality.—Where there is a relation of trust and confidence between the parties, or they are not dealing upon equal terms, the duty to make full disclosure is more peremptory.[58] And the facts must not be known or ascertainable by the other party or his agent or attorney.[59] within the knowledge of the vendee, ought to have been communicated by him to the vendor, yet, at the same time, each party must take care not to say or do anything tending to impose upon the other, and that the absolute instruction of the judge was erroneous, and the question whether any imposition was practised by the vendee upon the vendor ought to have been submitted to the jury." Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co., 128 U. S. 383, 388, 32 L. Ed. 439.

In the case at bar, an action for deceit, the words and conduct relied on as amounting to false representations were those of the seller of a large herd of cattle ranging over an extensive territory, and related to the number of the herd itself, of which he had full knowledge, or means of information, not readily accessible to a purchaser coming from abroad; and the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that the defendant, while going over the ranche with the plaintiff's agent, made positive false representations as to the number of calves branded during the year, and also fraudulently prevented him from procuring other information as to the number of calves and consequently as to the number of cattle on the ranche, all this was properly submitted to the jury to pass on the question of fraud. Stewart v. Wyoming Cattle Ranche Co., 128 U. S. 383, 389, 32 L. Ed. 439.

In a purchase of the stock of C. corporation by T. through an agent for the account of T.'s wife, from A., trustee in bankruptcy of the holder, where T. was a stockholder, officer, and trustee of the company, and had been, from the first, actively engaged in the management of its affairs, and as trustee was solely intrusted with the custody of the assets, books, and papers of the corporation, and had full and complete knowledge of all matters pertaining to the assets and business of the company, knowing that the plaintiff or his bankrupt estate was entitled to dividends amounting to at least $10,500, received by T. upon entering upon the discharge of his duties as trustee, which fact he concealed and misrepresented the value of these assets and induced the sale to his wife, she knowing the circumstances, for the price of $1,200, property which the state circuit court found to be of the value of $15,000, the charge of fraud made in the petition was, therefore, fully sustained. In Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 258, 31 L. Ed. 678, it was held that the testimony, and all the other facts and circumstances of record, did not substantiate complainant's theory of the case on the question of fraud by concealment of material facts, in other words, there was not a satisfactory case of fraudulent representation on this point made out—not such a case as would justify the interposition of a court of equity to set aside the contract under consideration on the ground of fraudulent representations.

credit in good faith, knowing that he is unable to pay for them at the time, but believing that he will be able to pay for them at the maturity of the bill, he is guilty of no offense even if he be disappointed in making such payment. But if he purchases them, knowing that he will not be able to pay for them, and with an intent to cheat the vendor, this is a plain fraud, and made punishable as such by statutes in many of the states.[60] Caveat venditor is the rule.[61] And the vendor is entitled to disaffirm and recover the goods, where no other rights intervene.[62] Although the purchaser has become bankrupt.[63]

D. By Violation of Confidential Relations.—The rules of law controlling the contracts of parties not standing on an equality are peculiar, and are intended to protect them against their own imprudence. And fraud may be predicated of transactions between such parties, which would be unimpeachable if they stood on an equality with each other.[64]

60. Purchase of goods on credit.—Durland v. United States, 161 U. S. 306, 313, 40 L. Ed. 709; Evans v. United States, 153 U. S. 584, 592, 38 L. Ed. 830; Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S. 631, 633, 23 L. Ed. 993.

Semble, that a trader who was hopelessly insolvent, knew that he could not pay his debts and that he must fail in business and thus disappoint his creditors, could not honestly take advantage of a credit induced by his apparent prosperity and thus obtain property which he had every reason to believe he could never pay for. In such a case he does an act, the necessary result of which will be to cheat and defraud another, and the intention to cheat will be inferred. St. Louis, etc.. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 576, 33 L. Ed. 683.

Insolvency between purchase and delivery.—Where A. had purchased wine, to be delivered to him on call between certain dates, and to be paid for on delivery, when the wines were delivered vendors were entitled to payment. Delivery and payment were, substantially, concurrent acts. And if A. made his call, with the knowledge that he was then insolvent, and with the purpose of getting possession of the wines and shipping them out of the state without paying for them according to the terms of the executory agreement of June 9, and received them with that preconceived intent—and there was evidence that justified the jury in so finding—he was guilty of fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong. Ames v. Moir, 138 U. S. 306, 312, 34 L. Ed. 951.

Fraudulent combination to obtain goods.—An action on the case will lie against two defendants, for fraudulently obtaining the property of the plaintiffs, alleging a combination and prearrangement between them, by which one purchased goods to a large amount of different parties in New York, and among others of the plaintiffs, upon false and fraudulent representations of his means and business, and the other sold them at St. Louis, within a few days afterwards, at auction, for less than their cost price, and appropriated the proceeds to his own use; the whole thing being alleged to have been done with intent to defraud the vendors of their property. Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 19 L. Ed. 106. See the title CONSPIRACY, vol. 3, p. 1108.

61. Caveat venditor the rule.—"While caveat emptor is the rule as to the thing sold, caveat venditor is also the rule as to the pecuniary condition and solvency of the purchaser." South Branch Lumber Co. v. Ott, 142 U. S. 622, 632, 35 L. Ed. 1136.

62. Right to disaffirm.—Where a party, by fraudulently concealing his insolvency and his intent not to pay for goods, induces the owner to sell them to him on credit, the vendor, if no innocent third party has acquired an interest in them, is entitled to disaffirm the contract and recover the goods. Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S. 631, 23 L. Ed. 993. See the title RESCISSION, CANCELLATION AND REFORMATION.

63. Purchaser a bankrupt.—The defeasible title of the vendee to the goods so acquired vests in his assignee in bankruptcy, and is subject to be determined by the prompt disaffirmance of the contract by the vendor. Donaldson v. Farwell, 93 U. S. 631, 23 L. Ed. 993. See the title BANKRUPTCY, vol. 2, p. 893, et seq.

64. Confidential relations.—Taylor v. Taylor, 8 How. 183, 199, 12 L. Ed. 1040; Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 82, 17 L. Ed. 732.

"The rules of law supposed to control the contracts of parties who do not stand upon a perfect equality, but who deal at a disadvantage on the one side, whether applicable to the relations of parent and child, trustee and cestui que trust, attorney and client, or principal and agent, have been laid down in various cases in the courts both of England and of our own country. To trace these rules to the several cases by which they have been propounded would be an undertaking rather of curiosity, than of necessity or usefulness here, as the extent to which this court has applied them, or is disposed to apply them in cases resembling the present, may be found within a familiar and direct range of inquiry. They are aptly exemplified by the late Justice Story,

Concealment or Nondisclosure.—Where two parties are not dealing on equal terms mere inaction and nondisclosure may amount to fraud.[65] But courts of equity will not arrest or set aside an act or contract, merely because a man of more honor would not have entered into it. There must be some relation between the parties which compels the one to make a full discovery to the other, or to abstain from all selfish projects. But when such a relation does exist, courts of equity, acting upon this superinduced ground, in aid of general morals, will not suffer one party, standing in a situation of which he can avail himself against the other, to derive advantage from that circumstance.[66] in his treaties on Equity Jurisprudence, vol 1, § 307, where, speaking of frauds which 'arise from some peculiar confidence or fiduciary relation between the parties,' he remarks: 'In this class of cases there is often found some intermixture of deceit, imposition, overreaching, unconscionable advantage, or other mark of direct and positive fraud. But the principle on which courts of equity act in regard thereto stands independent of any such ingredients, upon a motive of public policy; and it is designed in some degree as a protection to the parties against the effects of overweening confidence and self-delusion, and the infirmities of hasty and precipitate judgment. These courts will therefore often interfere in such cases, where, but for such peculiar relations, they would wholly abstain from granting relief, or grant it in a very modified and abstemious manner.'" Taylor v. Taylor, 8 How 183, 199, 12 L. Ed. 1040.

65. By concealment and nondisclosure. —Graffam v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 180, 187, 29 L. Ed 839. See ante, "By Concealment or Nondisclosure," IV, C.

In this case standing by and seeing the other laying out money, and letting her go on without informing her of her position and of his rights, considering the haracter of the respective parties, was uself a fraud. Graffam v. Burgess, 117 U. S. 180, 187, 29 L. Ed. 839.

Thus, a person dealing with an unlettered man who can neither read nor write, and taking from him a promissory note for the payment of money and a deed for property, in trust, to secure the payment, is bound to show, when he seeks to enforce them, that they, or the material parts of them, were read and fully explained to the party before they were executed, and that he fully understood their meaning and effect. Held, that in this case no fraud was shown Selden v Myers, 20 How 506, 15 L. Ed. 976

Quære, what concealment or suppression of material facts, in a contract where both parties have not equal access to the means of information, will avoid the contract? Etting v. United States Bank, 11 Wheat. 59, 6 L. Ed. 419.

Parol evidence.—If this fact is established by positive and unimpeached testimony, parol evidence cannot be received, to show that the contract was different from that expressed in the writings, or that nothing was at that time due from the party who executed the instruments. Selden v. Myers, 20 How. 506, 15 L. Ed. 976. See the title PAROL EVIDENCE.

66. Duty to speak must exist.—Taylor v. Taylor, 8 How. 183, 200; 12 L. Ed. 1040; Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 82, 17 L. Ed. 732.

But where there is no such relation of trust or confidence between the parties as imposes upon one an obligation to give full information to the other, the latter cannot proceed blindly, omitting all inquiry and examination, and then complain that the other did not volunteer to give the information he had. Cleaveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, 329, 33 L. Ed. 384; Armstrong v. Ashley, 204 U. S. 272, 286, 51 L. Ed. 482; Brooks v. Martin, 2 Wall. 70, 82, 17 L. Ed. 732, where the contract was an executed one.

A concealment of material facts known to the vendor and unknown to the vendee, which are calculated to influence the action or operate to the prejudice of the vendee, is fraudulent, but where the facts lie equally open to both vendor and vendee, with equal opportunities of examination, and the vendee undertakes to examine for himself, without relying on the statements of the vendor, it is no evidence of fraud in such case that the vendor knows facts not known to the vendee and conceals them from him. Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 676, 34 L. Ed. 246; Cleaveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, 329, 33 L. Ed. 384; Laidlaw v. Organ, 2 Wheat. 178, 4 L. Ed. 214.

"It was said by the court of appeals of New York in Viele v. Judson, 82 N. Y. 32, 40, of the cases holding a party to be estopped by his silence: 'In all of them the silence operated as a fraud and actually itself misled. In all there was both the specific opportunity and apparent duty to speak. And, in all, the party maintaining silence knew that some one else was relying upon that silence, and either acting or about to act as he would not have done had the truth been told. These elements are essential to create a duty to speak.'" Wiser v. Lawler, 189 U. S. 260, 272, 47 L Ed 802. See, also, Laidlaw v. Organ, 2 Wheat. 178, 195, 4 L. Ed. 214.

Thus, when two or more persons have a common interest in a security, equity will not allow one to appropriate it ex-

E. Fraudulent Incorporation.—The facts attending the organization of a corporation may be such as to constitute a fraudulent incorporation.[67]

F. Purchase of Public Land with Purpose of Paying in Scrip.—If, under the law of a state, revenue bond scrip could be used in meeting any obligations due to it, it could not be regarded as a fraud to do what the law allowed to be done. Nor was it, in any legal sense, a fraud for purchasers of land from the state to form the purpose of tendering such scrip in payment in order that there might be a judicial determination of the question of its validity.[68]

G. Retention of Property after Lien Extinguished.—The retention of property, after the extinguishment of a lien, becomes a fraudulent possession.[69]

H. Unfair Competition.—Competition in efforts to secure the market is doubtless lawful. A manufacturer may by superior energy, or enterprise, supply all the buyers of a particular article, and thus leave no market for similar articles manufactured by others. But he may not fraudulently or by deceitful representations induce another to withhold from sale his products without being answerable for the injury occasioned by the fraud.[70] clusively to himself, or to impair its worth to the others. Community of interest involves mutual obligation. If, ex. gr., a corporation issue many bonds and give a mortgage on all its estates to secure them, one holder of the bonds—admitting that he has a right to make use of the mortgage to enforce the payment of the bonds which he holds—has no right to employ it as an instrument by which he may become the owner of the property mortgaged at the lowest price at which it can be obtained, leaving the bonds held by his associate holders unpaid. His duty, if he uses it at all, is to make it productive of the most that can be obtained for all who are interested in it, and if he seek to make a profit out of it at the expense of those whose rights in it were the same at his own, he is guilty of fraud. Jackson v. Ludeling, 21 Wall. 616, 22 L. Ed. 492. See the titles ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, vol. 2, p. 703; INFANTS; INSANITY; PARENT AND CHILD; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES; UNDUE INFLUENCE, etc. See, also, the title ESTOPPEL, vol. 5, p. 939, et seq.; 950, et seq.

67. Fraudulent incorporation.—It was held in Lloyd v. Preston, 146 U. S. 630, 36 L. Ed. 1111, that the bare statement of the facts attending the organization of the railroad company in question fully justified the opinion of the court below "that the entire organization was grossly fraudulent from first to last, without a single honest incident or redeeming feature." See the titles CORPORATIONS, vol. 4, pp. 661, 792; RAILROADS.

As to effect of such fraud on stock subscriptions and liability thereunder, see the titles STOCK AND STOCKHOLDERS. See, also, the title RAILROADS.

Effect on status of bonds.—Assuming that the facts make out a case of fraud in the organization of a corporation to take over paper mill properties and pay therefor in money and stock of the corporation, and in the purchase of the mill properties, it is difficult to see how they affect the validity of bonds issued by such corporation and secured by mortgage on the properties, as a whole, and the right of the trustee to foreclose, or how they can entitle the complainant to compel the bondholders, so far at least as they were innocent holders, to set off their indebtedness to the paper company for stock, against the indebtedness of the company upon the bonds. Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 200, 44 L. Ed. 423.

68. Purchase of public land for scrip.—Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 204, 209, 42 L. Ed. 137. If the deed had been obtained under assurances that the deferred installments of purchase price should be paid in money and not in revenue bond scrip, it may be that the commissioners, in a proper proceeding, could have obtained a rescission of the contract.

If the legal title passed by a valid deed from the commissioners of the sinking fund then the right of the grantee to possession was not impaired by the circumstance that he intended to insist upon paying the deferred installments of purchase money in revenue bond scrip, and possession could not be withheld on the ground that this was a fraud. Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 204, 208, 42 L. Ed. 137.

69. Retention of property after lien extinguished.—Randel v. Brown, 2 How. 406, 11 L. Ed. 318. See the title LIENS.

70. Unfair competition.—Butler v. Watkins, 13 Wall. 456, 463, 20 L. Ed. 629. "Whether negotiations for a purchase never concluded were in fact fraudulent; whether they were commenced and continued solely with the purpose of dishonestly inducing the plaintiff to forego offering his goods until the market had been supplied, and whether such was the consequence of the defendants' fraudulent conduct, were questions of fact which should have been submitted to the jury on the evidence. If answered affirmatively,

See, also, Hartshorn v. Day, 19 How. 211, 222, 15 L. Ed. 605; Insurance Co. v. Lyman, 15 Wall. 664, 670, 21 L. Ed. 246; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 64, 25 L. Ed. 650, where this is said, of cases where the actual or constructive fraud grows out of the conduct of parties directly to each other, or is consequential from such conduct.

"Wherever there is a gross misrepresentation of facts, relating to the subject of a contract, the contract is fraudulent and void. If, therefore, the jury shall be of opinion that such a misrepresentation was made, in the present instance, they should consider the conveyance as no payment, although the plaintiffs agreed, under the deception, to accept it in satisfaction; and the verdict must be for damages to the whole amount of the demand." Cochran v. Cummings, 4 Dall. 250, 1 L. Ed. 820.

Although public documents of the government, accompanying property found on board of the private ships of a foreign nation, are to be deemed prima facie evidence of the facts which they state, yet they are always open to be impugned for fraud; and whether that fraud be in the original obtaining of those documents, or in the subsequent fraudulent and illegal use of them, where once it is satisfactorily established, it overthrows all their sanctity, and destroys them as proof. The Amistad, 15 Pet. 518, 10 L. Ed. 826.

"The most solemn transactions and judgments may, at the instance of the parties, be set aside or rendered inoperative for fraud. The fact of being a party does not estop a person from obtaining in a court of equity relief against fraud. It is generally parties that are the victims of fraud. The court of chancery is always open to hear complaints against it, whether committed in pais or in or by means of judicial proceedings." Johnson v. Waters, 111 U. S. 640, 667, 28 L. Ed. 547. See the title RESCISSION, CANCELLATION AND REFORMATION, for full treatment.

"Void" often used in sense of "voidable."—The word "void" is often used in statutes and legal documents, such as deeds, leases, bonds, mortgages, and others, in the sense of voidable merely, that is capable of being avoided, and not as meaning that the act or transaction is absolutely a nullity, as if it never had existed, incapable of giving rise to any rights or obligations under any circumstances. Thus we speak of conveyances void as to creditors, meaning that creditors may avoid them, but not others. Leases which contain a forfeiture of lessee's estate for nonpayment of rent, or breach of other condition, declare that on the happening of the contingency the demise shall thereupon become null and void, meaning that the forfeiture may be enforced by reentry, at the option of the lessor. It is sometimes said that a deed obtained by fraud is void, meaning that the party defrauded may, at his election, treat it as void. Ewell v. Daggs, 108 U. S. 143, 149, 27 L. Ed. 682.

77. The true rule as to the interference of a court of equity in relation to contracts, in which fraud is alleged, was laid down in Conard v. Nicoll, 4 Pet. 291, 297, 7 L. Ed. 862: "If the person against whom fraud is alleged, should be proved to have been guilty of it in any number of instances; still, if the particular act sought to be avoided, be not shown to be tainted with fraud, it cannot be affected by those other frauds, unless in some way or other it be connected with, or form a part of them." Fraud in the procurement of state bonds in aid of a railroad company, although a wrong to the state, can have no connection in law with a mortgage executed by the company to secure its guaranty of said bonds. A sale under such mortgage is not affected thereby. McKittrick v. Arkansas Cent. R. Co., 152

Partial Invalidity.—As respects fraud in law as contradistinguished from fraud in fact, where that which is valid can be separated from that which is invalid, without defeating the general intent, the maxim, "void in part, void in toto," does not necessarily apply, and the instrument may be sustained notwithstanding the invalidity of a particular provision.[80]

Effect of fraud on joint adventure—Title to property purchased.—A contract for the purchase of lands was made between S. and B. by which S. was to contribute to the venture his equitable title in the greater part of the lands to be purchased, as well as his own services; B. was to contribute all the money required to carry out the enterprise; the legal title was to be taken in S.'s name, and conveyed by him to B; S. was to attend to preparing the lands for sale, and to sell them, subject to B.'s approval; S. was to receive a commission of five per cent. on the gross amount of sales; out of the rest of the proceeds, B. was to be repaid his advances; and after B. had been reimbursed, the property was to belong, three-fifths to B. and two-fifths to S., and to be divided between them accordingly, either in lands or in money. It was held that, taking into consideration the whole scope of the contract, and the fact that, before it was made, S. had an equitable interest in the greater part of the lands, which was in fact, and was evidently considered by both parties to be, of greater value than the price which he had agreed to pay for them; that the title to all the lands was to be taken in S.'s name in the first instance, and to be conveyed by him to B.; and especially the express stipulation, after B. should have been fully reimbursed for his advances, out of the proceeds of sales, for the division of the remainder, the conclusion appears to be inevitable, that the conveyance of the legal title to B., like the deposit of proceeds of sales to B.'s credit, was intended as security only for B.'s advances; that S. was to have and retain an equitable title in two-fifths of the land, subject to the claim of B. for reimbursement; and that S.'s fraudulent misconduct, while it might properly defeat any claim of his for commissions, did not divest him of his equitable title in the lands, as recognized and stipulated for in the contract. Shaeffer v. Blair, 149 U. S. 248, 257, 37 L. Ed. 721.

Effect on rights under contract.—This contract contains no expression to indicate an intention of the parties to become partners, and it seems that there was no partnership created between B. & S. Whether a party to a contract was acting as a partner, or only as an agent, in performing the duties required of him by the contract, fraudulent misconduct proved against him deprived him of the right to the stipulated commissions. Shaeffer v. Blair, 149 U. S. 248, 258, 37 L. Ed. 721, citing Denver v. Roane, 99 U. S. 355, 25 L. Ed. 476; Wadsworth v. Adams, 138 U. S. 380, 34 L. Ed. 984. See the titles PARTNERSHIP; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Effect on fraudulent contraction of debt and subsequent assignment.—Even if it were established beyond doubt that an assigning debtor, with deliberate purpose to defraud an attaching creditor contesting the validity of the assignment on that account, contracted the debt in question, this would not determine the scope or effect of his assignment under a statute avoiding general assignments by insolvents with preferences as showing a formed intent to make the assignment at that time. It were as reasonable to suppose that, having made the personal gain he designed, his interest ceased, and that he never contemplated an assignment until the very moment of its execution. Indeed, if he were guilty of fraud, in the first instance, it would imply a state of mind indifferent to all results after the primary purpose of his own profit had been secured. Here the question was whether the preference of this debt on the day before the assignment was a part thereof so as to vitiate it under this statute, the assignment being on its face general and without preferences. South Branch Lumber Co. v. Ott, 142 U. S. 622, 631, 35 L. Ed. 1136. See the title ASSIGNMENTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF CREDITORS, vol. 2, p. 617, et seq.

There are cases where grants and securities made contrary to the prohibitions of a statute, in part, are, upon the true construction of the intent of the statute, void in toto; but it is very different, in cases standing merely on the common law; and, therefore, at the common law, in order to make a grant void in toto for fraud or covin, the fraud or covin must infect the whole transaction, or be so mixed up in it, as not to be capable of a distinct and separate consideration. A grant may be good for part of the land granted, and bad as to other parts of the same. Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 9 L. Ed. 266.

his own fraud or turpitude,[81] but such conduct must be immediately connected with the matter at issue,[82] or to allege his own turpitude as a ground of recovery in a suit,[83] whether he be plaintiff or defendant.[84] Thus, a person cannot avail himself of a lien, the discharge of which has been fraudulently prevented by his own acts.[85]

"Parties engaged in a fraudulent attempt to obtain a neighbor's property are not the objects of the special solicitude of the courts. If they are caught in their own toils, and are themselves the sufferers, it is a legitimate consequence of their violation of the rules of law and morality. Those who violate these laws must suffer the penalty." Neblett v. Macfarland, 92 U. S. 101, 105, 23 L. Ed. 471.

Even if actual fraud does not appear, but it is evident the complainant did not come in with an unaffected conscience, in that case, he cannot call upon the active power of the court for relief; in the phrase of early times, the complainant must come into equity with clean hands. 83. Same.—Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. 507, 518, 9 L. Ed. 512.

An arrangement between K. and R., joint owners of lands, by which the latter surrendered his claim to the lands, accepted bonds in payment of the debt due him, and assumed a trust of other bonds, even if it was such as the plaintiff alleges, was fraudulently obtained by K. It was held that it was impossible to separate the receipt which R. gave for the bonds from the arrangement by which he gave up his title to the moiety of the lands, and the engagement of K. to secure to him $10,000, the understood value of his half of the lands. They are all parts of one transaction. The assent of R. to a rescission of the contract by which he had become the equitable owner of that moiety, the acceptance of some of the bonds as security for payment of the consideration for the surrender, and the undertaking to invest the remaining bonds in the purchase of land from the trustees of the railroad company, were all induced by the representations of K. and they were obtained at the same time. Kitchen v. Rayburn, 19 Wall. 254, 260, 22 L. Ed. 64.

The complainants, then, do not come into court with clean hands. They are seeking the benefit of a contract obtained by their fraud, or by the fraud of K. Hence they can have no standing in a court of equity. Such a court will not lend its power to assist or protect a fraud. It will not even enforce an unconscionable bargain. In Bein v. Heath, 6 How. 228, 247, 12 L. Ed. 416, it was said to be a principle in chancery "that he who asks relief must have acted in good faith. The equitable powers of this court can never be exerted in behalf of one who has acted fraudulently, or who by deceit or any unfair means has gained an advantage. To aid a party in such a case would make this court the abettor of iniquity." For this reason, if for no other, the plaintiffs cannot succeed. They are seeking in a court of equity to derive an advantage from their own wrong. Kitchen v. Rayburn, 19 Wall. 254, 263, 22 L. Ed. 64. See, also, ante, "Extent of Invalidity," V, A, 2.

"Parties to suits at law may assert their rights to the fullest extent; but neither a plaintiff nor a defendant is at liberty to deceive, either actively or passively, his adversary, and a court whose province it is to administer justice will take care that on the trial of every cause neither party shall reap any advantage from his own fraud." Shutte v. Thompson, 15 Wall. 151, 159, 21 L. Ed. 123.

One who covenants to sell lands which he expects to purchase at the public sales of the United States cannot afterwards plead his own fraud in obtaining his title from the government in bar of decree for specific performance of his agreement. 4. In Pari Delicto Rule.—Although the mere fact that the parties were attempting a transaction forbidden by law, does not always bar relief,[86] and when a right is claimed to repudiate a contract induced by fraudulent representations, the party who denies the right is the one who relies upon the contract, and that party must take it as it was made,[87] a court administering justice upon principles of equity will not lend its aid to enforce the fulfillment of a contract in favor of a party to it, which is founded in fraud. In such cases, the court leaves both parties where the law finds them, giving no relief or countenance to claims of this description.[88] Where men have been partners in fraud neither can claim a preference over the other on account of honesty of purpose or fairness in dealing.[89]

86. In pari delicto rule—Preliminary fraud.—Where the question is, assuming that the parties were attempting a transaction forbidden by the law, whether the nature of the attempt prevents one of them from withdrawing from the bargain on the ground of preliminary fraud, if the withdrawal were on the ground of repentance alone, the law might, or might not, leave the parties where it found them. See Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 60, 61, 35 L. Ed. 55; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co., 171 U. S. 138, 150, 43 L. Ed. 108. But a person does not become an outlaw and lose all rights by doing an illegal act. See Connolly v. Union, Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. Ed. 679. The right not to be led by fraud to change one's situation is anterior to and independent of the contract. The fraud is a tort. Its usual consequence is that as between the parties the one who is defrauded has a right, if possible, to be restored to his former position. That right is not taken away because the consequence of its exercise will be the undoing of a forbidden deed. That is a consequence to which the law can have no objection, and the fraudulent party, who otherwise might have been allowed to disclaim any different obligation from that with which the other had been content, has lost his right to object because he has brought about the other's consent by wrong. National Bank, etc., Co. v. Petrie, 189 U. S. 423, 424, 47 L. Ed. 879. See, Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co., 171 U. S. 138, 151, 43 L. Ed. 108.

87. Party repudiating does not come within rule.—National Bank, etc., Co. v. Petrie, 189 U. S. 423, 426, 47 L. Ed. 879.

88. Parties in pari delicto not entitled to relief.—Carrington v. Pratt, 18 How. 63, 66, 15 L. Ed. 267; 2 Story's Equity, § 298; Wheeler v. Sage, 1 Wall. 518, 530, 17 L. Ed. 646.

Whosoever would seek admission into a court of equity must come with clean hands, and such a court will never interfere in opposition to conscience or good faith, or be called into activity to remedy the consequences of laches or neglect, or the want of reasonable diligence. Therefore, where a complainant prays to be relieved from the fulfillment of a contract, which was intentionally made in fraud of the law, the answer is, that however unworthy may have been the conduct of his opponent, the parties are in pari delicto. The complainant cannot be admitted to plead his own demerits. Creath v. Sims, 5 How. 192, 12 L. Ed. 111.

One fraud-doer cannot obtain relief in equity against his particeps criminis. Railroad Co. v. Soutter, 13 Wall. 517, 525, 20 L. Ed. 543.

Fraud upon third parties.—Thus neither party can enforce against the other a contract made between themselves to injure a third person, in fraud of the law. Randall v. Howard, 2 Black 585, 17 L. Ed. 269; Selz v. Unna, 6 Wall. 327, 336, 18 L. Ed. 799.

Nor will the character of such agreement be changed by showing that the claim of the third party, whose rights were to be affected by it, was also fraudulent. Randall v. Howard, 2 Black 585, 17 L. Ed. 269.

Where the objectionable items are fictitious, and inserted in the bond with the intent to defraud third persons, the entire security in such cases becomes tainted with the fraud, and a particeps criminis is not allowed to come into court to enforce it, even for the money advanced or expended; for to permit it would afford countenance to the fraud by giving partial effect to it. The rule of equity—and which is the rule of admiralty in such cases—refuses to interfere for relief, and leaves the parties where the law finds them. Carrington v. Pratt, 18 How. 63, 67, 15 L. Ed. 267.

The case is different where improper items were embraced in the bond from inadvertence or mistake, consistently with good faith in the parties to the transaction. In such case it may stand good for the amount actually advanced. Carrington v. Pratt, 18 How. 63, 67, 15 L. Ed. 267.

89. Honesty of purpose between wrongdoers immaterial.—Crosby v. Buchanan, 23 Wall. 420, 458, 23 L. Ed. 138.

"Generally, when a party obtains an advantage by fraud, he is to be regarded as the trustee of the party defrauded, and compelled to account. But if a party seeks relief in equity, he must be able to show that on his part there has been

B. Fraud as Giving Rise to Trust.—Where the legal title to property belonging in equity to another has been obtained by fraudulent and wrongful conduct, such guilty party will be held a trustee thereof in equity for the party defrauded and as to those having legal claims against him.[90]

C. Bona Fide Purchasers' Rights—1. IN GENERAL.—Fraud, of course, gives rise only to a personal claim. It goes to the motives, not to the formal constituents of a legal transfer, and the rule is familiar that it can affect a title only when the owner takes with notice or without having given value.[91] It is, indeed, an elementary doctrine of equity that where a grantor has been induced by fraud to part with the legal title to his property, he cannot reclaim it from subsequent innocent purchasers for value.[92]

2. INQUIRY INTO VALIDITY OF CLAIM.—One who enters into an ordinary and reasonable contract for the purchase of property from another is not bound to presume that the vendor is a wrongdoer, and that, therefore, he must make a searching inquiry as to the validity of his claim to the property.[93]

The bona fide transferee for value of property takes a good title, although the legal title thereto was obtained by the transferrer through fraud. This is true of money as well as other property, as where an insurance company has been compelled to pay a fraudulent claim by a successful suit, and afterwards discovers conclusive evidence of the fraud. Attorneys for the fraudulent claimant, who have received contingent fees out of the sum paid, cannot be compelled to refund. Fidelity Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Clark, 203 U. S. 64, 73, 51 L. Ed. 91.

If a suit brought to set aside a conveyance obtained by fraud, and the fraud be clearly proved, the conveyance will be set aside, as between the parties; but the rights of third persons, who are purchasers without notice, for a valuable consideration, cannot be disregarded. If the equitable owner of a thing has permitted another to hold the legal title accompanied with the usual documentary evidence of it, with full possession and with declarations of ownership corresponding to the legal title, he cannot set up his equity against a bona fide purchaser, who had no notice of it, the agent having fraudulently sold it as his own property. The rule of law in respect to purchases of land or timber is the same as that which obtains in other commercial transactions, and a contrary rule would shake the foundations of commercial business. No one is bound to assume that the party with whom he deals is a wrongdoer, and if he presents property, the title to which is apparently valid, and there are no circumstances disclosed which cast suspicion upon the title, he may rightfully deal with him, and, paying full value for the same, acquire the rights of a purchaser in good faith. Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 615, 29 L. Ed. 742. He is not bound to make a searching examination of all the account books of the vendor

3. Effect of Notice.—The portion of an unperformed contract which is completed after notice of a fraud is not within the principle which protects a bona fide purchaser.[94] But a purchaser with notice may protect himself by obtaining the title of a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, unless he be the original party to the fraud.[95]

Burden of Proof.—The burden of proof rests upon the equitable owner of property fraudulently sold by the apparent owner, his agent, to show that the purchaser had notice of his rights in due time.[96]

4. Necessity for Legal Title and Payment of Purchase Money.—No person can claim to occupy the position of a bona fide purchaser, without notice, unless he has acquired the legal title, and paid the purchase money in full.[97]

D. The bona fide purchase purges away the equity from the title in the hands of all persons who may obtain a derivative title, except it be that of the original party, whose conscience stands bound by the violation of the trust, and a meditated fraud. 1 Story, Eq. A bona fide purchaser, without notice, is not affected by the fraud of his grantor; and it is admitted, that a conveyance by such purchaser, to a person who may have knowledge of the fraud, would be valid. But a purchase and conveyance cannot be considered as coming within this rule, where in the first place, purchaser did not purchase with the intention of holding the property, as was declared publicly at the sale; and some time before it took place, the same determination was made known by him to the administrator; and, in the second place, it appears the purchase was never perfected. Examples.—In a case where the relation between the party committing the fraud and A was that of executor and legatee, and that between such party and B, that of attorney and client, but as between themselves, A and B were absolute strangers, A received from the party guilty of fraud, in payment of a legacy, the identical money which the latter had received from B for a special purpose, but A had no notice of such fact until after the amount of the legacy had been applied to the purposes for which it was intended, A being a charitable organization. It was held, there being no evidence of negligence on the part of A in demanding and enforcing payment of the legacy, or any suspicion of the insolvency or fraud of the executor, and upon a general consideration of the facts, that, as against A, B has no equities; and even if it could be said that the equities were equal, a court of equity will not transfer a loss that has already fallen upon one innocent party to another equally innocent. A. Jurisdiction—1. In Equity—a. Fraud a General Ground of Relief.—Fraud is one of the general grounds for relief in a court of equity.[7] Courts of he will be estopped to make such defense. A subsequent promise, with full knowledge of the facts, is certainly equivalent to an original promise made under similar circumstances; and no one, acting with full knowledge, can justly say that he has been deceived by false representations. Volenti non fit injuria. Fitzpatrick v. Flannagan, 106 U. S. 648, 660, 27 L. Ed. 211.

Where fraud is charged in the procurement of the execution of a power by the donee thereof, the positive co-operation of the donee in the arrangements for the sale of the property, and her acquiescence in that sale until after the title had been made to the purchaser, furnish such presumption of the absence of fraud in the transactions complained of, which, if it is not absolutely conclusive, certainly calls for contravening evidence of a direct and powerful character—evidence of force sufficient to overthrow and set aside the complainant's own acts and declarations. Ladd v. Ladd, 8 How. 10, 28, 12 L. Ed. 967.

5. Questions of fact—Promptitude required.—Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, 581, 25 L. Ed. 420.

"Acquiescence and waiver are always questions of fact. There can be neither without knowledge. The terms import this foundation for such action. One cannot waive or acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed. Current suspicion and rumor are not enough. There must be knowledge of facts which will enable the party to take effectual action. Nothing short of this will do. But he may not willfully shut his eyes to what he might readily and ought to have known. When fully advised, he must decide and act with reasonable dispatch. He cannot rest until the rights of third persons are involved and the situation of the wrongdoer is materially changed. Under such circumstances he loses the right to rescind, and must seek compensation in damages. But the wrongdoer cannot make extreme vigilance and promptitude conditions of rescission. It does not lie in his mouth to complain of delay unaccompanied by acts of ownership, and by which he has not been affected. The election to rescind or not to rescind, once made, is final and conclusive." Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, 581, 25 L. Ed. 420.

Where upwards of six years elapsed after the sale alleged to have been fraudulent, and before the suit was brought; and the vendees, who do not pretend to have been ignorant of the alleged fraud during any considerable part of that period of time, did not offer to rescind the contract, nor did they, at any time, either return or offer to return the property sold, the fraud is waived. Hendrickson v. Hinckley, 17 How. 443, 445, 15 L. Ed. 124.

Assuming a representation to be a fraud which would avoid the contract, on the question whether the defendant discharged his duty in discovering that fraud, and repudiating the contract on account of that fraud, and not on account of another fraud not now in question, the plaintiff was entitled to the opinion of the jury, and on that precise question. A charge which refused him this right was erroneous. Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 53, 23 L. Ed. 203.

equity grant relief, in cases of fraud and mistake, which cannot be obtained in courts of law. In such cases, a court of equity may carry the intention of the parties into execution, where the written agreement fails to express that intention,[8] whether the fraud be constructive, or direct and positive.[9] But a mere charge of fraud will not sustain the jurisdiction. It must be proved.[10]

b. Remedy at Law Must Be Inadequate.—And where a party has been deprived of his rights by fraud, and has no remedy at law, a court of equity will grant relief, but the remedy at law must be wanting or inadequate.[11]

Continuing Wrong.—Where an agreement against which a complainant in equity asks to have relief, is perpetuate in its nature, and the keeping of it on foot is a fraud against the party complaining, so that the only effectual relief against it is to have it annulled, the case is one for equity, not for law.[12]

Fiduciary Relationship Requiring Accounting and Discovery.—Equity has jurisdiction of a bill seeking relief on the ground of fraud, where the parties stood in a fiduciary relation towards each other, and the transactions, as to some of which fraud was charged, were all parts of one general enterprise, and

Ed. 271; Insurance Co. v. Bailey, 13 Wall. 616, 20 L. Ed. 501, where it was held that equity would not take jurisdiction of a bill for the cancellation of an insurance policy for fraud, because the fraud could be perfectly well availed of as a defense to a suit on the policy.

Where the relief obtainable in equity upon the ground of fraud is simply what plaintiffs could recover, if they could recover at all, in an action at law, there is no reason why a court of equity should be resorted to for this remedy; nor is there anything in the nature of the transaction, since no actual fraud on the part of defendants is proved, why an action at law should not have been the appropriate one to recover these damages. The case is by no means a complex or difficult one. The facts are few and easily proved. The transactions are open and patent to everybody, and an action at law would afford complete and ample remedy for the wrong complained of. Lacombe v. Forstall's Sons, 123 U. S. 562, 570, 31 L. Ed. 255.

A suit in equity to enforce a legal right can be brought where an agreement procured by fraud is of a continuing nature and its rescission will prevent a multiplicity of suits, as in Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 210, 215, 7 L. 13. Fiduciary relationship requiring accounting and discovery.—Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 515, 32 L. Ed. 1005.

"The remedy at law in the case in hand was rendered embarrassed and doubtful by the conduct of the defendants, and fraud has in equity a more extensive signification than at law, and, as charged here, involved the consideration of the principles applicable to fiduciary and trust relations between the parties throughout the period of their connection." Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 515, 32 L. Ed. 1005.

It was held in Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 79, 94, 36 L. Ed. 82, that the bill set out a case of fraud practised upon the plaintiff by defendant T. in that, in order to induce her to purchase the $10,000 of stock, he, as president of the company, sent to her a letter of April 10, 1884, upon the statements in which she relied and had a right to rely, it being alleged in the bill that the letter, both by its statements and its omissions, was false and deceitful, and operated as a fraud upon the plaintiff, and that $10,000 having been obtained from her unlawfully, by the misrepresentations of the affairs of the company by T., its president and duly-authorized agent, and having gone into its treasury and been expended by it, that sum was justly due her by T. and the company, with interest, and she had a right to require all the proper assets of the company to be gotten in and applied to the debts due to her and others; that the company was insolvent, and that a receiver ought to be appointed for it; and the bill also required from the defendants answers to the interrogatories which it contained. The information obtained from the answers to the interrogatories and from the proofs in the books showed the insolvent condition of the company on June 1, 1884, and that, as the master reported, it was at that date bankrupt. T. must be held to have had knowledge at that time of the condition of the company, as he was its president, and commenced keeping its books about March, 1883; and he is chargeable with knowledge of the facts, reported by the master, that of the $10,000 paid by the plaintiff he received personally the benefit of $6,200. The recovery by the plaintiff thus depended largely on the information in the possession of the company and of T., and which was sought for by the bill; and an application of the assets of the company, to replace such of the money paid by the plaintiff as had been used by it, was necessary before Tyler could be made responsible individually for what the assets of the company would not pay. Thus there were in the case, as ingredients to support the jurisdiction of equity, discovery, account, fraud, misrepresentation and concealment. Story Eq. Jur., §§ 64k, 67, 184, 191. Jones v. Bolles, 9 Wall. 364, 369, 19 L. Ed. 734.

As to the decree being outside the case made in the bill, the allegations of the bill as to the fraud are adequate, and the statement of the decree that the company was represented to the plaintiff by T., its president, to be in a flourishing condition, when in fact it was insolvent, is a sufficient support of the allegations of fraud made in the bill. Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 79, 97, 36 L. Ed. 82.

"In Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 500, 27 L. Ed. 238, it was held that there was a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law for the relief granted by the decree. In the present case, discovery was prayed for and made, the affairs of an insolvent corporation were settled up, the subscription to stock made by the plaintiff was substantially canceled, part of the proceeds of the assets of the company were applied to the repayment of the $10,000 and a decree for the balance was made against Tyler, the agent of the company, who had committed the fraud." Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S 79, 96, 36 L. Ed. 82.

Relief against conveyance of dower interest obtained by fraud.—Where, upon the facts alleged in the amended bill, and admitted by the demurrer, the defendant J. had obtained a conveyance of the plaintiff's dower interest by fraud, and held that interest in trust for her, and the defendant D., taking the property with full notice, was equally affected by the fraud and bound by the trust, but parts of the property, having been conveyed to bona fide purchasers, were beyond the reach of the plaintiff, full, adequate and complete relief, either by awarding to the plaintiff her dower in the whole out of the part not so conveyed, or by awarding her dower in that part only, with damages for having been fraudulently deprived of her interest in the rest, could not be had in an action at law. The case made in the bill, therefore, by reason of the fraud, the trust, and the peculiar relief which the conduct of the defendants has made necessary to be given in order fully to indemnify the plaintiff, is clearly within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Jones v. Van Doren, 130 U. S. 684, 691, 32 L. Ed. 1077, citing Herbert v. Wren, 7 Cranch 370, 3 L. Ed. 374.

Although the prayer of the bill, being apparently drawn upon the supposition that the plaintiff might be held bound by parties and privies to the deed; and, more especially, where there has been a part execution of the contract, and equity takes jurisdiction.[14]

To Prevent Inequitable Defense from Being Set Up at Law.—Where, in the bill, there is an averment of fraud, and, at the close, a general prayer for any suitable relief, it seems plausible that the court might, if satisfied of the existence of fraud, estop the party guilty of it from profiting through his own wrong, by preventing him from setting up, as a defense, the want of an acknowledgment in writing, when such want was the result or the instrument of his own misbehavior.[15]

Recovery of Damages.—Unless under peculiar circumstances, it seems that damages cannot be given in a court of equity, but the parties must be left to a court of law to recover them.[16] the mortgage by vendee, is chiefly directed towards securing a right to redeem, and, in that aspect of the case, she properly offered to redeem the whole property, by paying off the whole mortgage, because she could not, unless at the election of the mortgagee, redeem by paying less, Collins v. Riggs, 14 Wall. 491, 20 L. Ed. 723; McCabe v. Bellows, 7 Gray 148, yet the general object of the bill is to secure to the plaintiff the dower interest of which she has been defrauded, and the bill contains a prayer for general relief. This is sufficient to enable a court of equity to decree such relief as the facts stated in the bill justify. Jones v. Van Doren, 130 U. S. 684, 692, 32 L. Ed. 1077, citing English v. Foxall, 2 Pet. 595, 7 L. Ed. 531; Taylor v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co., 9 How. 390, 13 L. Ed. 187; Texas v. Hardenberg, 10 Wall. 68, 19 L. Ed. 839.

Dismissed if discovery only incidental to relief sought.—And, if a bill in equity, showing ground for legal and not for equitable relief, prays for a discovery as incidental only to the relief sought, and the answer discloses nothing, but the plaintiff supports the claim by independent evidence, the bill ought to be dismissed, without prejudice to an action at law. Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 79, 96, 36 L. Ed. 82; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 30 L. Ed. 451. And see, generally, the title DISCOVERY, vol. 5, p. 350.

14. Sealed instruments.—Hartshorn v. Day, 19 How. 211, 222, 15 L. Ed. 605. The difficulties are in adjusting the rights and equities of the parties in a court of law; and hence, in the states where the two systems of jurisprudence prevail, by equity and the common law, a court of law refuses to open the question of fraud in the consideration, or in the transaction out of which the consideration arises, in a suit upon the sealed instrument, but turns the party over to a court of equity, where the instrument can be set aside upon such terms as, under all the circumstances, may be equitable and just between the parties. A court of law can hold no middle course; the question is limited to the validity or invalidity of the deed.

In a court of law, between parties or privies, evidence of fraud is admissible only where it goes to the question whether or not the instrument ever had any legal existence. But it was especially proper to exclude it in this case, where the agreement had been partly executed, and rights of long standing had grown up under it. Hartshorn v. Day, 19 How. 211, 15 L. Ed. 605.

And courts of equity will not only interfere in cases of fraud to set aside acts done, but will also, if acts have by fraud been prevented from being done by the parties, interfere and treat the case exactly as if the acts had been done. Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122, 128, 32 L. Ed. 878; Carpenter v. Providence, etc., Ins. Co., 4 How. 185, 223, 11 L. Ed. 931.

16. Recovery of damages.—Veazie v. Williams, 8 How. 134, 160, 12 L. Ed. 1018. See post, "Action of Deceit," VI, B, 2.

"In cases of fraud or mistake, as under any other head of chancery jurisdiction, a court of the United States will not sustain a bill in equity to obtain only a decree for the payment of money by way of damages, when the like amount can be recovered at law in an action sounding in tort or for money had and received." Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 352, 30 L. Ed. 451; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 500, 27 L. Ed. 238; Ambler v. Choteau, 107 U. S. 586, 27 L. Ed. 322; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 29 L. Ed. 132; Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 79, 96, 36 L. Ed. 82.

"In England, indeed, the court of chancery, in cases of fraud, has sometimes maintained bills in equity to recover the same damages which might be recovered in an action for money had and received. But the reason for this, as clearly brought out by Lords Justices Knight Bruce and Turner in Silm v. Croucher, 1 D., F. & J. 518, 527, 528, was that such cases were within the ancient and original juris-

Partition Proceedings.—The question of fraud is not appropriate to a proceeding in partition; if raised, the proceedings are usually suspended, and the question sent to a court of law.[17]

Will Obtained by Fraud.—In cases of fraud equity has a concurrent jurisdiction with a court of law, but in regard to a will charged to have been obtained through fraud, this rule does not hold.[18]

2. At Law.—That fraud is cognizable in a court of law, as well as in a court of equity, is a well-established principle; it has often been so ruled in the supreme court.[19] Fraud in the execution of the instrument has always been admitted in a court of law, as where it has been misread, or some other fraud or imposition has been practiced upon the party in procuring his signature and seal. The fraud in this aspect goes to the question whether or not the instrument ever had any legal existence.[20] diction in chancery, before any court of law had acquired jurisdiction of them, and that the assumption of jurisdiction by the courts of law, by gradually extending their powers, did not displace the earlier jurisdiction of the court of chancery. Upon any other ground, such bills could not be maintained." Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 352, 30 L. Ed. 451.

Where A and B had made a valid agreement for the sale of cattle by A to B, and B filed a bill in equity against A, alleging that A, by false and fraudulent representations, had induced B to release A from his agreement and take in lieu thereof an assignment of a similar agreement between C and A, and repay A what he claimed to have paid C under said agreement, and praying a rescission of the substituted contract and a reinstatement and confirmation of the former agreement and repayment of the moneys paid by B to A by reason of the false representations; it was held, on demurrer and appeal from decree of dismissal, that the bill stated a case for an action of deceit at law, which would afford full, adequate and complete remedy, and that the bill in equity would not lie. Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 30 L. Ed. 451.

In an action of deceit the plaintiffs might treat the assignment of the contract with C. as void, and, upon delivering up that contract to the defendant, recover full damages for the nonperformance of the original agreement. No relief is sought against C., and he is not made a party to the bill. The obligation executed by the plaintiffs to the defendant is not negotiable, so that there is no need of an injunction. A judgment for pecuniary damages would adjust and determine all the rights of the parties, and is the only redress to which the plaintiffs, if they prove their allegations, are entitled. There is therefore no ground upon which the bill can be maintained. Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 353, 30 L. Ed. 451. See the title RESCISSION, CANCELLATION AND REFORMATION.

"The mere breach of a verbal promise for the purchase of lands will not justify the interference of a court of equity. Purcell v. Miner, 4 Wall. 513, 18 L. Ed. 435. There is no fraud in such a refusal. The party who so refuses stands upon the law and has a right to refuse. Under the circumstances of this case the statute is as binding on a court of equity as on a court of law. If the mere refusal of a party to perform a parol contract for the sale of lands could be construed to be such a fraud as would give a court of equity jurisdiction to enforce it, the statute of frauds would be rendered vain and nugatory." Dunphy v. Ryan, 116 U. S. 491, 498, 29 L. Ed. 703. See the title FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

Fraudulent conspiracy.—"As regards a claim to recover $20,000 damages) for a fraudulent conspiracy) we see no reason for going into equity. If such a recovery can be had at all it can be had as well at law. It is a proper case for a jury to determine whether there has been a combination to cheat and defraud plaintiff, and the amount he should recover for such fraud." Nougue v. Clapp, 101 U. S. 551, 553, 29 L. Ed. 1026; Ambler v. Choteau, 107 U. S. 586, 591, 27 L. Ed. 322; Francis v. Flinn, 118 U. S. 385, 30 L. Ed. 165. See the title CONSPIRACY, vol. 3, p. 1109.

18. Fraudulent will.—Case of Broaderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, 513, 22 L. Ed. 599. See the title WILLS.

19. Jurisdiction at law.—Swayze v. Burke, 12 Pet. 11, 9 L. Ed. 980; Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436, 455, 10 L. Ed. 235; Gregg v. Sayre, 8 Pet. 244, 8 L. Ed. 932.

It is an admitted principle, that a court of law has concurrent jurisdiction with a court of chancery, in cases of fraud; but when matters alleged to be fraudulent are investigated in a court of law, it is the province of a jury to find the facts, and determine their character. Gregg v. Sayre, 8 Pet. 244, 8 L. Ed. 932.

20. Same.—Hartshorn v. Day, 19 How. 211, 222, 15 L. Ed. 605. "It is said that fraud vitiates all contracts, and even records, which is doubtless true in a general sense. But it must be reached in some regular and authoritative mode; and this may depend upon the forum in which

B. Right of Action and Relief Afforded—1. ELECTION OF REMEDIES.—When a party discovers that he has been deceived in a transaction he may resort to an action at law to recover damages, or he may have the transaction set aside in which he has been wronged, by the rescission of the contract. If he choose the latter remedy, he must act promptly, "announce his purpose and adhere to it," and not by acts of ownership continue to assert right and title over the property as though it belonged to him.[21] Taking any steps to enforce the contract was a conclusive election not to rescind it on account of any thing known at the time. After that the option no longer existed, and is of no consequence whether or not the plaintiffs made their choice effective.[22] But the election must be made with full knowledge of the facts, to be binding, where innocent parties have acquired no rights.[23]

it is presented, and also upon the parties to the litigation. A record of judgment may be avoided for fraud, but not between the parties or privies in a court of law." See, also, ante, "Remedy at Law Must Be Inadequate," VI, A, 1, b.

As to admissibility of evidence, see post, "Competency," VI, G, 2.

It is entirely true that, upon being satisfied that the goods had been purchased upon fraudulent representations, the vendors had an election of remedies. They might rescind the sale and replevy the goods, or they might affirm the sale, sue for the purchase price, and attach the goods upon the ground that they had been fraudulently purchased. Browning v. De Ford, 178 U. S. 196, 201, 44 L. Ed. 1033.

"But such election went no farther than to affirm the sale, under which they were at liberty to attach the goods as still belonging to the vendees. They were bound no farther by the fraudulent mortgage of such goods than they would have been by the fraudulent assignment of them, and no class of cases is more common than that of attachments sued out for goods which are claimed to have been fraudulently assigned." Browning v. De Ford, 178 U. S. 196, 202, 44 L. Ed. 1033. See the title CHATTEL MORTGAGES, vol. 3, p. 699.

Where one of the parties to an exchange of stock for land, i. e., the owner of the land, brings an action at law against the other to recover of him damages for his fraudulent misrepresentation of the value of this stock at the time of the trade, this was in effect an action for a part of the purchase price of the real estate which they had conveyed, although it was in form an action for deceit. It could be brought and maintained on the ground that the sale or trade of the real estate was valid and its title was vested in the other and on no other theory, and it was a distinct and affirmative ratification of the transfer of this stock and the conveyance of the real estate, after full knowledge of all the facts, and it barred plaintiff of all right to rescind the trade thereafter. Stuart v. Hayden, 169 U. S. 1, 15, 42 L. Ed. 639.

22. Steps toward enforcement—Action on same.—Robb v. Vos, 155 U. S. 13, 42, 39 L. Ed. 52.

The rule established by the cases is that any decisive act by a party, with knowledge of his rights and of the facts, determines his election in the case of inconsistent remedies, and that one of the most unequivocal methods of showing ratification of an agent's act is the bringing of an action based upon such an act. It is final when made with full knowledge. Robb v. Vos, 155 U. S. 13, 43, 39 L. Ed. 52; Adler v. Fenton, 24 How. 407, 411, 16 L. Ed. 696.

23. Dickson v. Patterson, 160 U. S. 584, 588, 40 L. Ed. 543; Robb v. Vos, 155 U. S. 13, 43, 39 L. Ed. 52.

While the plaintiff might, after acquiring knowledge of the fraud, elect to retain what he had received from the sale of the land in question, and to pursue his claim for moneys claimed to be still due, the fraud alleged having come to his knowledge, he was bound promptly to make his election, and having elected to let the sale stand, he could not thereafter maintain an action to set it aside, yet, if, when the alleged election was made, as the evidence shows, the real facts were concealed from him by one from whom he had reason to expect a frank disclosure of all the material circumstances as they occurred, he is not, for that reason—no rights of innocent third parties having intervened—to be denied the fullest relief to which according to the principles of equity he is entitled. Dickson v. Patterson, 160 U. S. 584, 588, 592, 40 L. Ed. 543. See the title RESCISSION, CANCELLATION AND REFORMATION.

Affirmance and recovery in assumpsit.—Fenemore v. United States, 3 Dall. 357, 363, 1 L. Ed. 634. See the title ASSUMPSIT, vol. 2, p. 641, et seq.

2. Action of Deceit—a. Nature of Action.—An action of deceit is not an action for breach of contract.[24] In order to maintain an action for fraud it is sufficient to show that the defendant was guilty of deceit, with a design to deprive the plaintiff of some profit or advantage, and to acquire it for himself, whenever loss or damage has resulted from the deceit.[25]

b. Defenses.—An action for damages caused by fraudulent representations which induced a contract, affirms the contract and relies upon it, and therefore may be subject to the same defenses as an action brought directly upon the contract.[25a]

c. Damages.—See, generally, the title Damages, vol. 5, p. 157. Where a person is induced by false representations to buy an article at an agreed price, to be delivered on his future order, he can recover as damages, in an action for the injury caused by the deceit, the diminution caused thereby in the market price at the time of delivery.[26]

3. Rescission and Recovery of Property or Proceeds.—See the titles Rescission, Cancellation and Reformation; Vendor and Purchaser.

In General.—Where one has been defrauded of money or property, any appropriate action may be maintained by him to recover it back from the party so obtaining it.[27]
